The Best Bacon.

The best bacon is made from pigs which will not weigh more than 125 pounds when dressed. The rashers or stripes for the bacon are cut lengthwise of the pig and about half of the sides are used. The portion next the backbone is fatter and lacks in muscle and is not so xood on this account. When bacon is made from small pigs—those weighing less than 100 pounds—the whole of the sides are used. Red and black Berkshire hogs make the best bacon because they have the largest proportion of lean meat. Six pounds of salt and four ounces of saltpetre should be used for 100 pounds of meat. Five pounds of brown sugar may also be used, or two quarts of molasses. If the bacon is cured in a barrel, the salt, saltpetre and sweetening should be mixed and a portion sprinkled on the bottom of the barrel and some also between the layers of meat and on the top, and water enough, after the meat is packed closely, put on to cover it. In a month the meat will be ready to smoke. Too much smoke will color the meat and give it a rank taste. Another way to cure bacon is to rub the above mixture on the flesh side of the stripe of bacon and then pile it up one piece above another, and let the mixture strike in. After three days rub and pile up as before. A week after rub again and pile it up, putting the flesh side up every time. The mixture should be divided in three equal parts, to provide for the several rubbings. At the end of a month the meat will be ready for smoking, or before if the salt has all struck in and the surface has become comparatively dry, which is an indication. After smoking, the rashers should be sewed up in bags of cotton cloth and hung up in a dry, dark place. If the bags are whitewashed on the outside all the better, and this will keep the worms out.

THE IRON HORSE IN JAPAN.

Peculiarities of Railroading in the Land of the Rising Sun.

A trip from Yokohama to Tekio serves to elicit some interesting details of Japananese railroading, writes a correspondent from the latter city. Entering the spacious stone depot at Yokhama, the traveller finds separate waiting rooms for the various classes of patronage, with seats provided in the first and second-class apartments. Three or four hundred natives are crowding around the third-class ticket office, and it is wonderful in how short a time their wants are attended to. The windows open only a few minutes before train time, and, according to rule of the government, are closed from two to five minutes before the departure of the train, in order to secure punctuality.

Having purchsaed your ticket, you pass through the gate, where some one punches the ticket, and enter one of the cars. These cars are not wholly English, nor yet wholly American. In fact, there are all sorts of arrangements. Some are autotypes of the American street car, with tiny platforms at either end, and seats arranged parallel with the direction of the train. But the following general arrangement is the common one: The first class cars have the English compartment system, with seats upholstered in leather; the second-class have full length seats, with front and rear platforms, and the third-class have wooden seats, arranged according to the American plan, but are provided with side doors, sometimes as many as six to a car. The awkwardness of this mixture of styles is apparent when it is stated that all those doors have to be opened and closed successively upon the arrival or departure of a train from any depot, and that by one, or at most two, trainmen.

All the train officials are Japanese, and it is very seldom that you will find one that can speak even "pigeon English." They look quite attractive in their European uniform. When the railway was opened, all the positions in its gift were filled by foreignors., but to-day there are only half a dozen of these left, and it is doubtful whether they have come to stay or not. They occupy the most responsible positions, and it is quite impossible to get them to say anything about their business, owing to the superfluous restrictions imposed upon them by the government. Some of them are so "mum" that they will not answer the simplest question of fact. This illustrates the national secretiveness, which is still the policy of the country.

The ticket which you have purchased contains certain regulations printed upon it in six different languages, which is an illustration of the ceremoniousness cultivated by Japanese in every department of

It is true they did not have the great plains that exist in the western portion of Canada and the United States, where one person could keep several thousand sheep, and where the labor of securing hay was very light. But they had other and perhaps greater advantages, The production of wool and mutton were alike profitable. There was an excellent market for early lambs. There was, in the aggregate, a large amount of land that was unfit for ganeral tillage. Much of it was rough, stony or broken, and a considerable portion of it was partially covered with trees and bushes. It was as difficult to mow as to plough it. Still it produced a great variety of clovers and grasses, and portions of it would produce good crops of oats, rye, barley, Indian corn, and roots. Materials for building protections for sheep were cheap and abundant. Streams and springs of pure water were everywhere within easy reach of the flocks. There were [illegible] wild animals or dogs. The majority of farmers could keep a hundred sheep with little additional expense. What is true of these provinces is also true of many of our States where very few sheep are kept. The example of Vermont farmers in respect to keeping sheep, deserves to be followed by the farmers of the west and south who have large portions of land not suited to general tillage. They could largely increase their revenues without greatly increasing their labor, by keeping a flock of sheep.

Agriculture in Japan.

During recent years agriculture has made much progress in Japan, although the area of land under cultivation is still comparatively small. Four-fifths of the population is engaged in agricultural pursuits, and in few countries could such an extensive variety of products be raised. Rice still continues to be the staple product, and on it the people mainly subsist. A strange perversion of taste among the Japanese is that they eat all their fruits when green, ripe fruit being considered unfit for use. There are no fences in Japan, raised ridges of earth taking their place. The great need of the country now is stock, and it is probable that before long stock raising will receive more attention than it has in the past.

They occupy the most responsible positions, and it is quite impossible to get them to say anything about their business, owing to the superfluous restrictions imposed upon them by the government. Some of them are so "mum" that they will not answer the simplest question of fact. This illustrates the national secretiveness, which is still the policy of the country.

The ticket which you have purchased contains certain regulations printed upon it in six different languages, which is an illustration of the ceremoniousness cultivated by Japanese in every department of the national service, as well as in the commonest matters of every day life. The depot bell rings, the conductor blows his mouth whistle (which is, in the absence of the bell ropes, the invariable method of communicating with the engine driver), the engine answers with a shrill scream, and the long train rumbles slowly out of the depot. Perhaps the engine is painted of a uniform green of the most brilliant hue. The speed is slow all the way, but clockwork was never more accurate, and a train behind time is a thing unheard of. The road is double-tracked, and the train equipped with every modern convenience except steam brakes. The gage is 3 feet and 6 inches, which is the standard throughout Japan. This is a cross between the standard gauge of 4 feet 8 inches and the narrow gauge of 3 feet which prevails in America. In Australia, I am told, where a great many hundred miles of railroad are in successful operation, an anomalous gauge of 5 feet and 3 inches has been adopted.

The rails rest upon iron "chairs" one yard apart according to the English system, which adds about one-third to the cost of building a railroad, and which is not found anywhere in America, I believe. The roadbed is superbly ballasted, and I suppose a very high rate of speed would be practicable; but the Japanese are content to travel the 18 miles in 50 minutes, and there are no trains which could fairly be called fast in America, much less England.

A determined case of suicide by drowning recently occurred off the Semaphore, Australia. A passenger on the steamer "Tiverton," named James Byrns, said "good-bye" to some fellow-passengers, and jumped overboard near the bell buoy. A life-buoy was thrown to his assistance, but he made no effort to gain it. A boat was lowered and pulled to the spot where the man was last seen, but the body had disappeared. His luggage was overhauled, and as no money was found it is thought the rash act may have been committed owing to pecuniary difficulties.

The buyer retired behind a pile of lumber and kicked himself.

Miss Flood Jilts a Fortune-Hunting Lord.

Miss Jennie Flood, the California heiress, who is reported by a London paper to be engaged to a British peer, is in this city, and emphatically denies the report. It is understood, too that Miss Flood denies that she was jilted by young Grant, but claims the match was broken off by mutual consent. Miss Flood is an accomplished and amiable lady, highly esteemed by all who know her. She possesses in her own right $2,500,000 in Government bonds, presented to her on a recent birthday.

Another family tragedy has taken place in the Margarethen suburb of Vienna, a shoemaker having killed his son in a fit of passion. It appears that the father is an honest man, and generally respected in the neighborhood, while the son was most dissipated and universally disliked, owing to his brutality and roughness. Recently he returned home late at night and demanded money, which his father refused. He then became so violent that his father, in a moment of excitement, seized a stick and struck his son, injuring him so severely that he had to be transported to the hospital, where he died.

Important to Ruptured Persons.

The Excelsior Rupture treatment was introduced to the American people several years ago in such a manner as to completely secure the confidence of the whole nation. The mode of introduction was by furnishing the remedy to those afflicted with Hernia in any of its various forms and collecting no pay until a permanent cure was effected. In this way the treatment gained a world-wide reputation on its own merits, never failing to cure any reducible Hernia. The Company has at the solicitation of thousands placed the remedy on sale by all druggists, both wholesale and retail, in the United States, Canada and England. In this way bringing it within the reach of all classes at a trifling cost compared with the benefits which are derived from the use of the treatment. Ask your druggist for a free book on rupture, or send 6 cents for one to the Excelsior Rupture Cure M'f'g Co., Ogdensburg, N. Y.

Flax-Seed.

The evidence produced to establish the superior claims of FLAX-SEED EMULSION COMPOUND as a remedy for Nervous exhaustion and all its symptons is unquestionable. The large and increasing demand is almost entirely due to its own merits. We do not place it in competition with patent medicines or secret remedies, as we furnish the formula and can show that it consists of a superior combination of phosphorus, with the fat-producing properties of the Flax-Seed. During the past six months over FOUR THOUSAND BOTTLES have been dispensed in the city of Ogdensburg, N. Y., and county of St. Lawrence, where it is manufactured, and the universal verdict is that it is the best NERVE TONIC, BLOOD ENRICHER, and PURIFIER ever produced. We solicit investigation as to the reputation of the remedy where ever it has been used.

See advertisement in another column, and ask your Druggist for circulars containing remarkable cures.

"We never speak as we pass by!" We have exchanged cooks.

There is a kingdom of love for every man and woman who is willing to accept its laws. The secret of winning these crowns is an open one, and he who runs may read it. Direct your thoughts from yourself and fix them upon others, study their weaknesses, and wants, and minister to them.

There is something curious about it all. Last year the grain crop was short in Canada, and all over America, and the supposition was that in consequence the markets would become brisk and prices stiffen up. That has not been the case, however. Now we are informed on good authority that at Liverpool, New York, Chicago, and other great grain centres there is a glut of grain, so that even storage room is becoming difficult to obtain. Has there been an overproduction in agriculture as well as in manufactures? It looks like it.

Wendell Phillips was a strong advocate of woman's rights, and he has left tangible evidence behind him that he was a firm believer in the doctrines that he preached in this respect. He was worth nearly quarter of a million dollars and he willed the whole of it unconditionally to his wife. That is woman's rights for you in good earnest. If he had a sensible wife, as he no doubt was convinced that he had, he made a very desirable will. Advocates of woman's rights should reduce their theories right down to practical every day life all the way through. The world would sooner have a race of real practical business women if more trusts were usually committed to their care.

Complaints are pretty loud that a great many of the visitors to Montreal during Carnival week were pretty well fleeced. The hotels were full and the drivers busy, and it is said that double prices, and sometimes even more, were charged for necessary accommodation. We hope that these accounts are exaggerated. It is an easy thing to get a bad reputation for extortion among travellers, and it is a hard thing to get rid of it again. Niagara Falls is a notable illustration of this fact. Of course travellers soon get shy of places of evil repute, and no doubt many will stay away from Montreal's next carnival because of the reports now being circulated. Toronto must be careful of its reputation in this respect in connection with its great gatherings.

Some of the United States papers show a good deal of indignation over the fact that when it becomes necessary to purchase sea-worthy ships to go north in connection start is made all round. How many years of debt and anxiety are often thus brought about, and how many business failures come in direct consequence? It would be hard to change the present custom for one of presents of a practical and sensible character, of such things as young beginners most need, but such a change would be an excellent one.

Two gentlemen from the Western States, travellers, were arrested in Montreal last week at the station, for carrying revolvers in their belts, Western ashion, and fined at the Police Court for the serious offence against the Canadian law for carrying deadly weapons. Some of the daily papers are trying to get up some indignation against thus pouncing on travellers. It may be the strangers did not know what our laws are about carrying revolvers round where they can be used with deadly effect on the first impulse. If they did not, they are very ignorant men, and will be apt to know better in future. Even if in this particular instance a hardship was done, it is quite probable that good will come out of it in the long run. It will do a good deal towards spreading the information in the West and South, that when men come to Canada, they had better leave their revolvers behind—that others do not carry such deadly weapons here, and therefore they need not do so,—in fact must not do so. The carrying of revolvers in belts, in railway trains, or anywhere else, is a dangerous and ugly custom, and it is due to all Canadian travellers, and all other travellers through Canada, that our authorities should stop the practice as efficiently as possible. A railway traveller armed with a whiskey flask and a loaded revolver, or either for that matter, is a dangerous passenger. The emptying of one is likely to rouse a spirit for emptying the other.

Of course travellers soon get shy of places of evil repute, and no doubt many will stay away from Montreal's next carnival because of the reports now being circulated. Toronto must be careful of its reputation in this respect in connection with its great gatherings.

Some of the United States papers show a good deal of indignation over the fact that when it becomes necessary to purchase sea-worthy ships to go north in connection with the Greely expedition, the Government make purchase of ships in Great Britain. Large sums have been paid out in that way, and yet it is pretty evident that the Washington authorities did a wise thing in making these foreign purchases. Ship building has been a protected industry in the United States for many years, but there is no denying the fact that the business has not had a healthy growth, for that or for some other good reason. Both the mercantile and the war navy of the United States is now in a much worse condition than for many a year before, and things are growing worse instead of better.

Every few days there are reports of fresh immigrant arrivals from Great Britain, and as most of them are dependent on work at once for their maintenance, they have to be provided for. It is painfully evident that for some time to come there will not probably be sufficient work for all our present labouring population. The question of increased immigration, of the laboring class especially, must be faced soon, and the sooner the better. There is no use of encouraging labourers to seek homes in Canada when we have no labor for them. There is no reason why we should encourage men and women to come here and then sustain them out of the hard earnings of the tax payers, because they cannot just now earn for themselves, even though quite willing to labor. Probably there never was a more favorable time for farmers, with some capital, to come here; but such is certainly not the case as regards either mechanics or mere laborers.

Years ago a great deal was said about the "Chinese Wall" and the exclusiveness of that country against "outside barbarians." Times are certainly changing and already it is becoming more difficult for the Chinese to obtain an entrance in the United States than for a citizen of

The new mother was bitterly lamenting that her first-born was cross-eyed, and the father, after looking at the baby for a second, said, encouragingly : "Never mind, Martha. If he's cross-eyed he'll never be a masher. There's some consolation in that."

To empty a theatre in case of fire the act-drop should be lowered. All the men will rush out by force of habit, and the women will sit still, as usual in such cases, and a panic will be prevented. This suggestion is freely offered for what it is worth. It is not patented.

They were in the parlor and she was playing the piano and singing the new song, "Oh, Where Have the Old Folks Gone !" He wanted to be funny, and said : "Guess they're gone to bed by this time." "Don't you be so sure about that," answered the charming girl ; "pa may be out in the back yard at this moment letting the dog loose."

The two-headed girl got mad at her manager in a museum the other day, and turned loose on him with both of her tongues. The human curiosities all fainted, the animals in the cages tried to get away, and a St. Louis man stood and listened a moment, smiled sociably, and said : "With a little more practice I'd back her agin my old woman."

Years ago a great deal was said about the "Chinese Wall" and the exclusiveness of that country against "outside barbarians." Times are certainly changing and already it is becoming more difficult for the Chinese to obtain an entrance in the United States than for a citizen of the latter country to enter China. The cry of certain classes, for years, has been "the Chinese must go," and both law and brute force has been pretty freely applied to enforce their exclusion. A bill has recently been reported in the Senate at Washington to further amend the law in regard to the admission of Chinese emigrants. The Philadelphia American says of it that it substantially creates an elaborate passport system, under the supervision of our consuls abroad and our Government officials at home. Every Chinaman who goes back to his native country is debarred from returning unless he satisfies an American consul in China that he has been already a resident of the United States. The law also provides for the summary arrest and return of those landing in America contrary to law. Where is the Chinese wall located now?

In many instances the mistaken kindness of real friends turns out an absolute cruelty for many years, if not for all after life. Is not this very frequently the case in regard to the kind of wedding presents given? A young lady, for example, very popular among her friends is about being married and there pour into her scores of rich and valuable presents of plate, and china, and fancy parlor ornaments purchased almost regardless of expense. In a large proportion of instances such presentations turn out a positive injury instead of the source of pleasure they are intended. How out of place such things would look in a house furnished as plainly as the means of most young beginners would easily pay for. Of course the temptation of an ambitious young husband is to provide other things somewhat in keeping and so he goes considerably beyond his means, and so an extravagant act-drop should be lowered. All the men will rush out by force of habit, and the women will sit still, as usual in such cases, and a panic will be prevented. This suggestion is freely offered for what it is worth. It is not patented.

"Humph!" ejaculated a husband, as he noticed the "ladies' corner" of his family paper, "they may confine them to one corner of a newspaper, but at home the whole business isn't big enough for them." He had been trying to find an old pair of pantaloons, and every closet, nook, and corner that he looked into bulged with feminine draperies.

Curious Growth on a Boy's Ears.

A colored boy from Virginia, 15 years of age, recently presented himself at the Maryland University hospital to have an operation performed for a curious formation on his ears. The growth is know as keloid, a kind of connective tissue tumor, covers the ears almost entirely, giving him the appearance of having elephant's ears. The one on the right ear measured eight inches across and twenty-five inches in circumference. The one on the left ear was almost six inches across. The weight of both tumors when removed was three pounds six ounces. One has been growing since the boy was 4 years old, and has been cut off three times; the other has been forming six months. They were hard, fibrous masses. The formations are said to occur more frequently on the ear than elsewhere on the body, and to be more common among colored persons than among the whites. They are not malignant and not cancerous. The cause of such growth is not definitely known. The surgeon was able to save a good portion of each ear. They were successfully removed by cautery, and the patient is doing well. He came on in the summer for treatment, but it was deemed best to put off the operation till winter. His physician is with him and his health is good. There are two similiar formations on his breast, but it is thought that those will pass away as he grows older. The boy has suffered no pain in consequence of his deformities.—Baltimore American.

IN A HOT BOX.

The Brakeman Tells His Story.

"Was I ever in an accident?" echoed the brakeman, as he took off his gloves, readjusted his necktie, and brushed off imaginary dust after putting some coal in the heater. "Never had an accident in my life, sir, but I come mighty close to it several times. Closest call I ever had was down near Laporte. We stopped to fit up a hot-box, and as I knew the limited was close behind us I skipped back with my lantern in a hurry. Hadn't gone more'n ten or twelve rods when I heard her a-comin' about a mile off, perhaps more. There was a curve right there, and I couldn't see her. Hearin' of her made me a bit anxious, and I started to run faster—it was a snowy, blowy night—when I slipped down, broke my lantern, and the wind blew it out. Here was a fix, me a hundred feet from the rear of my train, expected to stop No. 20, and her a-comin' down the grade and round the curve, and my lantern out! Now I tell you I did some pretty quick thinking then. I hadn't time to get back to the train, get another lantern, and get far enough to stop her. Couldn't strike a match in that wind, certain, and for a second or two I didn't know what to do. Then it came to me like a flash, and I didn't hustle? Run back to my train, pulled the rope for our engineer to go ahead, yelled with all my might to the conductor, who was ahead where the hot-box was, and grabbed the red bulls-eye from the rear platform, climbed up on the brake and then onto the coach, and when I got there held my bull-eye up high and waved her across the track. It was as I thought. I could see 20's headlight from up there—would she see me? Apparently not, for she came along like mad as I felt myself going crazy. But as soon as she struck the tangent of the curve the engineer looked my way, saw the red light, and put her down hard. You see if I had stayed on the track he couldn't have seen the light at all; but even as it was, nothing saved us but the fact that our train started up in time to get fairly going before 20 saw my bulls-eye. Not a passenger knew what a close call we'd had. Neither did the Superintendent you bet. Elkhart! Elkhart! Twenty minutes for dinner!"

A Talk About House-Plants.

"A plant breathes as truly as you do, only, unlike yourself, it has indefinite thousands of mouths. There is one leaf on which there are over 150,000. TOOTHSOME RECEIPTS.

Hygienic Cooking—How to do It.

STEAMED GRAINS.—The table below gives the proportions of grain and water by measurement, and the time required for cooking in a closed steamer. (A closed steamer, is one that admits the steam through flues in the side or elsewhere, and not through holes in the bottom.) Some like these grains cooked quite dry, and others prefer them very moist. If the proportions here given do not suit the taste, it will be an easy matter to correct them, after a single trial. In steaming, always keep the water at a fast boil; and dish the very moment you lift the steamer from the fire, else the water will collect.

GRAIN.		WATER		TIME.
Rice	1 cup	3½ cups		¾ hour.
Cracked Wheat	1 "	4½	"	3 hours.
Rolled or Pearl Wheat	1 "	4	"	3 "
Pearl Barley	1 "	3	"	3½ "
Roll'd or Crush'd Barl'y	1 "	3	"	3 "
Coarse Hominy	1 "	4	"	4 "
Fine Hominy	1 "	3½	"	4 "
Samp	1 "	4½	"	2½ "
Oatmeal	1 "	4	"	2 "
" Groats	1 "	4	"	2 "
Rolled Oats	1 "	4	"	2 "

If you have not a steamer, cook the above grains in a farina kettle, which is a double boiler, or one vessel within another, the outer one containing water that is boiling. Grains cooked in this kettle (or in a covered tin bucket set in a pot of boiling water) require a longer time by about one-third, than if done in a closed steamer; hominy and pearl barley, for instance, would need all of five hours. The time can be shortened, however, by soaking (covered) over night, and cooking in the same water; if soaked, they will steam in a farina-kettle, in about the same time as that given in the table. But the flavor is rather better if the soaking is dispensed with. These grains are sometimes cooked in a stone or earthen crock, or even in an iron pot, on the back of the stove; the fire must be slow or they will scorch.

CANNELON OF BEEF.—Chop half a pound of lean cooked beef fine; rub smooth in a mortar half a pound of raw fat bacon, or ham fat; grate the yellow rind of one lemon, mix all these ingredients thoroughly, press them together in form of a roll, wrap them well in buttered paper, and bake it for twenty minutes in a moderate oven. When it is done, remove the paper without breaking the roll, and serve it either on a bed of parsley or lettuce, or with half a pint of brown sauce or meat gravy.

MOCK TERRAPIN.—Half a calf's liver; season and fry brown. Hash it, not very fine, dust thickly with flour, a teaspoon of mixed mustard, as much cayenne pepper as will lie on half a dime, two hard eggs chopped fine, a lump of butter the size of an egg, a teacup of water. Let it boil together a minute or two. Cold veal will do if liver is not liked.

A Talk About House-Plants.

"A plant breathes as truly as you do, only, unlike yourself, it has indefinite thousands of mouths. There is one leaf on which there are over 150,000. They are called stomata, or breathing pores, and are on both sides of the leaf in most plants, but usually are in far greater abundance on the lower side. The plant draws its food from the air and soil—from the latter in liquid form—and this substance must be concentrated and assimilated. These little pores introduce the vital atmosphere through the air passages of the plant, which correspond in a certain sense to the throat and lungs of an animal. You would be sadly off if you couldn't breath; these plants would fare no better. Therefore we must do artificially what the rain does out-of-doors—wash away the accumulated dust, so that respi ration may be unimpeded. Moreover, these little pores, which are shaped like the semi-elliptical springs of a carriage, are self-acting valves. A plant exhales a great deal of moisture in invisible vapor. A sunflower has been known to give off three pounds of water in twenty-four hours. This does no harm, unless the moisture escapes faster than it rises from the roots, in which case the plant wilts, and may even die. In such emergencies these little stomata, or mouths, shut up partly or completely, and so do much to check the exhalation. When moisture is given to the roots these mouths open again, and if our eyes were fine enough we should see the vapor passing out."

"I never appreciated the fact before that plants are so thoroughly alive."

"Indeed, they are alive, and therefore they need the intelligent care required by all living creatures which we have removed from their natural conditions. Nature takes care of all her children when they are where she placed them. In a case like this, wherein we are preserving plants that need summer warmth through a winter's cold, we must learn to supply her place, and as far as possible adopt her methods. It is just because multitudes do not understand her ways that so many house-plants are in a half-dying condition."

"Now, Amy, I will teach you how to water the pots," Mrs. Clifford began. "The water, you see, has been standing in the flower-room all night, so as to raise its temperature. That drawn directly from the well would be much too cold.

times cooked in a stone or earthen crock, or even in an iron pot, on the back of the stove; the fire must be slow or they will scorch.

CANNELON OF BEEF.—Chop half a pound of lean cooked beef fine; rub smooth in a mortar half a pound of raw fat bacon, or ham fat; grate the yellow rind of one lemon, mix all these ingredients thoroughly, press them together in form of a roll, wrap them well in buttered paper, and bake it for twenty minutes in a moderate oven. MOCK TERRAPIN.—Half a calf's liver; season and fry brown. Hash it, not very fine, dust thickly with flour, a teaspoon of mixed mustard, as much cayenne pepper as will lie on half a dime, two hard eggs chopped fine, a lump of butter the size of an egg, a teacup of water. Let it boil together a minute or two. Cold veal will do if liver is not liked.

JELLIED VEAL.—Take a knuckle of veal, wash it nicely, put in a pot with water enough to cover it, boil it slowly for two or three hours, then take out all the bones—be sure to pick out all the little ones — cut the meat into small pieces, put it back in the liquor, season to taste with pepper, salt and sage, let it stew away until pretty dry, turn it in an oblong dish, or one that will mould it well to cut in slices. A nice relish for tea.

SWEETBREADS, LIVER AND HEART.—Parboil them and let them get cold, then cut them about an inch thick. Season with salt and pepper and dip them into the yolk of an egg and fine bread crumbs; fry them light brown. When removed from the frying-pan make a gravy for them, adding, if you like, spices.

SHARP SAUCE FOR BROILED MEATS.—Chop fine an onion and a small quantity of mixed pickles; put these into a saucepan with half a gill of vinegar, a teaspoonful of mustard, a small bit of butter, a large tablespoonful of bread-crumbs, and pepper and salt to season; boil all together on the fire six minutes, then add a gill of water and allow the sauce to boil again for ten minutes longer. This sauce will impart a flavor to the coarsest meats or fish when broiled or fried, and also for cold meats made into hash or stew. In the latter case the quantity of water and crumbs must be doubled.

ROAST SWEETBREADS.—Boil sweetbreads, trim them and dry them, then dip in egg and bread-crumbs; brown before the fire or in the oven; put a good clear gravy under them and garnish with watercresses.

POIVRADE SAUCE.—Chop and fry brown in a tablespoonful of butter, one onion and one head of celery in small bits: put them over the fire with two slices of fat bacon cut in half-inch dice, a sprig of every sweet herb available except sage, a

That drawn directly from the well would be much too cold, and even as it is I shall add some warm water to take the chill off. The roots are very sensitive to a sudden chill from too cold water. No, don't pour it into the pots from that pitcher. The rain does not fall so, and as Webb says, we must imitate nature. This watering-pot with a fine rose will enable you to sprinkle them slowly, and the soil can absorb the moisture naturally and equally. Most plants need water much as we take our food, regularly, often, and not too much at a time. Let this surface soil in the pots be your guide. It should never be perfectly dry, and still less should it be sodden with moisture ; nor should moisture ever stand in the saucers under the pots, unless the plants are semi-aquatic, like this calla lily. You will gradually learn to treat each plant or family of plants according to its nature. The amount of water which that calla requires would kill this heath, and the quantity needed by the heath would be the death of that cactus over there."

them, adding, if you like, spices.

SHARP SAUCE FOR BROILED MEATS.—Chop fine an onion and a small quantity of mixed pickles ; put these into a saucepan with half a gill of vinegar, a teaspoonful of mustard, a small bit of butter, a large tablespoonful of bread-crumbs, and pepper and salt to season ; boil all together on the fire six minutes, then add a gill of water and allow the sauce to boil again for ten minutes longer. In the latter case the quantity of water and crumbs must be doubled.

ROAST SWEETBREADS.—Boil sweetbreads, trim them and dry them, then dip in egg and bread-crumbs ; brown before the fire or in the oven ; put a good clear gravy under them and garnish with watercresses.

POIVRADE SAUCE.—Chop and fry brown in a tablespoonful of butter, one onion and one head of celery in small bits : put them over the fire with two slices of fat bacon cut in half-inch dice, a sprig of every sweet herb available except sage, a blade of mace, ten peppercorns, a sprig of parsley, a bay leaf, two glasses of wine, or one of vinegar, and reduce the liquid one-half by rapid boiling ; then add a teacupful of gravy, broth or boiling water ; heat and use.

RICE CROQUETTES.—Take seven ounces of rice in a bright sauce-pan with a quart of rich milk ; let it swell gently by the fire ; stir often to prevent it burning. When it is half cooked stir in five or six ounces of pounded sugar, a few sweet pounded almonds and a strong flavoring of orange-water. Simmer these ingredients until the rice is soft and dry ; put it into a flat dish to cool; then roll it in small balls, make a hole in each and fill it with rich preserve or marmalade, close it up and dip it in egg and bread crumbs ; fry these in butter, a light brown color, drain them before the fire on a reversed hair-sieve covered with a soft, clean cloth. Pile them when ready to serve on a dish in pyramidal form.

APPLE PUDDING.—Make a paste with equal quantities of sifted flour and finely chopped suet, a pinch of salt and a little water. Roll it out thin into a large piece, place this as a lining in a well-buttered bowl, cut it off all round, leaving enough to fold over ; roll out the trimmings to such a size as to cover the top. Peel, core and slice a quantity of good sound apples, put them in the bowl with brown sugar to taste, some chopped lemon peel, two or three cloves, and a little grated nutmeg ; add a small piece of fresh butter, pack the apples tightly in, put on the cover of paste, turn up the edges and press them down, tie a floured pudding cloth over, and put the bowl into a saucepan full of boiling water, which should come well over the pudding. Boil him.

Repeat this operation twice, cover the paste with a woollen cloth, and let it rest for half an hour. The operation of rolling out and folding up the paste is called "giving a turn." After the paste has rested, two more turns are to be given to it, and it will be ready.

A Southern Negro's Prayer.

"One of the most remarkable and original prayers I ever heard," said a gentleman to a Herald reporter the other evening, "was just after the war closed, and I was taking a run down through Georgia in hope of finding a desirable cotton plantation. One bright summer night found me at the cabin of an old negro, who had once been a slave, but who located on the old plan, after the war, and was his own master. He gladly welcomed me to his humble abode and what he could provide.

Supper over, and a most excellent one, too, the old man regaled me with stories of plantation life until his son, a good chunk of a boy, came home from a neighbor's. Before retiring the old man asked me to read a chapter in the Bible, when he would pray. He said he couldn't read, but was powerful in exhortin' and prayer. After reading a chapter from Job and

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

The World of Monkeys.

If one of each kind of the apes and monkeys which are now living on the globe could be collected and placed in a large zoological garden, and if those which lived in former ages, and whose skeletons have been discovered by geologists, could be brought to life, and added to the whole, they would certainly form a very amusing and remarable assemblage. What endless fun there would be, what scamperings, skirmishes and quarrels would take place; how they would grin, chatter, and pull tails all the live-long day, which had been quiet spectators before, would commence howling, and how others would rush about amongst their tired and sleepy companions, with noiseless bounds, until the return of daylight! If each of the representative monkeys could give an account of itself, whence it had come, how it lived in its native forests and woods, and what it did with itself all day, a most interesting and novel natural history book could be compiled, for only the histories of a few have been written, and they are by no means always veracious. They would have come from Asia and many of its islands, from Africa, from South America, and the isthmus to the north, and Europe would have sent one from the rocks of Gibraltar; and yet, unless those of the same country had been properly introduced, either by Dame Nature or by the chapter of accidents incident to such a very unlikely meeting as we are imagining, they would not know many of their fellows. They are exclusive in their habits, and their particular parks and forests are limited in extent, and sometimes very much so. Of course, there are some exceptions, and many kinds which roam over large countries, and are even found in different islands, have gained the superior intelligence and the ready affability and easiness of intercourse characteristic of the cosmopolitan and traveller. A Southern Negro's Prayer.

"One of the most remarkable and original prayers I ever heard," said a gentleman to a Herald reporter the other evening, "was just after the war closed, and I was taking a run down through Georgia in hope of finding a desirable cotton plantation. One bright summer night found me at the cabin of an old negro, who had once been a slave, but who located on the old plan, after the war, and was his own master. He gladly welcomed me to his humble abode and what he could provide.

Supper over, and a most excellent one, too, the old man regaled me with stories of plantation life until his son, a good chunk of a boy, came home from a neighbor's. Before retiring the old man asked me to read a chapter in the Bible, when he would pray. He said he couldn't read, but was powerful in exhortin' and prayer. After reading a chapter from Job and part of a psalm we knelt down, and the sable brother let his soul flow out to God. Even in the uncouth language of the old slave every word was sublime, and seemed as coming from one inspired. I remember one passage remarkable for its beauty and unapproachable as a figure. Said he: "If I had de wings ob a dove I'd mount de golden steps to de New Jerusalem, and dip my fingers in de blood of de Lamb and write de word redemption on de blue vault of heaven!" He prayed for the president of the United States, all his cabinet, the army, the navy, the governors of all the states, for me, his guest, for his neighbors, for absent children, for himself and family. He asked forgiveness for many sins, and thanked the Lord for many blessings.

Well, I began to get tired, I had rested my knees the best I could, but wanted to sit up badly, and at the same time did not want to give offence to my host. The boy reclined next to me with his head in the chair, sound asleep Touching him gently, I whispered: "About how soon will your father get through?" "Has he got to de place whar Moses crossed de Red sea?" Being assured that said point had not yet been reached, the boy yawned and continued: "Well, when he gits to whar Moses crossed de Red sea, he's just half done," and he relapsed into unconsciousness.—*Dayton (O.) All would have the best possible limbs for climbing, grasping, picking, and stealing, and all would have good hands, that is to say, fingers and thumbs and wrists, in front, and foot-hands, that is to say, feet with a great thumb-like toe behind. In a general sense they would all be four-handed or quadrumanous, and this peculiarity would distinguish them from any interlopers who might have got into the assemblage unasked.

Emperor William's Oil Lamp.

The study lamp on Emperor William's work-table, is a simple oil lamp of a pattern such as, since the introduction of petroleum lamps, can hardly be met with on the table of the humblest citizen of Berlin. The following incident may account for the non-admittance of the improved petroleum lamp into the historical corner room of the Imperial Palace. The Emperor, whose simple and economical habits are well-known, has for years been accustomed to screw down the wick whenever he ceases reading or writing, or leaves the room.

When the petroleum lamps finally came into general use, the Emperor's valet, Krause, brought one and put it on the work-table. True to his habit, his Imperial master screwed down the wick on leaving the writing, and, as a matter of course, the room was soon filled with an insupportable smoke, which greatly affected the nose and eyes of the Monarch, and necessitated the opening of doors and windows. Krause finally volunteered the remark :—

The mutilation of figures in Westminster Abbey is no novelty. The practice began early, and even kings were not spared. The solid silver head of Henry V. was wrenched off and stolen in 1546, on the 30th of January—the very day by-the-by, on which another king's real head was taken off at Whitehall a century later. "Some whig, I'll warrant you," said Sir Roger de Coverly, during his famous walk round the abbey; "you ought to lock up your kings better, they'll carry off the body, too, if you don't take care." The heads of both Washington and Maj. Andre have been repeatedly carried off from the monument of the latter, "The wanton mischief." says Lamb, "of some schoolboy, fired, perhaps, with raw notions of transatlantic freedom." The abbey is a large place, and any kind of mutilation might be perpetrated successfully, provided only that it did not make too much noise.

Townshend's monument, whether beautiful or not, has suffered like the rest. But it is no recent bit of mischief. Horsley was dean until 1822, and it was done before that. "Pray, Mr. Nollekens," said a friend to that shrewd old sculptor, "can you tell me who executed the basso relievo of Townshend's monument? I am sorry to find that some evil-minded persons have stolen one of the heads." Nollekens—"That's what I say. Dean Horsley should look after his monuments himself. Hang his wax-works. Yes, I can tell you who did it. Tom Ecker had the job, and employed another man of the name of Eckstein to mould the fillet. It's very clever."

A servant-girl in New Haven stole her mistress' false teeth. The woman told a policeman "she sheesh cosh shwenshy shollars, ansh she shwash wosh shusha wresh ashdo shteesh fawshee sheeth——" "Wait till I find an interpreter," interrupted the policeman, thinking the woman was a newly-arrived Hungarian; but she was an American, and when her teeth were in she could talk the head off

"But what are we to do, Krause? Had we better get our oil lamp back again? You know my eyes are weaker, and require a brighter light."

"Well, your Majesty, we can get a new lamp made, with an extra large burner, so as to do away with petroleum altogether."

"Quite right, Krause, let us try it."

And Krause got a lamp of the old pattern, had the burner enlarged to an almost colossal size, a green glass shade added to it, and to this day the new lamp, defying all innovations, asserts its place of honor on the work-table of the most diligent of all Monarchs.

Some People Neverare Satisfied.

"Please, sir," said a bell-boy to a Texas hotel clerk, "Number forty say there ain't no towel in his room."

"Tell him to use one of the window curtains."

"He says, too, there ain't no pillers."

"Tell him to put his coat and vest under his head."

"And he wants a pitcher of water."

"Suffering Cyrus! But he's the worst kicker I ever struck in my life! Carry him up the horse pail!"

"He wants to know if he can't have a light."

"Here, confound him! Give him this lantern, and ask him if he wants the earth, and if he'll have it fried only on one side, or turned over?"

"Wife, I say, what in thunder are you opening all the doors for? I'm darned near frozen!" "Oh, James, it's so cold out doors! And there are so many poor people exposed on the streets! I thought I would just let out a little warm air to the poor things!"

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, MARCH 7, 1884

—The Methodist Union Bill has passed the Private Bills Committee of the House of Commons without an amendment.

—The Toronto News says the putting up of Tom White, M.P., to reply to Sir Richard Cartwright was like "pitting a singed cat against a Royal bengal tiger." Hard on Tom, but nevertheless true.

—It is now held by both political parties in the Ontario Legislature that the only valid license Act is the Crooks Act, and the Government have announced that they will protect licensees under this Act against prosecution. This should settle the question with liquor dealers. In the face of such unanimity of opinion and knowing that they will have to pay nearly double the amount for a Dominion license, it is not likely they will turn their back on the Crooks Act.

—What will not the present Parliament do in a defence of a Cabinet Minister? When Sir Charles Tupper accepted the High Commissionership Reform journals pointed out that unless he resigned his seat in the House his acceptance of this office would be a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act. The Tories argued to the contrary at the time. Sir Charles continued to act in the dual capacity, though he was careful to shirk every vote. A few days ago an action was entered against him at Ottawa for violation of the law, and at once Sir John up boys and have suthin'" or that up to two months ago he was interested in a Napanee hotel, but it is true nevertheless. In the role of a first-class hypocrite the member for Lennox is a complete success.

—We regret that pressure of local news prevents us giving in full the magnificent speech of Sir Richard Cartwright on the Budget. No system of condensation would do the speech justice. His peroration has been characterized by old parliamentarians as the grandest ever uttered in this or perhaps any other Parliament. While Sir Leonard Tilley was weak and faltering, evidently labouring under great depression, Sir Richard was calm, thoroughly self-possession and strong in facts and language.

MR. JOHN CHARLTON, M.P.

This gentleman was unable to reach Napanee on Saturday last owing to the lines of railway from Ottawa being blockaded by snow, but will appear here to-morrow instead. We trust he will have a large audience. Mr. Charlton is one of the ablest, most eloquent and independent members of the House of Commons. The chair will be taken at 2 o'clock, p.m. A general invitation is extended to the public to be present.

A meeting of the Reformers of the county will be held at 11 o'clock in the morning in Symington's Opera House for the purpose of perfecting the organization of the party in the riding. It is important that there should be a large attendance.

A Charge Refuted.

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

SIR,—In your issue of the 15th ult. appears a venemous sarcastic letter over the signature of "Bob Jack," where I am accused of receiving fees and travelling expenses for non-attendance at the County Council; and that, perhaps, I might have charged the Government for work not performed. These insinuations are unjust and untruthful, which one might expect from a resident of Sodom. Why didn't the writer give his name as an honorable man would in making such grave charges?

I feel I am not ashamed of anything done at the County Council and can defend my acts in this matter or give any other explanation it the writer, like an honorable man, will give his name.

Yours truly,

A few days ago an action was entered against him at Ottawa for violation of the law, and at once Sir John came to his relief by a bill amending the Independence Act. Of course the House will pass it, as they would do anything emanating for the "Chieftain."

—On Tuesday last Hon. Mr. Hardy moved the Legislature into committee to adopt the Government resolutions increasing the license fees under the Crooks Act and to impose fees under the McCarthy Act. The resolutions provided for a much larger fee under the McCarthy Act than the other as an inducement to liquor dealers to take out provincial licenses. Mr. Meredith moved an amendment stating that the Dominion Act is unconstitutional and therefore objecting to levying of fees thereon. In speaking to his motion he said that the Crooks Act was the only constitutional license law. Mr. Mowat replied and in stirring language denounced the meddlesome and uncalled-for interference of the Dominion Government with the license question. He stated that as it was the evident determination of the Dominion Government to enforce the McCarthy it was necessary to impose fees thereon. The amendment was voted down by a majority of 14. In the debate Hon. Mr. Fraser stated that the Government would undertake to protect licensees under the Crooks Act from prosecution by the Dominion authorities.

—In speaking on the License question in the Legislature a few years ago, A. H. SIR RICHARD CARTWRIGHT'S GREAT SPEECH.

It Drove his Friends into Ecstasies of Delight.

The Montreal Witness referring to Sir Richard Cartwright's reply to Sir Leonard Tilley says that it was one of the best oratorical efforts ever heard in the Canadian Commons. From his exordium to his peroration he poured forth a brilliant flow of language, his emphasis being unusually strong, his argument convincing and his pronunciation perfect. His powerful arraignment of the Governmen drove his friends on the opposition side into ecstacies of delight. Sir Richard stated that the hon. gentleman had given several reasons for the depression. The half of his speech was devoted to the fact that there was no depression and the other half as to the reason why it existed. There was not a man in the country who would say that Canada is in a bad financial condition. He could tell the hon. gentleman that his system of high taxation did not encourage prosperity. He went on to discuss the policy of the administration and that whatever tended to impoverish the great bulk of people who are the customers of the great mass of manufacturers tended to injure the manufacturers. The Government's policy was specially adapted to retard the development of the North-West. A large loss of emigration from Canada had occurred, and it was also caused by the tariff. We were told that sugar was cheap. This article, he contended, was much dearer than it need be according to the sum that reached the treasury. If the National Policy had been successful in causing the manufacture of about $20,000,000 of textile good, thereby giving employment to 14,000 or 15,000, it was not brought about without causing a duty of twenty or twenty-five million to be paid by the purchaser. His argument was not whether the National policy was bad or good —it was what it cost the people of the country. He claimed Canada was a too heavily taxed country. He could understand that as the settlement of the country advanced a corresponding increase should take place in its legitimate debt. In 1867 Canada had a population of 3,750,000 with a taxation of $13,500,000. In 1884 with a population of 4,300,000 the taxation was growing to thirty-five million. After referring at length and ably to many issues before the country he stated that Canada lost as much by reckless administration during the past five years as the United States did during the four years of the war.

It is true that the poor are made poorer by intemperance, but it does not lie in the mouth of a man who helped to make the poor poorer in this way to blow about it.

—Hon. Mr. Mowat is called by his opponents "the little Premier," while Sir John is honoured with the name of "a great constitutional lawyer." Recent events go to show that the names have been transposed. In every case where there has been a difference of opinion on constitutional law between Mr. Mowat and Sir John, and appeal was made to the Privy Council, Sir John has been worsted. It is Mr. Mowat who is in reality the great constitutional lawyer. Before he places a law on the statute book he is satisfied that it is constitutional, and he backs it up. Sir John passes his law and trusts to luck. He has no confidence in his own legislation. A striking example of this was given the other day. A deputation of licensed victuallers waited upon Mr. Mowat on the license question and he in free language told them that the Crooks Act was the only valid license law and that they would be perfectly safe in taking out licenses under it. When a similar deputation waited on Sir John he showed so little faith in the validity of his legislation that he advised them to take out licenses under both Acts. Fine advise from "a great constitutional lawyer!"

– Mr. A. H. Roe, M.P.P., is just now posing in the Local Legislature as a great High Priest of Temperance. He is greatly annoyed at the presence of a bar in the vicinity of the Legislative Chamber. The sight of people drinking is seriously effecting his digestion. Mr. Roe has got very fastidious since he went to Parliament. A month or so before going to Toronto he spent a large portion of his time in a hotel, and was apparently much gratified in pocketing the lucre obtained from the sale of the "poison." To hear Roe talk temperance in Toronto one could hardly believe that he had ever said at Bath during his election, "Come it was also caused by the tariff. We were told that sugar was cheap. This article, he contended, was much dearer than it need be according to the sum that reached the treasury. If the National Policy had been successful in causing the manufacture of about $20,000,000 of textile good, thereby giving employment to 14,000 or 15,000, it was not brought about without causing a duty of twenty or twenty-five millicn to be paid by the purchaser. His argument was not whether the National policy was bad or good —it was what it cost the people of the country. He claimed Canada was a too heavily taxed country. He could understand that as the settlement of the country advanced a corresponding increase should take place in its legitimate debt. In 1867 Canada had a population of 3,750,000 with a taxation of $13,500,000. In 1884 with a population of 4,300,000 the taxation was growing to thirty-five million. After referring at length and ably to many issues before the country he stated that Canada lost as much by reckless administration during the past five years as the United States did during the four years of the war.

THE BUDGET SPEECH.

OTTAWA, MARCH 1.—The correspondent of the Montreal Witness, (Independent), telegraphs:—Sir Leonard Tilley's budget speech for 1884 delivered last night was a disappointment. This was plainly manifest to the keen and important observer by two significant evidences. Throughout the evening the question could be heard on all sides in the corridors, "Well, what did you think of the budget?" Unlike other important political events the Ministerialists were, without exception, satisfied to characterize the speech as merely non-exultant and only fair while, on the other hand, the Liberals were unanimous in pronouncing it an abject failure. When the House opened and the Finance Minister arose in his place there was a large attendance on the floor and the galleries were packed. The honorable gentleman had not been speaking long when it became evident that he was laboring under a depression. The House gradually thinned out and spectators left in large numbers. Veteran gallerymen were heard to remark that never during any former budget was the House so empty. The Government benches became painfully vacant. Sir Richard Cartwright, the Opposition financial critic, leaned carelessly back in his chair. The Hon. Mr. Blake with arms folded on his desk and head bent was evidently asleep most of the time and a few of the Ministers were noticed to be out of their seats.

On the whole the speech could hardly be said to be anything but an excuse for the failure of the National Policy, and especially as to the causes which led to the failure. It was not a complete exposition of the expenditure of the country, and the Minister himself admitted that several important items would be forthcoming. During the debate to follow, this fact will afford the Opposition considerable ground to work on. Sir Leonard's main contention was that had it not been for the existence of the National Policy the condition of things would have been infinitely worse than it is at the present time, and that the Nationa Policy was a preventive

TOWN COUNCIL.

The regular meeting of the Town Council was held on Monday evening last. Present —Mayor Joy, Reeve Wilson, Dep-Reeve Carscallen and Couns. Lane, Perry, Wallace, Stevens, Rose, Carson and Lapum.

The minutes of last meeting were read and approved.

A petition was read from the captain and secretary of the fire brigade, stating that the firemen had appropriated their salary, $300, towards a firemen's demonstration in town next summer and asking the Council to make a similar grant. After some discussion the petition was referred to the Fire and Water Committee to report.

A communication from Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, asking remission of $1.90 tax for snow shovelling charged in error, was referred to the Fire and Water Committee.

A letter from A. H. Roe, M.P.P., stated that he did not think it advisable that the petition of the Council to Ontario Legislature should now be presented.

Reeve WILSON moved that the communication be filed. He had had a conversation with Mr. Roe about the matter and agreed that it would be injudicious to present the petition at this stage as it would show that the towns of the province were uniting in this matter. If the petition had been put in early in the session it would have been different.

Coun. LANE said that last year's Council passed the petition and ordered the clerk to hand it to Mr. Roe for presentment. He considered it was not Mr. Roe's duty to question the Council's judgment in the matter but to do as requested.

The motion was carried.

A petition was presented from the members of the Napanee band asking for a grant of $100 towards employing a tutor.

Dep-Reeve WILSON submitted the Treasurer's monthly statement as follows which was referred to the Finance Committee :—

He also submitted a report of the Finance Committee recommending the adoption of the Auditors' report.

Coun. HENWOOD submitted pay list of Street Committee, No. 2, which was adopted.

Coun. LAPUM submitted the report of the Poor and Sanitary Committee which showed the expenditure of the month to be: For pensioners, $19.50; poor people, not pensioners, $6.70; wood and coal distributed, $30.25; total, $56.45; cash on hand, $30.55. —Adopted.

Reeve WILSON stated that the chairman of the Committee on Police was out of town, hence no report could be made to-night. He asked that time be extended till next meeting.—Granted.

Coun. LANE submitted the report of the special committee on application for a grant to a band, which recommended that a grant of $100 be made towards the purchase of $300 worth of instruments, said instruments to be the property of the town, and the band to be under the control of Napanee Lodge, I.O.O.F.

The other petition for a band grant was then taken up and after some discussion it and the report was referred to the same committee to report at next meeting.

On motion of Reeve WILSON a communication from Mitchell & Co. of Montreal, quoting prices of three and four way branches for steam fire engine, was referred to the Fire and Water Committee.

On motion Mr. Nelson German was heard in reference to the taxes on the old brush factory building, which came under exemption by-law. Owing to the failure of the company he had received no rent last year and was now called upon to pay the taxes. He was willing to pay taxes on half the amount from last July.—Referred to the Finance Committee.

Mrs. MOORE was heard on a petition to the Council to contribute something towards the support of her mother, Mrs. Wood, an indigent.—The matter was referred to the Poor and Sanitary Committee with power to act.

Mr. GEO. SANDFORD was heard respecting a drain emptying on his lot.—Referred to the Street Committee to report.

GREAT BATTLE BETWEEN REBELS AND BRITISH TROOPS.

2,300 Rebels Killed—24 of the British Killed and 142 Wounded.

The New York Sun of March 2nd contains the following cablegram:—Trinkitat, March 1.—A battle raged all day yesterday three miles from Fort Baker, where the rebels were found in force, with two guns mounted, in an old fort. On Thursday night Gen. Graham's expedition encamped near Fort Baker, the infantry in front and the cavalry in the rear. On Friday morning after breakfast troops were formed in an oblong, the front and rear of which were longer than the sides, owing to the different strength of the regiments. The Gordon Highlanders in line formed the advance, with two Gatling guns and one Gardiner in the right corner and two Gardiners and one Gatling in the left corner. The 89th Regiment in line formed the right hand side of the square, and the Black Watch the rear. The whole strength of the British forces was something less than 4,000 men. The length of front was 950 yards. The Hussars acted as scouts, and advanced in a semi-circle 1,000 yards ahead, covering the front and flanks of the main force. The troops advanced over the sand knolls and scrub for a mile from Fort Baker, along the Teb Road, when the rebels opened fire with Remington rifles, but the range was too long and the shots proved ineffective.

At 1 p.m., after an hour of intense fighting, the rebels gave way and bolted outright. The Gatling guns and Martini rifles had caused great havoc there. The British pursued them as they fell back, and advanced as far as the fresh water wells of Teb, where the rebels made their last stand. The Sheiks who advanced empty-handed to show they bore a charmed life were stricken down with bayonets. The Highlanders carried the next earthworks, capturing three guns. At the end of four hours of arduous fighting the British gained possession of the rebel camps, of the huts, and of the wells. The cavalry on the right flank charged the retreating rebels, who did not bolt, but struck the troopers who rode among them, giving blow for blow. A splendid display of heroism was made by three mounted rebels. They resolutely maintained their ground against the shock of two cavalry regiments before being cut down. They continued to fight after the third charge, killing several soldiers and wounding Col. Barrow with their spears. The enemy retired slowly, and in consequence of this the British kept up the firing for a long time after the fortunes of the day had been decided. The rebels lost 1,000 killed. Gen. Graham decided to remain at the wells of Teb for the day and night. The intention was to continue the advance to Tokar on Saturday a. m. More fighting is anticipated. The spoils taken from Baker Pasha were in a large measure recovered. The losses of the British in the fight were 24 killed and 142 wounded. The British forces captured four Krupp guns, two Howitzers, and one machine gun.

—A successful tea-meeting was held at Sand Hill school house on Tuesday evening last. Music was furnished by ladies from a distance and Mr. A. Quackenbush represented the platform.

—On Thursday of last week Mr. N. Woodcock called a meeting of the patrons of Hay Bay cheese factory, which was largely attended. The secretary, Mr. Irvine Parks, read a statement of receipts and expenditure of last season which gave every satisfaction, and after some routine business was transacted Mr. Parks was unanimously elected secretary-treasurer and salesman for the current year, 1884.

—On Saturday last Mr. Elisha Sharp and son started for Napanee to attend the Reform meeting and avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing Mr. John Charlton, M.P., deliver an address on the burning question of the day; and when but a short distance from their residence their horse became frightened, and on Mr. Sharp getting out of the cutter to catch the horse by the head it sprung, knocked him down and fell across his legs holding him there until his son could get the animal up. They then returned home and Mr. Sharp found his leg somewhat jammed but thought it would be all right in a few days, and on Sunday pain became so intense that Dr. Clark wss sent for, and upon examination the bone was found shattered near the ankle of the right leg Mr. Sharp is recovering nicely and we trust he will be able to attend the Reform meeting on Saturday next. Mr. Sharp has the sympathy of the whole neighbourhood.

—I noticed a few weeks ago that a correspondent of the Beaver boasted of a young lady of Hay Bay having $60.00 of surplus money on hand. Now, Mr. Editor, I can inform that correspondent that there are four girls on Hay Bay who are to have $600 each on the day of their wedlock; another one is to have a cow and a heifer. I don't think the $60 girl is anywhere.

—The young people of this neighborhood will give a necktie social and an oyster supper in Parks' chapel on Tuesday evening next, 11th inst., to commence at seven o'clock sharp. The proceeds are to be given to the Rev. Mr. Betts, who has been afflicted for the last six months, by a severe attack of dyspepsia. No pains will be spared to make the supper a grand success, and every member of the Bay circuit should come over and assist the young people of this section in making a good full house for Mr. Betts. Several Rev. gentlemen have kindly consented to be present and a good programme is already prepared, consisting of speeches,

Sir Richard Cartwright's speech on the Budget will rank with the finest efforts of oratory in the English language. Nothing superior to it was ever heard even in the best days of the British parliament.

Fluid Lightning.

WIFE.—What's the matter now, John.

HUSBAND.—Oh, that neuralgia and toothache near kills me.

WIFE.—Why don't you go to T. A. Huffman's and A. W. Grange's drug stores and get a bottle of Fluid Lightning, you know it cures all such things as toothache, neuralgia, headache, lumbago, earache, sore throat, etc. It gives instant relief.

Danger Traps.

Neglected colds are the fatal traps that ensnare many a victim beyond possibility of rescue. Take a cold or cough in time and it is easily conquered by by that safe and pleasant vegetable remedy, Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam. Asthma, Bronchitis and pulmonary complaints generally soon yield to its healing influence.

Rest and Comfort to the Suffering.

"Brown's Household Panacea" has no equal for relieving pain, both internal and external. It cures Pain in the Side, Back or Bowels, Sore Throat, Rheumatism, Toothache, Lumbago, and any kind of a Pain or Ache. "It will most assuredly quicken the Blood and Heal, as its acting power is wonderful." "Brown's Household Panacea" being acknowledged as the great Pain Reliever, and of double the strength of any other Elixir or Liniment in the world, should be in every family handy for use when wanted. "as it really is the best remedy in the world for Cramps in the Stomach, and Pains and Aches of all kinds," and is for sale by all Druggists at 25 cents a bottle. 14-12-1y.

THE USE OF DR. WHEELER'S COMPOUND Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya as food for the brain and nervous system is founded on well established chemical and physiological laws, since it is composed of elements entering the formation of these organs and capable of supplying them with nourishment. Great mental efforts, anxiety, excitement, worry, fatigue, blood poisoning from disease or impure air, excessive indulgence in habits that use up the vital powers, speedily interfere with the nutrition of the brain and nerves which preside over all the functions of the body, and sooner or later fatal consequences must inevitably result. In the Elixir we have a reliable remedy for nerve exhaustion and loss of constitutional vigor from these causes.

Butter Buyers

everywhere are refusing to take white, lardy looking butter except at "grease" prices. Consumers want nothing but gilt-edged butter, and buyers therefore recommend their patrons to keep a uniform color throughout the year by using the Improved Butter Color made by Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. It is the only color that can be relied on to never injure the butter, and to always give the perfect color. Sold by druggists and merchants.

Pimples and Blotches.

Call at T. A. Huffman's and A. W. Grange's drug stores and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is composed of Vaseline, Carbolic Acid and Cerate, and has never failed to remove Pimples, Blotches, Ulcerated Sores, Rough Skin. It cures when others fail. Try it.

Fact Stranger than Fiction.

It is a fact that Alonzo Howe of Tweed, had a fever sore that afflicted him for thirty-five years. Six bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters cured him, which he considers almost a miracle. It was but the natural result of the remedy restoring pure blood and perfect secretion.

Salt Rheum Cured.

Are you troubled with Salt Rheum, Rough Skin, Pimples or Canker Sores; if so go at once to T. A. Huffman's and A. W. Grange's drug stores and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. Price twenty-five cents It was never known to fail.

A Favorite Everywhere.

Wherever introduced Hagyard's Yellow Oil finds friends. It is the old reliable household remedy for external and internal use in all aches, pains, lameness and soreness of the flesh. A. L. Green, a prominent druggist of Belleville, says: "It is a great favorite here and has a good sale."

A Double Benefit.

James Moore, a prominent resident of Leamington, writes that he cured himself of Dyspepsia of a year's duration by one bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, and two bottles cured his wife who had been for years a sufferer from the same disease. He conscientiously recommends it to all suffering from similar troubles.

MANHOOD
HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!

We have recently pubished a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in his admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

CUPIDITY AND CRIME.

"Did I scowl, Nettie?" he asked eagerly. "Did you see me, dear? Then—then you were not absolutely engrossed in Mr. Burgoyne ?"

Something oddly exultant in his tone caused her to look round quickly with surprised bright eyes ; something in the handsome face made her drop them till the black lashes rested on the smooth skin that burned with a sudden blush. But Nettie was not easily taken aback ; despite that slight evidence of confusion, see answered cheerfully and briskly—

"I cannot understand your prejudice against poor Mr. Burgoyne. Between ourselves, I do not think his plays overbrilliant ; but he is one of our most popular authors, and could do anything he pleased for you."

"If he were Shakespeare himself, it would make no differenee," Vance said, fiercely· "If he would write another Hamlet for me, I would not thank him if he wrote for love of you."

The words were in the Bombaste vein; but the young man saw nothing absurd in them when he poured them forth with unfeigned and passionate earnestness, nor did Nettie, though her sense of the ridiculous was acute enough as a rule.

She was very far from laughing now—so far that, when he drew a little nearer, he saw the glitter of tears on the dark lashes, saw the red lip quiver in a vain attempt at speech. He had not made Nettie angry ; he had hurt her, which was far, very far from his wish.

"Forgive me, Nettie !" he cried penitently. "I was a brute, a wretch!"

"You were," Nettie agreed, with a sudden smile and disconcerting candour. "I shall not contradict you, Vance ; but

"And claim a prize ?" Vance interrupted, finishing the sentence audaciously. "I claim it now, Nettie ; and you will admit my claim."

So, from mistress and pupil, Nettie Clare and Vance Singleton became betrothed lovers, and, to their infinite content, found that the course of their love ran on smoothly from end to end.

Mrs. Clare heard the story the same night, and seemed well pleased to hear it, though she somewhat astonished the lovers by averring that she had seen it all from the first.

"You are all that I could wish for my Nettie, Vance. You know how good she is, how brave and loving and unselfish ; so I will not sing her praise now. You have a bright future before you. You love her, and will work hard for her sake. You are a gentlemen, such a one as Robert Clare's child should wed—so far, all things are in your favor ; but—there is always a 'but' in this disappointing world, my dear—there are your people, Vance."

She looked and spoke gently ; but there was a certain trouble in the kind eyes that were so like Nettie's, with the hopeful light quenched, and there was an earnest ring in the pretty soft voice.

"My people, Mrs. Clare !" Vance said, a little uneasily. "I thought we agreed, before this question arose, that I was to tread the path I had chosen alone, to win my laurels unaided, and mention them only when they were won. I think I will take the same course with Nettie."

"My dear boy '—the woman smiled and sighed together—her conscience and inclination were at war—"you do not know the misery such marriages may cause. When I married Robt Clare, I dfd not know that he had quarrelled with all his people for my sake ; but it was so—and, though "—with a little flush of pride in the remembrance, which for the moment made the worn face young and pretty—"though I know that to the hour of his death he never once regretted his choice, yet he felt the estrangement cruelly, as you may some day feel yours."

"Never !" Vance answered, in perfect honesty. "In fact, Mrs. Clare, the arguments that may convince other fellows don't touch me at all. Whom have I to quarrel with ? A step-father whose generosity I have so tired out that I think he would be glad to see me settle down as a shoemaker, a mother who would never quarrel with me in any circumstances, and who, meeting Nettie as my wife, will surely fall in love with her."

"And your sister ?" Mrs. Clare said, as he began to flounder in his speech.

He shrugged his shoulders in genuine indifference this time.

"Cristine will, I do not doubt, be disagreeable, as she invariably is ; it would hardly be worth while to consider her."

Still Mrs. Clare looked vaguely troubl-

"You were," Nettie agreed, with a sudden smile and disconcerting candour. "I shall not contradict you, Vance; but please tell me why?"

The question, the pained pleading of the bright eyes sparkling through the tears that he had brought there, set Mr. Singleton's heart throbbing wildly, and forced from his lips the words he did not mean to speak then.

"Why, the answer is a paradox, Nettie! I was harsh and rude and brutal to you, dear, because, best of all things in this world, I love you!"

The last words came out with an abrupt jerk, and were followed by a brief silence. Nettie gave her companion one quick startled glance, blushed violently, paused, and walked on rapidly.

He had to walk beside her in impatient silence for a minute or so; for they were not alone in the street, and he could hardly renew his love-suit till their fellow-pedestrians had passed by. Vance girded at the little restraint at the time; but perhaps it was well that it came. It gave him time to find words and shape his thoughts, and allowed her to recover from the shock of finding an easy-going every-day intimate transformed into an ardent and exacting lover.

At last, the intruders gone, he ventured to draw his companion's hand again within his arm and try to moderate her pace a little. He felt the slim fingers tremble in his clasp; she struggled to withdraw them, but so faintly that her lover drew a happy augury from the fact.

"Were you trying to outrun me, Nettie? Are you so angry that you cannot speak?"

She raised her eyes with an evident effort. Assuredly there was no anger in their shining depths.

"Are you sure, Vance?" she asked tremulously, with a troubled drawing together of the pretty pencilled brows that were such expressive features of Miss Clare's face.

"Sure of what, sweetheart?" Vance answered gaily—for she was his sweetheart now; he was sure of her heart as of his own, though as yet the decisive words were all unspoken.

"Sure that it is not a mistake, a fancy?" she asked, with a nervous smile. "Oh, you need not laugh, Vance! Such things

"Never!" Vance answered, in perfect honesty. "In fact, Mrs. Clare, the arguments that may convince other fellows don't touch me at all. Whom have I to quarrel with? He shrugged his shoulders in genuine indifference this time.

"Cristine will, I do not doubt, be disagreeable, as she invariably is; it would hardly be worth while to consider her."

Still Mrs. Clare looked vaguely troubled, longing to banish her doubts and consent for Nettie's sake, to see things through the rosy haze that shrouded them, but conscientiously bent on showing the reverse of the medal and laying all objections to the plan before her would-be-son-in-law.

"Then there is the other young lady, Miss Bruce. She is to make some brilliant marriage, Nettie tells me."

"She will be Lady de Gretton in six weeks' time—poor Nora!" said Vance, with heartfelt compassion for the girl whose splendid marriage would be barren of all the love and trust that would richly sanctify his own. "But Miss Bruce is my step-sister only—not even that indeed—she is my mother's husband's child."

"Hardly a close connection, I admit," Mrs. Clare said, smiling; "still she will be so very grand a personage——"

"Grand or not," the young man interrupted a little impatiently, "Nora is a thoroughly kind and simple-hearted girl. She is the one person I intend to place confidence in, for she is the one person on whom I can rely."

"But——"

"You said there was a 'but' in all things. I do not think there can be another to make protest with in this," he said, cutting her nervous half-hearted objections determinately short, and turning to welcome Nettie, who at that moment entered the room.

Perhaps Mrs. Clare was not, on the whole, very sorry to have her conscientious protests thus trenchantly disposed of. She was glad that her daughter should find a safe companion and protector in the dangerous path she trod with such innocent self-relying courage, glad to welcome Vance as a son, and relieved to find that the small circle in which her life was bound was to be enlarged, not broken, that they were still to form one family together.

"I always feared that some one would take Nettie from me," she said, with tearful gratitude, when the two young people laid their matured plans for the future before her. "I am thankful you are not a rich man, Vance."

"I wish I were a little richer for Net-

"Is it? Then I pity the people, first for being deluded, next for being undeceived—I am neither. It is not an idle fancy that I offer you, Nettie, but a real honest lover. It was not the actress that dazzled me, but the brave and loving daughter, who is the best and truest of all women in my eyes, the only wife in the world for me. Nettie, are you angry still?"

The question seemed to rouse her from a happy dream. She turned her radiant face round, and quite bravely and frankly, as Nettie Clare did all things, placed her little hand in his.

"Angry? No; I am so very, very glad! Is it shocking to say that, Vance? Because it is absolutely true."

She spoke with a nervous haste, half laughing and half crying, as her way was when strongly moved.

"Tell me a little more truth, Nettie. Say you love me."

"I love you!" She repeated the words with a sweet gravity, and then, with one of her rapid changes, began to laugh again. "I have, I think, loved you always—was it horrid of me, Vance?—but I thought you would never, never guess. I was always giving you lessons and finding fault and scolding; I thought you would look on me as a schoolmistress and——" child.

"Hardly a close connection, I admit," Mrs. Clare said, smiling; "still she will be so very grand a personage——"

"Grand or not," the young man interrupted a little impatiently, "Nora is a thoroughly kind and simple-hearted girl. She is the one person I intend to place confidence in, for she is the one person on whom I can rely."

"But——"

"You said there was a 'but' in all things. I do not think there can be another to make protest with in this," he said, cutting her nervous half-hearted objections determinately short, and turning to welcome Nettie, who at that moment entered the room.

Perhaps Mrs. Clare was not, on the whole, very sorry to have her conscientious protests thus trenchantly disposed of. She was glad that her daughter should find a safe companion and protector in the dangerous path she trod with such innocent self-relying courage, glad to welcome Vance as a son, and relieved to find that the small circle in which her life was bound was to be enlarged, not broken, that they were still to form one family together.

"I always feared that some one would take Nettie from me," she said, with tearful gratitude, when the two young people laid their matured plans for the future before her. "I am thankful you are not a rich man, Vance."

"I wish I were a little richer for Nettie's sake," poor Vance said, remembering rather ruefully that his wife's income would considerably outweigh his own; but the overplus would support her mother and sister; there was comfort to his self-respect in that thought.

"You are as rich as I wish you to be," Nettie said, with a joyous laugh. "and you will be the brightest of 'stars' by-and-by. Mother, I hope Vance will not want to hide us in a corner when the Duke and Duchess come hunting by-and-by."

It was all very pleasant fooling, and they were so evidently and fully content with the arrangement that he could not but be content and happy too. After all, he was young still; his earlier youth had been wasted, but time was on his side; he would redeem his manhood by hard and honest work. It was beginning life again, on a lower level perhaps, but beginning it with an earnest purpose and with Nettie by his side.

So all things arranged themselves; and coincidently with those gorgeous arrangements for Nora's wedding with which the fashionable papers were so busy their modest preparations were made. Many a time, while Nettie stitched and worked at the trim and dainty dresses she regarded with simple pride, she would laughingly bid her lover read the costly items of his step-sister's trousseau, as the florid millinery vocabulary set them forth.

"Satins and velvet, and lace and broche, and brocatelle and—— Oh, I cannot count up even the materials !" she said, looking up into his face with joyous laughing eyes. "What a happy girl she must be, Vance !"

"Poor Nora !" Vance answered a little bitterly. "She has made an excellent bargain ; but she is very far off from being happy."

"You think she has not forgotten Mr. Beaupre ; but, if that were so, she would not marry Lord de Gretton, surely !"

Vance smiled at her eager certainty. This girl of a lower world knew so little of the social sacrifices imposed as solemn duties on the ladies who despised her. Long since he had told her the story of Arthur Beaupre's love and death, and her warmest sympathy had been excited for the unlucky young pair ; but the De Gretton episode was to her altogether inconsistent and inexplicable.

"My dear Nettie, the whole thing was arranged for her; you do not understand," Mr. Singleton said, dismissing the subject thus summarily because he felt that all explanation would be wasted on his simple betrothed. "When girls have no fortune, they must marry, even if their hearts are dead. Nora has simply accepted a shelter and a home—things that are necessary even in romantic grief."

He rather liked the ring of this speech, and thought he had settled things in the most delightful prosaic and practical fashion ; but the very practical details stirred Nettie to renewed protest.

"A home, a shelter !" she cried, in a little glow of enthusiasm. "She need not break faith with the dead, then. Why. Vance, we could give her that !"

She looked so pretty with the generous flush, the earnest sparkle in her soft hazel eyes. She was, if they had but known it, Nora's better angel, pleading that this last avenue of escape might open to the doomed girl. But Vance had only kissed her, and tried to silence her with a rather forced jest—Nora had a home still; besides, what had they to offer her, compared with all that Lord de Gretten could give?

"But you will give her the choice, Vance," Nettie pleaded still, "when you see her, and tell her all? You will say also that she can find 'a shelter and a home' with us."

And, so pressed, he promised—and kept his word—to how little purpose the sorrowful sequel showed.

CHAPTER XVII.

It was not until two days before his marriage that Vance found time courage to fulfil his promise to Nettie, and pay his final visit to his step-father's house.

"Of course I run the risk of meeting that cad De Gretton, or worse still, of running against Cristine and my mother," the young fellow soliloquised, as he rapp-

"With work and love, you should be good and happy. Heaven grant that you may be both, dear Vance !"

Her step-brother stooped and kissed her, pitying the envied of all London with an intense and aching pity.

"I give you back your prayer, my dear kind Nora—Heaven make you happy !"

"No, no !" She clung to him with a sudden passion, a look of the wildest terror fliting across her white face. "Pray that I may be good, Vance ; that is all I ever dare ask now. Sometimes my head is so confused, I fear——" She stopped shert, startled perhaps by something in the young man's face, controlled herself by an effort, and went on quite calmly—"But you have something there, Vance—something you mean to show me—Nettie's picture, I hope.

He had two things—Nettie's picture and the little pearl ring—which looked truly absurd beside Lord de Gretton's diamonds. He presented the latter rather awkwardly enough, glad to get the ridiculous ceremony over. But Nora looked at it until the tears rose in the large gray eyes, and a softer expression than he had seen on her face since Arthur Beaupre's death came to it then.

If he had but spoken then, while with that pathetic break in her clear voice, she tried to thank him; if, in that softened moment, he had urged Nettie's prayer, he might have saved her even then ; but the golden moment passed, the opportunity slipped from him.

A carriage drove up to the door, and the servant announced Lady Olivia Blake. Nora became her proud self again. There was nothing for Vance to do but bow and withdraw.

Two days afterwards, Nettie Clare and Vance Singleton were quietly married at a little suburban church, with Mrs. Clare and Jenny for the only witnesses. Never was a more modest ceremony observed, never did happier pair join hands and hearts before the altar, or swear with more fervent faith to love and honor, to love and cherish, until death them should part. Mrs. Clare, looking a pretty picture of matronly dignity in the gray silk dress and dainty lace bonnet that Nettie's nimble fingers had deftly put together, shed a few natural tears, but was, on the whole, serenely happy and content, while Jenny absolutely forgot to be ill and fretful for one whole long day, so delighted was she with the dignity of her bridesmaid's duties.

And Nettie? Nettie, in her pretty white frock, wtth the orange-blossom wreath crowning her boyish curls, and the misty whiteness of her net veil hiding the shy sweet face—Nettie needed no splendour of point-lace, of sheeny satin, or of glittering jewels, to make her as fair a bride as the sun ever shone upon, though the items of her costume had been chosen

CHAPTER XVII.

It was not until two days before his marriage that Vance found time courage to fulfil his promise to Nettie, and pay his final visit to his step-father's house.

"Of course I run the risk of meeting that cad De Gretton, or worse still, of running against Cristine and my mother," the young fellow soliloquised, as he rapped at the door. "But I must see Nora, if it is only once again—must bid my dear old playfellow good-bye; besides, there is my promise. We must offer the hospitality of an attic to our peeress-elect."

But he had so little hope this hospitality would be accepted that he had actually brought his wedding-present with him—a cheap trifle of a ring—an absurd item in the future Lady de Gretton's present list, but still something bought with money he had earned. He smiled a little sadly, thinking how the old Nora would have appreciated such a gift.

He was lucky in the time of his coming. The servant told him that Mrs. Bruce and Miss Singleton were out, but that Miss Bruce was in; and Vance's heart leaped with pleasure as he sent in his card. But it was not the old Nora who received him; it was the same pale frozen creature who seemed to hold pity at a distance. Though she was perfectly composed and more beautiful than ever, there was something in her face yet which made the youg fellow's heart ache. She brightened a little at sight of him, and promptly questioned him as to his whereabouts and means of living, which last had by this time become a profound mystery to Mr. Singleton's friends.

"Mrs. Bruce is so anxious about you, Vance," she said, with a gentle earnestness; and the gray eyes lost for a moment the strained far-away look that was so infinitely sad. "I wish you could let her know what you are doing, and set her mind at rest."

"No harm, at least, Nora."

But, though the dress was muslin and the veil plain net, though Nettie laughingly protested that flowers should be her sole adornment, she did wear jewels, and jewels of no small value, after all.

The day before the wedding, the day succeeding Vance's South Kensington visit, she had received a large and heavy parcel by private hand. Opening it with eager curiosity—for Nettie's bridal presents had been but few—she saw an old-fashioned jewel-box mounted and clasped in silver. How well her lover knew that box! How clearly he saw what lay within, even before Nettie raised the lid!—the dark blue velvet slope, the moonlight glimmer of the three ropes of pearls. Nora Bruce was bidding good-bye to her old life indeed when she parted with the one possession Cristine had always envied her, the one possession of which she had been most innocently proud. They were her mother's jewels.

"Would you care to know, Nora?'

Vance crossed the room with the words, and stood by the tall velvet-draped mantel piece, looking down upon her as she sat in the low-backed chair, with the afternoon sun slanting in on the small dark head, the pale perfect face, the cream-white dress, and the slender crossed hands, on one of which was found a thousand dazzling reflections in her superb betrothal-ring. How stately she looked in her delicate, high-bred beauty—how different from his little every-day Nettie! And yet the young man thanked Heaven, in his inmost heart, that Nettie never looked like that.

"Nora, would you care to hear a very dull prosaic story—the story of my life as it is and it is to be?"

"Yes."

The answer was brief enough; but there was no mistaking the pleased alacrity of the assent.

"The story is for your ear alone. You will repeat it to no one, even if it shocks you, until I give you leave?"

"It will not shock me—your news is good," she said, eyeing the dark face keenly. "And of course I will promise. if you wish it; but your mother?"

"My mother shall know all in time, but not just yet. Listen, Nora, and I will tell you why."

She listened without one interruption while he told the full story of his life since he had left Nettleton; and even when he had reached the end she still sat with her great grey eyes fixed on his face, as though she were trying to read there something more.

"Are you shocked, after all, Nora?" Vance asked at last, a little hurt by her silence.

She looked up quickly then.

"No," she said, holding out both slim hands, and speaking with a sort of passionate intensity—"no; I am very, very glad. It is strange work, Vance; but it is work."

"And pretty hard work tooo!" he interrupted, with a slight grimace; but she did not seem to hear.

How a Wood Engraving is Made.

In wood engraving, the lines that are to ink the paper are left standing, while the parts between are cut away from the surface of the block, so that when an ink roller is passed over an engraving of this kind, it leaves all the lines tipped with a coating of ink, to be picked up by the sheet of paper which comes in contact with it. So, you will see, the wood-engraver must sink two lines in the block to make one line which will print. Of course, considering the hardness of the wood, and the delicacy required for the lines, this is very slow and tedious work. You may easily form some idea of how tedious it is, by placing a penny over any portion of an engraved picture, making a light mark around the penny with a black lead pencil, and then, by the aid of a magnifying glass, counting the lines within the circle.

You will see that your penny has covered more than one hundred lines; and then you must remember that at every place where the shading in the drawing which the engraver is engraving grows lighter or darker, he has to change the width of the line; for just in proportion to the thickness of the black line left between the two light ones, will be the "tint' or "color" of the corresponding portion of the printed picture. The changes are called by the engravers "stops." And where there are many of these, one square inch is a fair day's work.

I have spoken of a drawing, for the engravers always have a drawing to work from. Sometimes it is made upon the wood-block, but it is more frequently made by the artist much larger than the block on which it is to be engraved, and a reduced copy of it produced upon the block by photography. By this plan the artist can work more freely, and the engraver is enabled to have the large drawing in front of him, besides the reduced copy of the same which he is cutting into lines upon the block.

What is really momentous and all-important with us is the present, by which the future is shaped and colored.

The human intellect has had placed before it by Him who made it one object, and one only, worthy of its efforts, and that is truth. Truth, not only for the sake of any ulterior dignity, however high or holy, but truth for its own sake. We hope, we trust, we humbly believe, that truth will in the end be found to coincide with goodness, with holiness, with grace, with humility, with all the other noblest aspirations of the human spirit.

WOMAN GOSSIP.

Our Young Women.

The Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, of New York, says: A primal defect in our social life is the notion that girls have nothing to do. Boys are brought up to some employment, but girls to none, except where pecuniary want compels them, The family that is "well off" has busy boys and idle girls. The young man after eating his breakfast, starts off to his daily occupation, and returns at the close of the day. The young woman after eating her breakfast, usually at a late hour, saunters in quest of amusement. Novels, gossip, shopping for unnecessary trifles, dressing in three or four different costumes, formal visiting, drawing (if able), and lounging are the elements of the young woman's day. In the evening, by way of recreation (?), she goee to the theatre or a ball.

This unequal discipline of the sexes is the basis of innumerable evils. It makes the girl careless and selfish, it turns her mind to personal adornment and other frivolous matters as the great concerns of life; it takes away the sense of responsibility, and produces feebleness and disease in her physical constitution. It also prevents her from asserting her true dignity in the eyes of man, for the life of utility is alone dignified. Women, thus brought up in indolence, are looked upon by men very much as were the women of the old dark times of the world, as mere playthings, expensive toys, not as counsellors or friends, Marriage in such circumstances belongs to a low, sensual plane, and the girl is prepared neither in body nor mind for responsibilities which marriage implies. Her training, however, or lack of training, makes it necessary for a long purse to supply her. Economy, helpfulness, co-operation—these are not coming to the new household from this vain source. Dresses, drives, entertainments—these will form the staple demands on the young husband. Accordingly in the city life, where this class of young women is chiefly found, a young man is (greatly to his hurt often) kept from marrying by reason of its costliness, whereas society should be so ordered that marriage would help the larder, not beggar it. We want simplicity of life, frugality, modesty, industry, and system. If we would introduce these virtues into our higher society, we should diminish the despair, envy, jealousy, dissipation, and suicides of the single, and the bickerings, wretchedness, and divorces of the married.

Let our girls have as regular daily duties as the boys. Let idleness be forbidden them. Let recreation be indeed recreation, at proper times and in proper quantities. Let us open more numerous with enviable advantages of physique in the way of teeth, eyes, hair, form, and complexion. She has the ability as well as her sterner companion of discerning the laughable side of a subject and cracking a sly joke thereat. European education has greatly improved and instructed the gentler sex of Hawaii, but it must be confessed that it has signally failed to curb the exuberance of their spirits, or tame the impetuosity of their sentiment, or convert them into straightlaced prigs, they whose natures are as boisterous as the bounding billows of their sea-swept rocks.

"CHRIST ON CALVARY."

The New Picture by Munkaczy to Be Exhibited in Paris.

The subject of Munkaczy's new picture is "Christ on Calvary." This solemn and touching picture, says the Paris correspondent of the London Times, which will be exhibited at Easter, will certainly produce as great an impression in the artistic world as "Christ Before Pilate." The two pictures will be exhibited alongside each other, and the public will be able to follow the sequence of the master's artistic thought. The figure of "Christ on Calvary" is slightly larger than "Christ Before Pilate."

The painter depicts the scene where the Saviour has just expired. The sky is black with clouds and streaked with lightning, and beyond the horizon at Jerusalem the veil of the temple is seen, rent in twain. Jesus Christ, pale in death, and inclined forward, has given up the ghost. The centurion has dropped in terror beside the cross. Mary, the mother, on her knees, is bathing in tears her son's feet. Mary Magdalene, her golden hair hanging loosely over her shoulders, her face in her hands, is also on her knees before the cross. John, overwhelmed with grief, is on the other side, and a Jewish woman looks on, a sad spectator of the crucifixion.

The terrified crowd is descending the hill. Some Roman cavalry look on ashamed. One of the executioners, a man of brutal mien, shouldering the ladder and axe in hand, is carried along by the multitude. The three crosses are in the foreground at the right extremity, and the rest of the magnificent canvas is filled by the fleeing multitude. The sky is magnificent and sombre, and the lightning illuminates the dark clouds that hang over the mountains, the valley and the scarcely visible town. One sees, amid the confused movement of the crowd, that it is bewildered and terror-stricken. The group at the foot of the cross is of wonderful beauty and feeling, and the general color is harmonious and striking to a degree which even Munkaczy himself has never before attained. ments—these will form the staple demands on the young husband. Accordingly in the city life, where this class of young women is chiefly found, a young man is (greatly to his hurt often) kept from marrying by reason of its costliness, whereas society should be so ordered that marriage would help the larder, not beggar it. We want simplicity of life, frugality, modesty, industry, and system. If we would introduce these virtues into our higher society, we should diminish the despair, envy, jealousy, dissipation, and suicides of the single, and the bickerings, wretchedness, and divorces of the married.

Let our girls have as regular daily duties as the boys. Let idleness be forbidden them. Let recreation be indeed recreation, at proper times and in proper quantities. Let us open more numerous avenues of female industry, and let every woman be clothed with the dignity of a useful life. Can such a reformation be brought about? My dear madame, begin it yourself. Rule your household on this principle. Have courage to defy fashion where it opposes. Be a bold leader in this reform, and you will soon see a host of followers glad to cease from the old folly.

Respectability of Work.

As a rule, the ladies who scorn to earn money do not scorn to take it as a gift, says a lady writer. Their natural protectors gone, they will quarter themselves on any relative who will open his house for them—a cousin, a cousin's cousin—any small plea of relationship is sufficient. They will actually go a-begging in a delicate and dainty way among friends, and receive anything anyone chooses to give. And it is well known to every one that any offer of marriage to one of them which promises a comfortable home will be accepted. This is the best end to be hoped for, but if the girls are not attractive, they pass from one long-suffering relative to another until they are "brought into" old ladies' homes or placed in genteel institutions, where they still boast with their latest breath of their gentility, and are as proud of never having earned a penny as they should be ashamed of it. Certainly there are fewer such women in the world today than there were twenty years ago, but there are still enough to shame good, independent girls out of efforts in which they should be encouraged, with the old bugaboo story that "ladies never work for a livelihood." Ladies do, ladies will, if there is any need of it; for a true lady would rather do anything honest than be an object of charity; and, in a womanly way quite consistent with all feminine charms, rejoices in the possibility of independence.

The group at the foot of the cross is of wonderful beauty and feeling, and the general color is harmonious and striking to a degree which even Munkaczy himself has never before attained. This picture is certainly one of the most perfect which have been produced for many a year, combining all the majesty of the classic schools with the modern and personal stamp that makes it of the ninteenth century.

In Camp at Suakim.

A letter from Suakim to the London Daily News says: Our camp is gradually assuming a business like appearance. Every hour of the day cavalry, infantry, and, at last, the artillery, may be seen parading and drilling. The intrenchments have been strengthened. Pickets and vedettes are regularly thrown out, a precaution which no Egyptian ever dreamed of. The ambuance department is getting into working order; and the heliographers are learning the elements of their art. Gangs of laborers are leveling the ground, filling up malodorous ditches, and preparing additional camp room. One of these gangs is wholly composed of convicts, who work with heavy fetters on their legs. They have been condemned for robbery, murder, and rebellion. One sometimes sees a chained convict lounging about at his ease in the bazaar, or in the tumble-down alleys of the island quarter. His fetters are a sufficent guarantee against his running away, and his gaolers feel easy of him. When he is tired of sight-seeing, he goes straggling home to prison, or perhaps his custodian may come out to fetch him in which case they discuss the news of the day as they go along. The convicts take life as easily in camp as out of it. It was amusing to watch one of them as he carried a basketful of earth to one of the ditches. He bore the basket on his head. It leaked copiously down the laborer's back. The laborer was far too lazy to stop and repair the loss, and he reached his ditch with an ounce or two of rubbish, which he heaved in with as much deliberation as if it weighed a hundred-weight.

Yesterday afternoon, shortly before sunset, the whole camp was turned out to oppose an imaginary enemy. It would have been interesting to see how the men Women and Poetry.

In every age, says the London Academy, women have been excelled in poetry by men. Coleridge used to say that a woman's head was generally over ears in her heart; and if the heart be the seat of poetry, women ought, on hypothesis, to be the best poets. But to employ Mr. Robertson's simile, it is experience filtering through the heart that gives us great poetry; and of the deepest and widest experience women, in the nature of our social life, know less than men. They are often endowed with a larger capacity for joyousness, and sometimes with a deeper well of potentiality for suffering, but they see less and feel less than the other sex; and because they live less they must be less great where greatness depends largely on great experience. Mr. Robertson urges other reasons for the poetic inferiority of women, and prominent among these is the old fashioned doctrine of the domestic mission of women which makes children the best poems that Providence meant to produce. This is not begging the question. True, it may be that no less than sixty women are now living who write verse that would have made, in some sort, the reputations of as many men as many years ago. But to the clear question—Have women been excelled by men in poetry?—no amount of chivalry will enable a critic to give any but a blunt and barbarous reply.

Hawaiian Beauties.

The Hawaiian lady is described as a voluptuous, good-humored, soft-hearted, sweet-tenpered, tender-eyed, merry-making creature, of a fascinating form and most languishing, longing, admiration-seeking, yet demure, cast of countenance, of their art. Gangs of laborers are leveling the ground, filling up malodorous ditches, and preparing additional camp room. One of these gangs is wholly composed of convicts, who work with heavy fetters on their legs. They have been condemned for robbery, murder, and rebellion. One sometimes sees a chained convict lounging about at his ease in the bazaar, or in the tumble-down alleys of the island quarter. His fetters are a sufficent guarantee against his running away, and his gaolers feel easy of him. When he is tired ef sight-seeing, he goes straggling home to prison, or perhaps his custodian may come out to fetch him in which case they discuss the news of the day as they go along. The convicts take life as easily in camp as out of it. It was amusing to watch one of them as he carried a basketful ef earth to one of the ditches. He bore the basket on his head. It leaked copiously down the laborer's back. The laborer was far too lazy to stop and repair the loss, and he reached his ditch with an ounce or two of rubbish, which he heaved in with as much deliberation as if it weighed a hundred-weight.

Yesterday afternoon, shortly before sunset, the whole camp was turned out to oppose an imaginary enemy. It would have been interesting to see how the men and officers would have behaved under a surprise. The general, however, did not put them to the test. He wanted to see how they could get themselves into position, and as they knew what was coming, they got through their work creditably. Within a very short time after the sounding of the alarm the long line of entrenchments bristled with rifles; the cavalry were drawn up in readiness for an imaginary pursuit, and the gunners stood manfully by their Krupps and Gatlings. The general and his staff then rode the entire circuit of entrenchments, and the show was over.

The Arabs.

Only those who have been to Suez can realise the physical strength of the Arab. Natives on the look-out for a job at Suez and other places will carry weights of merchandise few Englishmen can tackle. An officer of a P. and O. mail steamer says that there are few Arabs—"stevedores"—that would find any difficulty in carrying loads of from three to four hundred weight each. One Arab, well known to all on board the crack mail-ship, has carried as much as seven hundredweight. The Arab donkey-"boys" at Alexandria and Suez run behind their "fares" to the end of the journey without stopping, and will return at once if requested. It is customary for about half a dozen "boys" to have as many as twenty donkeys under their charge. A "boy" frequently takes up an ass under his arm and carries it some little distance. They name the animals Lefroy, Lamson, Miller, and so forth.

WHY DAN DRANK.

BY EMILY CLEMENS PEARSON.

As Captain Holden opened his barn door very early one summer morning, a forlorn young man arose from the hay loft and stammered :

"Got any work for me, Cap'n?"

"You want work? Well, well, we'll see. Go into the house and get breakfast, and when the six mule team comes back you can rub and feed 'em and start off with another load." He well knew Dan's ability when not under the influence of drink, for he had often employed him.

Dan started for the house, but felt no appetite. His head ached to bursting, and he trembled nervously. As he entered the house he met kind Mrs. Holden, who, seeing his condition, invited him to sit down and she would bring him a cup of strong coffee.

'Thank you kindly, ma'am, I would like a cup of coffee," replied Dan.

"Shall I get yon something to eat?"

"Thank you, I cannot eat," he replied.

"O Dan!" exclaimed the lady, as she took a seat opposite him at the table, "you are killing yourself. Why don't you stop drinking?"

"I know I ought to, ma'am. I've wasted thousands of dollars just to paint the drunkard's sign on my face, and to fill me with aches and pains."

"Why don't you turn over a new leaf, and stop at once?"

"I did stop once," said Dan, "and signed the pledge, and didn't drink a drop for four years and six months. Then something happened to discourage me, and I took to drinking worse than ever. I had the delirium tremens and suffered horribly; no tongue can tell how much."

"But how came you to break your pledge?" asked the lady.

"Let me go back and tell about my life. I never have had any home, or anybody to help me. My mother died when I was three years old, and my father when I was four years. I grew up in the stables with the hostlers, and learned to drink when I was a youngster. I don't know what possessed me. Perhaps it was in the blood.

"When I was seventeen years old my uncle died and left me ten thousand dollars. Then I gave up and spent more than half of it before I took a rest. When I saw Mary McKenzie, I grew sober, for I loved her. She promised to marry me. I was twenty-four, and had a good salary as head hostler in a large livery stable.

"I thought the world of Mary. She was rosy, merry, and smarter than lightning. I could kiss the ground she trod on.

"I said to her one evening as we went to walk :—

When next Mrs. Holden saw him and asked him how he was getting along he replied :—

"I'm all right ma'am. I haven't touched a drop for a month, and I've had two or three chances a day. I thank you for speaking to me in time. God is kindly helping me."

A year has passed and Dan's good record is going on.

How Intelligence Progresses.

From the lowest to the highest creatures, intelligence progresses by acts of discriminations; and it continues so to progress among men, from the most ignorant to the most cultured. To class rightly—to put in the same group things which are of essentially the same natures, and other groups things of natures essentially different—is the fundamental condition to right guidance of actions. Beginning with rudimentary vision, which gives warning that some large opapue body is passing near (just as closed eyes turned to the window, perceiving the shade caused by a hand put before them, tell us of something moving in front,) the advance is to developed vision, by exactly-appreciated combinations of forms, colors, and motions, identifies objects at great distances as prey or enemies of this or that kind, and so makes possible adjustments of conduct for securing food or evading death. That progressing perception of differences and consequent greater correctness of classing constitutes, under one of its chief aspects the development of mind, is equally seen when we pass from the relatively simple physical vision to the relatively complex intellectual vision—the vision through the agency of which things previously grouped by certain external resemblances or by certain extrensic circumstances come to be more truly grouped in conformity with their intrinsic structures or natures. Undeveloped intellectual vision is just as indiscriminating and erroneous in its classings as undeveloped physical vision. Instance the early arrangements of plants under the heads trees, shrubs, and herbs; size, the most conspicious trait, being the ground of distinction, and the assemblages formed being such as united many plants extremely unlike in their natures, and separated others that are near akin. Or still better, take the popular classification which puts together under the same general name fish and shell-fish, and under the sub-name, shell-fish, puts together crustaceans and mollusks; nay, which goes further, and regards as fish the cetacean mammals. " 'All right,' said she, blushing with a bright smile.

"Then I said, 'There is $750 which I have drawn from the bank (and I gave her a package), get what housekeeping things we want. The house is ready, No. 10, Park street."

" 'All right,' said she, taking the package, smiling and blushing, 'you're a jewel, Dan.'

"Yes, yes, I know it," replied Dan, "but the poor thing only lived a month after she went away, and I forgave her."

Assessing the Damages.

A few weeks since a railroad collision on one of the roads leading out of New York killed, among others, a passenger living in an interior town. His remains were sent home in good shape, and a few days after the funeral the attorney of the road called upon the widow to effect a settlement. She placed her figures at $20,000.

"Oh, that sum is unreasonable," replied the attorney- "Your husband was nearly fifty years old?"

"Yes, sir."

"And lame?"

"Yes."

"And his general health was poor?"

"Quite poor."

"And he probably could not have lived over five years?"

"Probably not, sir."

"Then it seems to me that two or three thousand dollars would be a fair compensation."

"Two or three thousand," she echoed. "Why, sir, I courted that man for ten years, run after him for ten more, and then had to chase him down with a shot gun to get him before a preacher. Do you suppose that I'm going to settle for the bare cost of shoe leather and ammunition?"

"I suppose He would," said Dan. Mrs. Holden saw with clear perception that when one makes apology for wrong doing one seldom gives an honest excuse, and she said:—

"Dan, you give your dreadful trial as excuse for drinking, but it is not the right excuse. Back of all you loved liquor, and you took to drinking because you loved it. Isn't that so?"

"I'm hit! It's just so," said Dan.

"You are not alone, Dan," said the lady, "in framing an excuse for evil doing. Farmer Jones says he needs liquor to help him in haying time. He loves liquor, and it is always 'haying time' with him."

"Tim Carroll, teamster, gives as his excuse that he is so pestered with rheumatism that he cannot do without it. A false reason; it poisons his blood, stiffens his muscles and sinews. His simple explanation should be 'I love it.'"

"George Lewis, blacksmith, has found out that his well is foul, and the water does not agree with him, and so he drinks cider and brandy or something alcoholic. Mark my words, hard drinkers deceive themselves with pretences. You say you went back to wickedness because you were disappointed in love."

"I own up. If I hadn't loved liquor I'd have left it alone," said Dan.

"Now Dan," said Mrs. Holden, "if you ask God to help you He will surely do it, and you can stop drinking. Will you ask Him?"

"I will," and Dan having finished his coffee, with firm resolve went out to his teaming, praying mentally, "O God, please help me!"

He had more of the courage and bearing of a man than he had had for many a day.

"Quite poor."

On a medium-sized table stands a bowl of soap and water. The partners in turn blow bubbles, trying three times, amid the efforts of the others to annoy and embarrass them. The one whose bubble remains unbroken the longest is entitled to a prize.

Some prizes are painted plush shaving and handkerchief cases, painted picture frames, Russian leather toilet cases, blotters, plush boxes of writing-paper, and others are tasteful and useful mementoes. At a recent party all bore the date of the evening in gilt letters. The prizes are sometimes expensive jewellery. There is always a special prize given to the one whose bubble has lasted the longest of all. A judge selected before the blowing announces the decisions. After all have blown their bubbles, the prizes are drawn by numbers. Then come the usual dances and a supper.—New York Sun.

French Juries.

The first business of the assizes in France is to draw the juries. A panel of forty jurymen is summoned, and the prisoners are all brought up one by one into the President's room to see the drawing done. For each trial fourteen names are drawn by lot—that is, twelve to form the jury and two others to act as substites in case one of the jury should fall ill. These substitutes are sworn like the rest, and they sit in the jury-box, but take no part in finding the verdict, unless they are required to fill up vacancies. This system of having a couple of extra men on a jury is evidently more sensible than the English plan of empanelling just the number needed.

OVER THE CATARACT.

The Current Leading to Death's Whirlpool, and How a Prominent Man Avoided It.

(Albany, N. Y., Journal)

Among the hundreds of thousands of tourists who have visited Niagara Falls and stood in awe before its miracle of power, there is, probably, not one who has failed to notice the large stone building which stands directly opposite the cataract and a short distance below the railroad suspension and cantilever bridges. This buildingis known to all as the "Monteagle House," and it has been a popular place of resort for hundreds of travellers during many years. Nearly every place in America possessing unusual natural scenery has its legend, and a most tragical one is located on the site where this stone building now stands. Monteagle, a young chieftain of the Miami Indians, loved the daughter of a mighty chief among the Iroquois. His wooing, unlike that of Hiawatha, was not received witn favor by the father chief, and hence he was compelled to resort to the usual method of abduction and flight. The escaping pair were overtaken on the banks of the Niagara where the hotel now stands, and rather than submit to capture the lovers cast themselves into the cataract below. Their bodies were subsequently found at the mouth of the river clasped in an embrace which even the cataract could not sunder. Many occurrences since that time have tended to make the Monteagle famous, and it was with surprise that it was learned a short time since that the edifice was to be entirely transformed, re arranged and refurnished for the benefit of tourists, and especially invalids.

Feeling that this is a subject in which the public would take unusual interest, especially as the National Park question is being so strongly agitated, a representative of this paper visited Niagara Falls yesterday and learned the following facts:

Dr. W. R. Ccumb, who is about undertaking this important task, is a gentleman who is well known throughout the land, having successfully practiced medicine in the city of Buffalo for nearly thirty years. He is exceedingly well preserved, though nearly 60 years of age, while his energy and ambition are something wonderful. In conversation with the reporter he said:

"I anticipate great success here, although a few years ago I should not have dared undertake it, for I was then what people call 'a dead man.'"

"How was that, Doctor? How did it occur?

"It was brougbt about, as such troubles usually are, by mental and physical depression, arising out of troubles and reverses. The mind has a remarkable effect upon the body, and when one meets with misfortunes financially, or in any other form they are apt to be accompanied by misfortunes physically. Such, at all events, was my case. I was irritable, restless and feverish. I had heavy and irregular pulse, my food did not assimilate, my heart would throb violently and then stop and the fluids I passed were profuse, high-colored and thick, with Highlands. It is not a common thing for a crowned head to write books, and when they do so every one is at once curious to know what is written. The other books written by the Queen, published some years ago, had a very large sale and were a good deal commented upon at the time, but they have long since gone out of notice. They were written in a kindly spirit and were carefully edited by a good literary man, but not much more could be said about them.

The Queen and her family have given evidence of a good deal of taste for literature and fine arts. Her Majesty alone has indulged in book writing, but her daughters are credited with much love of literature, and they have all, or nearly all, painted so as to excite considerable admiration. The sons except the youngest, have given evidence of more taste for manly sports and vigorous exercise than for fine arts. Prince Albert was certainly a man of fine literary attainments, as many of his published speeches plainly show, and it is said that he took a great deal of fatherly pains to cultivate the taste of his children in that direction.

The Western Floods.

What terrible devastations are visiting the unfortunate inhabitants of the Western States, especially along the Mississippi and the Ohio! "How was that, Doctor? How did it occur?

"It was brought about, as such troubles usually are, by mental and physical depression, arising out of troubles and reverses. The mind has a remarkable effect upon the body, and when one meets with misfortunes financially, or in any other form they are apt to be accompanied by misfortunes physically. Such, at all events, was my case. I was irritable, restless and feverish. I had a heavy and irregular pulse, my food did not assimilate, my heart would throb violently and then stop and the fluids I passed were profuse, high-colored and thick with deposits. I was obliged to abandon my practice, and also to suspend pushing my valuable invention, known as 'Crumb's pocket inhaler,' for the cure of catarrh and asthma."

"How long did this continue?"

"For about two years. I realized that I was quite sick but like everyone else I felt it would only be temporary. The majority of people drift along the way a man might who knew nothing about these great Falls [illegible] floating with the current. It is so easy to drift, you see. At the end of a year, however, my condition became simply horrible. I had a serious irritation of the throat, a hard, sluggish pulse, a swelling of the limbs and numbness extending down the thighs. I had terrible night sweats and my urine was loaded with albumen and acids. I called in several of the most skillful physicians but I continued to sink rapidly. I was the victim of Bright's disease of the kidneys, and I looked forward with almost certainty to a few weeks of terrible agony and then – death!" * * * It is painful to describe this experience and it is sufficient to say that I am entirely well and that my life has been saved by means of Warner's Safe Cure, which arrested the disease, effected a cure and has preserved me in health ever since."

"Then it was this remedy that saved your life, doctor?"

"Yes, I can testify from a grateful heart that it is invaluable for men or women who are depressed by reason of disappointments and reverses; who are losing flesh and strength and who must find relief or a fatal termination awaits them. I prescribe this great remedy to my patients constantly and the wonderful effects I observed in my own case I see repeated in their experiences. It is the that makes me certain I can endure the care of the great Sanitarium I am about to establish."

The Western Floods.

What terrible devastations are visiting the unfortunate inhabitants of the Western States, especially along the Mississippi and the Ohio! Between the tremendous snow blockades and avalanches, the great floods, and the irresistible cyclones, the property and the lives of the people are in almost constant jeopardy. Each season appears to bring with it its own peculiar misfortunes. Not many weeks ago the daily papers told harrowing stories of the great snow falls and their results. Last week the account was of nearly two thousand persons suffering loss, and many houses being swept away by a few hours cyclone, and the probabilities are that during the entire season such visitations will often come. Now, every morning we have additional sickening news about the terrible floods. What havoc those floods are creating, and how impossible it appears to be for the inhabitants to escape them!

All these things should be suggestive reading to the Canadian who may feel indications of "the Western fever." If his Canadian home may not have about it all the fascinations his fancy has painted for "the West," it certainly has not any thing like the drawbacks and dangers. The man who cannot manage to live comfortably on a fair Canadian farm need not expect to add much to personal comforts by moving West.

IMPORTANT TESTIMONY.—Liebig, an authority in matters of health and things which are good to eat and drink, thus wrote:—"Sherry and strong cider are more quickly intoxicating than the generality of wines, and they have a peculiar influence on the gastric juices of the stomach."

Men's lives should be like the day's, more beautiful in the evening; or like the spring, aglow with promise; or like the autumn, rich with golden sheaves, where good works and deeds have ripened on the field.

"Then it was this remedy that saved your life, doctor?"

"Yes, I can testify from a grateful heart that it is invaluable for men or women who are depressed by reason of disappointments and reverses; who are losing flesh and strength and who must find relief or a fatal termination awaits them. I prescribe this great remedy to my patients constantly and the wonderful effects I observed in my own case I see repeated in their experiences. It is this that makes me certain I can endure the care of the great Sanitarium I am about to establish."

Tennyson Enraged.

Tennyson passes most of his days at Farringford, surrounded by the lovely and romantic scenery for which the Isle of Wight is noted. He spends on an average six to eight hours a day in his library engaged in literary work. Orders are always given that he shall not be disturbed except for most momentous reasons and he never is; for the members of his family and his servants think his manufacture of a line of quite as much importance as the creation of a new world—an opinion which, it is needless to say, he fully shares. Perhaps if his wife—she was Emily Shellwood—were dying she might venture to have him informed of the fact during his hours of work. She would not be willing that his sanctuary should be profaned by any less cause, because she religiously believes that William Shakspeare is scarcely the equal of Alfred Tennyson. If she were capable of forming or cherishing any other opinion, it is doubtful if he would live with her. She probably preserves her connubial place by the most rapturous worship and the most absolute effacement. There have been some awful instances of invasions of Tennyson's library while he was in the throes of composition, owing to the relaxed vigilance of his domestic dragons. The scenes that followed can hardly be described. The poet, in his wrath, raved like mad, threatening to destroy the intruder, and literally tearing the little hair he has left. The very idea of interrupting Alfred Tennyson in his hours of divine inspiration seemed to be monstrous beyond belief, a hideous crime eternally unpardonable. He has never, I believe made any physical assault upon an unfortunate intruder, though it would have been supposed, from his furious demonstrations, that he could be appeased with nothing short of homicide.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

—Mr. S. McLaughlin is doing a rushing business in his new premises. Fair day his store was crowded to its utmost capacity. He has been giving some rare bargains lately and he assures us there are more to follow. Look for his announcement next week.

—The late Conference of the C. M. Church required that during the year a sermon on temperance be preached in all the churches of the Dominion. The Rev. M. L. Pearson, pastor of the C. M. Church in this town, will therefore take "Temperance" as his subject next Sunday evening.

—At a masquerade carnival held in the skating rink at Markham, Ont., on Tuesday evening of last week, Fred Lafferty, printer, formerly of Napanee, obtained 2nd prize, scarf pin, for costume. He appeared as "Brudder Gardner, President of the Lime Kiln Club."

—On Sunday last a gang of men were engaged all day in making the bridge, which was broken by the late accident in North Fredericksburgh last week, more secure and firm. The accident was caused by a broken rail, not a broken wheel as previously stated. The bridge is now in a safe condition. The loss to the G. T. R. Company by the accident will be about $15,000.

—The event in the new Opera House next week will be the return, by special request, of the Tavernier Comedy Co., of which Miss Ida Van Cortland is the leading light. The Company is one of the best travelling and is deserving of large audiences. The bill for Wednesday night is "Under the Gaslight," and that for Thursday is "Two Nights in Rome." Reserved seats are now on sale at J. J. Perry's drug store.

—After a painful illness of erysipelas and other disorders extending over several weeks, Mary, wife of Robt. Denison, Esq., passed away on Wednesday. The deceased lady was kind, affectionate and a most devoted christian. Her loss will be felt elsewhere as well as in the home circle. —The "Palace Grocery" is the pretentious name of Mr. D. L. Paul's establishment at Bath, but we understand it is deserving of the title. It is neat, well stocked and prices are satisfactory. See advertisement elsewhere.

—Fair day passed off quietly, though there was a fair display of "drunks." The cattle show consisted of a yoke of oxen and a couple of cows. The March fair has evidently degenerated into a day for horse trading and carousing. This should not be.

—We would call the attention of the residents of Bath and surrounding country to the announcement of Mr. C. Cummins in another column. Mr. C. is one of the most enterprising dealers in the county and carries a stock which for assortment, quality and price, compares favorably with the largest houses of Kingston and Napanee. He is noted for square dealing. You cannot do better than give him a call.

—While crossing Lucas' bridge, North Fredericksburgh, on Tuesday last, Mrs. Nelson Unger was thrown from a cutter and sustained a compound fracture of the nose. Portions of the bone protruded so much that they had to be removed. Dr. Clark dressed the wound and entertains hopes of it healing without disfigurement.

—As Mr. T. D. Creighton, son and daughter were driving home from town, Wednesday evening, the horses took fright at a locomotive at Mooney's crossing and ran away. Mr. Creighton was thrown against a barbed wire fence and dragged a considerable distance. The barbs cut him terribly about the head and body, inflicting serious wounds, which required the attendance of Dr. Clark, of Napanee. His mouth was torn back to the angle of the lower jaw. Several stitches had to be put in the wounds. Fortunately the other occupants escaped injury, though Mr. Creighton, jr., had his clothes badly torn by the barbs. Many friends will wish Mr. Creighton speedy recovery.

The "Boss" and his "Wicked Pardner."

According to the Mail report of A. H. Roe's speech in the Legislature he said that he had sat in a hotel sitting-room on Sundays in Napanee and saw men go into the bar sober and come out drunk.

There can be no doubt this is true. Roe was up to a couple of months ago interested in the Brisco House and had a "wicked pardner." Perhaps it was this "wicked pardner" who was dealing out the grog and raking in the dimes while the saintly Roe sat on guard in the sitting-room against a surprise from the Inspector. To hear him tell the story, though, no one who did not know the man, would suspect he would be a party to so infamous a transaction. Yet it is within the range of probability that he was. The only hotel sitting-room he was in the habit of sitting in was the one mentioned above. Mr. Roe should not expose himself in this way. It is not sharp—and everybody knows he aims to pose as a very sharp man.

Notice.

All accounts due Dr. R. B. Clark, pertaining to the drug store, must be paid at once. As the business has changed hands the affairs must of necessity be closed up immediately. Do not delay and cause trouble on both sides.

Lennox License Commissioners.

Hon. John Stevenson, John Webster, Esq., and James Daly, Esq., have been appointed License Commissioners for Lennox under the Ontario License Law. The board met on Monday and elected Hon. John Stevenson, chairman, and Mr. Daly, secretary.

Post Office Burglarized.

Mr. Owen Robbins' store, Ameliasburg township, was broken into Thursday night of last week and a quantity of boots and dry goods stolen. The thieves ransacked the post office, and cut open one of the mail bags, in which they got a registered letter containing $5. They also made an attempt to blow the safe open with gunpowder, but failed. After visiting several stables they took Mr. W. C. Delong's horse, cutter, and harness, which was found under an hotel shed at Rednerville next morning.

Change of Firm.

Mrs. R. J. Perry has purchased the drug business of Dr. R. B. Clark and the business in future will be carried on under the style and name of Perry & Co. A complete line of new goods are now arriving and will be added to their present stock. They buy for cash and customers may depend on getting everything at bottom prices. Their motto is "small profits and quick returns," and by close attention to business and square dealings they hope to merit a large share of public patronage. Give them a call and be convinced.

St. Mary Magdalene's Church.

On the 23rd inst.—Midlent Sunday—a most interesting event will, for the first time in the history of the parish of Napanee, take place in this church. The Bishop of Ontario has consented to hold an ordination here, and no doubt our English Church friends will be gratified at his Lordship's visit for such a purpose. It is hoped that on the evening of the 23rd the Bishop will accede to a request that he will deliver his second lecture on "Agnosticism," which has attracted so much attention in the Capital.

On next Sunday evening the Archdeacon purposes continuing his series of sermons on "The Church and her Services."

Personals.

—Mr. M. B. Ingersoll is home from the North West.

—Mr. Thos. A. Allen, V.S., of Brockville, was in town this week.

—See the heavy tweeds McAlister is selling for 50c. per yard.

—On Wednesday we were afforded the pleasure of a call from Mr. F. H. Priest, of Bath.

—Mr. A. B. Dunning of Toronto is spending a few days in town visiting friends.

—Dr. J. H. Bedford, of Picton, was in town on Monday. He is talking of resuming business here.

—Mr. W. H. Miller, of Newburgh, gave us a call yesterday. He contemplates going into business in Boston.

—Mr. W. H. Miller, of Newburgh, gave us a call yesterday. He contemplates going into business in Boston

—Miss Mary L. Allison left yesterday for Port Huron, Mich., on a few months' visit to her sister, Mrs. J. M. Richardson.

—Mr. J. Rudd Perry leaves town on Monday next for the Rocky Mountains where he has a contract on the C. P. Railway.

—Mr. John Braidy of Centreville and his sister, Miss Maggie Braidy, of Napanee, left on Monday last for Bay City, Mich.

—Mrs. J. Lamond Smith who has been visiting at Mr. Alex. Smith's for some months returned on Monday to her home in Toronto.

—N. M. T. means no more trouble for the ladies in ironing shirts. See that your husbands, uncles and brothers buy the Iron Frame Linen Lined Shirts, sold only by J. F. McAlister.

—Mr. Thos. Jamieson left town Sunday morning for North Gore on a visit to his brother Mr. Jas. Jamieson, who is seriously ill of consumption. Mr. Jamieson returned home yesterday morning.

—Mr. Chas. Brownlee has returned from Toronto and again presides over the bibulistic department of the Cornell House. As a compounder of pleasing decoctions he is an expert, and an all round decent fellow. Many friends welcome him back.

—Mr. Robert Martin of Richmond leaves next week for Manitoba. He will take with him a carload of horses for sale there. He will remain there this summer on his farm. His brother, Mr. Charles Martin, has resided all winter in Manitoba.

—Mr. Samson Davy of Wilton left on Wednesday for Palermo, Halton County, where he has purchased a farm, he having disposed of his property in this county. His family will follow him next week. We regret the removal of so good a resident of the county. We can most heartily recommend him to the people of Palermo.

—We had the pleasure of a call a few days ago from Mr. W. D. Timmerman of the C. P. R., who is in town the guest of Mr. K. J. Strong. He was stationed last year at Calgarry, at the foot of the Rockies, but has been transferred to the eastern division—the Ontario & Quebec line. He will be given a station on this line in the course of a month or so. He is an experienced railroader and thoroughly reliable.

Round About Us.

—Messrs. Rathbun & Co., Deseronto, have purchased the schooner "Agnes Hope," from Port Hope parties.

—Rafael Garratt, formerly of Belleville, recently died at Lima, Peru, leaving a wife (Peruvian) and three children in destitute circumstances.

—The hotel-keepers of Kingston have decided to take out licenses from both the Ontario and Dominion. They will pay $15 fee to the Dominion Inspector under protest.

—The engineers surveying the branch road from Yarker to the K. & P. Railway have found a route which will avoid engineering difficulty at Yarker, where it will be difficult and expensive to construct a permanent bridge and ap-

Meeting of the General Committee.

At an adjourned meeting of the committee held in the town hall, Adolphustown, on the 27th ult., to make further arrangemeats with reference to holding a centenary celebration Mr. Parker Allison occupied the chair and Mr. J. B. Allison acted as secretary.

Mr. J. J. Watson moved, seconded by Mr. W. H. Ingersoll, that Mr. L. L. Bogart be elected President, also that Mr. A. L. Morden, Mr. Parker Allen and Mr. D. W. Allison, M.P., be elected Vice-Presidents, which was carried.

Moved by Mr. H. H. Allison, ssconded by Mr. G. M. German, that Mr. S. W. Trumpour be appointed Treasurer, which was carried unanimously.

Moved by Mr. P. D. Davis, and seconded by Mr. R. Dorland, that Messrs. A. C. Davis, J. J. Watson, J. B. Allison and W. H. Ingersoll be appointed corresponding secretaries and that they be instructed to communicate with the Wardens and Reeves of the adjoining counties asking co-operation in the celebration movement.—Carried.

Moved by W. H. Ingersoll, that two committees be formed to present our claims for aid to the Dominion Parliament and Ontario Legislature, now in session, to erect a monument in the United Empire Loyalist burying-ground, said committees to be composed of the following persons, viz: To the Legislature—Messrs. Striker, G. D. Hawley, Elias Clapp, Jacob H. Roblin and J. B. Allison. To the Dominion Parliament—Messrs. M. W. Pruyn, J. S. McCuaig, Parker Allen, J. J. Watson, P. D. Davis.

—The hotel-keepers of Kingston have decided to take out licenses from both the Ontario and Dominion. They will pay $15 fee to the Dominion Inspector under protest.

—The engineers surveying the branch road from Yarker to the K. & P. Railway have found a route which will avoid engineering difficulty at Yarker, where it will be difficult and expensive to construct a permanent bridge and approaches over the Napanee River. It is understood that a much easier line can be secured by starting from the Napanee and Tamworth Railway north of Colebrook and running across the Napanee River near Petworth, and thence north-easterly to the Kingston & Pembroke at Hartington.

—On Tuesday last as Mr. George Holland, of Kingston, was on his way to dinner he was struck by a pilot engine on the K. & P. Railway and knocked senseless. He was injured internally, but not fatally.

—Tuesday morning while a cow was being taken from Verona to Kingston on the K. & P. Railway the animal jumped from the train near Harrowsmith.

—Mr. P. Madden; who resides near Brewer's Mills, killed a garter snake on Feb. 18th which measured 3½ feet. Thirty hours after being decapitated the snake was found to be alive.

—A row occurred at Mrs. Hennessy's, Cataraqui, on Monday night last. A young man named Little, of Kingston, was stabbed in the neck and breast.

—Over three hundred pieces of tweeds and coatings to select your spring suit from at McAlister's. Mr. Williamson gives universal satisfaction as a cutter.

McGregor's Speedy Cure.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver, and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the market, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to T. A. Huffman and A. W. Grange's drug stores and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents and one dollar.

Crushed by the Cars.

A little son of John Spinks, Toronto, had his foot crushed by a G. T. R. express train some time ago. Two doctors attended him without benefit, and amputation was proposed, but Hagyard's Yellow Oil was tried, which gave prompt relief and effected a speedy cure, even removing all stiffness of the joint.

Mr. Parker Allison occupied the chair and Mr. J. B. Allison acted as secretary.

Mr. J. J. Watson moved, seconded by Mr. W. H. Ingersoll, that Mr. L. L. Bogart be elected President, also that Mr. A. L. Morden, Mr. Parker Allen and Mr. D. W. Allison, M.P., be elected Vice Presidents, which was carried.

Moved by Mr. H. H. Allison, sseconded by Mr. G. M. German, that Mr. S. W. Trumpour be appointed Treasurer, which was carried unanimously.

Moved by Mr. P. D. Davis, seconded by J. J. Watson, that Messrs. Elias Clapp, J. H. Roblin, J. B. Allison and the mover and seconder be appointed a committee to present a claim to the County Council at its next session for aid to the monument fund.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. H. H. Allison, seconded by Mr. J. J. Watson, that we adjourn to meet in this place on the 12th of March at 2 p.m. —Carried.

Every member seemed determined to make, on the 16th of June, one of the grandest demonstrations ever held in this part of the Dominion.

International Throat and Lung Institute.

For the treatment of Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Laryngitis and Consumption in the first and second stages, and all diseases of the nose, throat and lungs by the aid of the Spirometer, invented by Dr. M. Souville of Paris, ex-surgeon of the French army.

Head office, London, Eng. Branches, Montreal, Toronto, Boston, Detroit and Winnipeg.

Physicians and sufferers may try the Spirometer free. Consultation free. If unable to call personally and be examined, write for list of questions and copy of "International News," published monthly. Address, 173 Church street, Toronto, or 13 Phillips' Square, Montreal.

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting of teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery, and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 14-12-1y.

For all Ages.

The aged, debilitated and infirm will find renewed vigor and strength by taking Burdock Blood Bitters. The young hastening to early decay will also find in this revitalizing tonic a remedy worth trying.

DOMINION LICENSE ACT.

NOTICE

Is hereby given that under the provisions of "The Liquor License Act, 1883," every application for a license to sell liquors by wholesale or retail, shall be by petition of the applicant to the Board of the District in which the license is to have effect, praying for the same.

Every petition for an hotel, saloon or shop license shall be filed with the Chief Inspector of the District wherein the license is to have effect, on or before the

FIRST DAY OF MARCH.

In the case of an application for an hotel, saloon or shop license by a person who is not, at the time of the making of such application, a licensee under any Act of a Provincial Legislature, or as to premises which are not then licensed, the petition must be accompanied by a certificate signed by one-third of the electors entitled to vote in the polling sub-division in which the premises sought to be licensed are situated.

Dated this 19th day of February, 1884.

REFORM MASS MEETING.

SPEECHES BY D. W. ALLISON, M. P. AND JOHN CHARLTON, M. P.

The C.P.R. Concession Discussed—Magnitude of the Obligation Imposed on the Dominion.

In consequence of a heavy snow storm Friday night the roads were again blocked on Saturday last, which prevented a very large attendance at the Reform Mass Meeting. Notwithstanding the bad roads, however, a large number of farmers forged their way through the snow, and these together with the townspeople made an audience of about five hundred. The chair was taken at 2 p.m. by Mr. S. Gibson, President of the Reform Association. Upon the platform were Mr. D. W. Allison, M.P. and Mr. H. M. Deroche, ex M.PP. The chairman after explaining the cause of the dissapointment the previous Saturday, and expressing regret at the inclement weather which prevented many of the electors being present, introduced

MR. D. W. ALLISON, M. P., who was received with enthusiastic applause. He stated that this was the first opportunity he had had of thanking the people of Lennox for having chosen him as their representative in the House of Commons. Had the weather not have been unfavorable on the day of polling day he believed his majority would have been close upon 100. He had now been in the House seven weeks and he believed it his duty to give an account of his action there. He did not take a prominent part in the debates because it was not judicious that a new member should occupy time that could be better used by representatives of greater experience. He had, however, not been idle, as he was on several important committees where the real work of the session was done. He had also voted on several questions, and he purposed giving his hearers to-day his reasons for the votes he had cast. His first vote was in favour of the Criminal Evidence Bill, for which Sir John Macdonald also voted, but the important votes he gave were on the resolutions giving $30,000,000 to the C.P.R. On every occasion that a vote was taken on this question he voted against the grant, and he did so because no sufficient reason was given why this money should be voted. Only two reasons were advanced in its favour. The Minister of Railways said the Company were able and willing to complete the road on the original contract, but in order to have the entire work completed within two years the Government recom-

Chief Inspector,
License District Lennox and Addington.

The Minister of Railways said the Company were able and willing to complete the road on the original contract, but in order to have the entire work completed within two years the Governmentrecommended advancing the 30 million dollars. The alleged reason for this haste was that there were other lines of railways crossing the continent and it was expedient that the C. P. R. should be built before these other lines attracted to them all the trade. He (Mr. Allison) did not think this a good reason. The Union Pacific has been in operation over fifteen years and has its traffic established and the Northern Pacific was already completed. If it were true that, as Sir Charles Tupper had stated, the C. P. R. would be a shorter and better road on account of its situation and would attract business, he did not see what great advantage would be derived by the people of Cadada in having its completion hurried at the expense of 30 millions ex[illegible]. Then there was another reason advanced by the Government. They said it was necessary to be completed at once in order to secure speedy settlement of the North-West. Now he did not see anything in this argument because the road was built and in running order from the stake [illegible] Landing to the foot of the [illegible]ains which covered the country. [illegible] him $[illegible] for settlement. The result [illegible]osed the grant, for though call[illegible]rea[illegible], it was admitted on all sides [illegible] money, when once it left the Dominion Treasury, would never be re[illegible] He then proceeded to show [illegible] each constituency. There [illegible]e 211 constituencies in the Dominion and the allottment to each, were [illegible]ame population, would be $140,000, but as the Ontario constituencies [illegible]re much larger—in many cases double—than those in the Maritime Provinces, British Columbia and Manitoba, Ontario had to bear the greater portion [illegible] the burthen—almost half—and

THE SHARE OF LENNOX

[illegible]ess than $200,000. He believed if a by-law had been submitted to the people of Lennox voting even half this sum to the C. P. R. it would have been voted down, therefore he thought it his duty as their representative to vote against the grant and he did so. (Loud applause.) The disposition of people was to look at public matters too much in the abstract. Some of the people's representatives at Ottawa talk about millions as they would thousands of dollars or less. Now, to give his hearers an idea of the

he had made a simple calculation. Thirty million dollars, he said, would buy four counties like Lennox. It represented 937½ tons of silver dollars, which would require 937 teams to draw; this would form a procession allowing 30 feet for each team, 5¼ miles long. The $30,000,000 also represented 30,000,000 bushels of wheat at $1 per bushel, to move which it would require 75,000 teams, making a procession 4,261 miles long. If his hearers were to stand and watch it pass at the rate of fifty miles a day it would occupy 87 days. Was it in the interests of the people of Lennox that I should vote to give away this enormus sum? He thought not and therefore did not do it. (Applause). But he had

ANOTHER REASON FOR OPPOSING THE GRANT

The company had already received a much larger sum of money from the Government than was spent on the work. What would you say, he asked, if a contractor building a barn for you after receiving the full account of the contract and only completing a small part of the work, should ask you to lend him half as much as the whole on the security of the work done? It is not likely you would grant the request. (Applause.) He then proceeded to show from the statement of Mr. Stephen, President of the Co., (charging the company with cost of survey), that they had already received $51,159,268 more than they expended on the railway proper, and in the face of this they wanted 30 millions more! He thought the people of Lennox would endorse his action in voting the refusal of such a preposterous request. (A voice, "we do"). But apart from the dollars and cents view of the case there was

A LEGAL ASPECT.

The man who was the leading advocate of the Company in the House was no less a person than Sir Charles Tupper, and it was shown that he had no right to sit in the House. As an evidence of this the House witnessed the spectacle of Sir Tupper moving resolutions and making speeches but not daring to vote on any question. He, Sir Charles, had not given a vote on any question during the entire session, and now to make his presence in the House legal, Sir John Macdonald had introduced a bill amending the Independence of Parliament Act, which practically meant the whitewashing of Tupper. This act was equivalent to Sir John Macdonald passing a law stating that theft was not illegal to relieve a man found guilty of that crime. After some further remarks of a general character, the speaker took his seat amid applause.

MR. JOHN CHARLTON, M. P., on being introduced was loudly cheered. He is a gentleman of pleasant appearance, his enunciation is clear and his matter is well arranged. After explaining the cause of his not being able to keep his engagement of last Saturday, owing to the snow blockade, he congratulated the people of Lennox on having so intelligent a representative as Mr. Allison. He (Mr. A) had adopted a capital plan of impressing upon the people the MAGNITUDE OF MILLIONS.

He highly approved of holding meetings of this kind at a time when there was no election pending. The people were not now under the pressure of political excitement, and could weigh camly what they heard. Though he appeared before them as a Liberal, he knew he was not addressing Liberals only, but the people of Lennox. He was glad to see so many present. He was glad to see so many ladies present. He was glad to see so many ladies present. He was glad to see so many ladies ment, and could weigh calmly what they heard. Though he appeared before them as a Liberal, he knew he was not addressing Liberals only, but the people of Lennox; and what he would say he hoped would be accepted as coming from a man who was perfectly conscientious in his statements, and he would gladly accept correction if wrong. In the outset he reviewed the struggles of the Liberal party and the great reforms brought about by them. These formed the Liberal record, which comprises responsible government, the settlement of the clergy reserves, the questions of represenation by population, voting by ballot, economical expenditure, a pure election law, and simultaneous elections. The record of the Conservatives started with an outrage on the principle of representation by population, by the unduly large representation given in the House of Commons and the Senate to British Columbia and Manitoba; and it had been ever since. The annual expenditure had increased during their tenure of office from $14,000,000 to $31,000,000 per annum, for $16,000,000 of which increase they were directly responsible. A part of their record is the Pacific Scandal, an outrage such as no other party in any country has as a legacy. In that deal the Government sold a charter for money with which to corrupt the electorate, but they had since eclipsed that act by selling the Government to a company. They had been guilty of jobbery. They sold timber limits to favourites at prices which enabled these men to make fortunes by disposing of them next day. They had attempted to set aside our constitution—the British North America Act. They have gerrymandered the constituencies of a Province, and now they purpose passing a franchise law which provides for revising barristers from whom there is no appeal. When that is passed they

EXCEPT TO FIX THE LIBERALS.

(Laughter). This was but a portion of the record of the Conservatives. It afforded a striking contrast to the Liberal record. (Applause). He then proceeded to deal with the tariff, which word he explained merely meant a schedule of taxes. If this tariff was levied merely for revenue purposes to cover cost of government it was a good thing; but if used for the purpose of creating monopolies in a country—as the present tariff was designed to do—it was a highly improper thing. Now when this tariff question is being discussed by our opponents they always try to make it appear that Liberals are free traders. This is misleading. While all true Liberals believe in the principle of free trade they recognize that here in Canada we require money to carry on the Government and public works, and believe in a tariff sufficient only for this purpose and levied to give encouragement to those industries natural to the country. The present tariff was devised to benefit the few at the expense of the many, and among the evils in its wake was over-production. Already the cotton industry had experienced this. In the United States protection had caused over-production years ago. Millions of money had been locked up in unprofitable iron manufactures, called into existence by a high tariff. There were now in the United States blast furnaces [illegible] had pledged themselves to improve the condition of the artisans, spent $427,000 last year in to come here and overstall the labor market. He well remembered Sir John Macdonald moving an amendment during the existence of the Mackenzie Government deprecating the emigration of 39,000 Canadians to the United States during the five years previous and attaching the blame to the fiscal policy of the Government. He (Sir John Macdonald) thought this alone was sufficient grounds for the people to depose the Ministry. Well the people turned Mr. Mackenzie's Cabinet out. What was the result?

THE EXODUS.

Why, during the past five years the American statistics, the same authority which Sir John quoted against Mr. Mackenzie, showed that no less a number than 401,000 souls had left Canada and taken up residence in the United States. The correctness of these figures were now disputed by the Conservatives because they are not favorable to their side, but of course the statistics were all right when they were used against Mr. Mackenzie. The fact, however, remains that there is a great exodus. The majority of the residents of Dakota are Canadians, and our people are found in large numbers in northern Michigan and Minnesota. These people are of the flower of our country and should have peopled Manitoba, had they not been driven elsewhere by oppressive land regulations. Returning to the tariff question he said that to hear the Tories now talk you would be led to believe that there were no manufactories in the country till the N. P. was discovered.

"HAD YOU NO FACTORIES IN NAPANEE BEFORE THE N. P.?"

he asked. He showed that the manufactories of the Dominion had attained large proportions under a 17½ per cent. tariff and that their condition during depression was much better than those in the United States under protection. When the people here were complaining of hard times in 1877-78 they were not experiencing by half as hard times as those in the neighboring Republic. The hard times there developed the tramp nuisance which Canada did not experience to anything like the same extent. It is true new factories have opened since 1878, but will anyone say that with the return of good times here and in the United States our manufactures would not have attained fully as great progress under the old tariff. He asked any manufacturer who uses iron and coal as raw material if the high tariff has improved his business. He admitted there were hard times under Mr. Mackenzie's Government. There had been a great civil war in the United States which brought into existence there a fluctuating currency which encouraged speculation and extravagance, the result of which was financial collapse. Canada was at once effected by it, because of the intimate business connection between the two countries, and this together with two bad harvests caused depression of business here. The wonder is that the depression was tided over so well, and it would not have been had it not been for the economy exercised [illegible] how apparent that Mr. Mackenzie's plan for the construction of the railway was the correct one. His scheme was for the Government to proceed with the construction of the prairie section of the road as far as the Rocky Mountains, and to build branch lines as the necessities of the country demanded them. The line to the foot of the Rockies, 2,000 miles, would have cost $40,000,000. When a company could have been found willing to complete and operate the road this portion of the line could have been given as a bonus. By this scheme there would be no locking up of the land from settlement, no monopolies, and the road would not have cost the country the enormous sum which he would presently show it has cost. After the fall of Mr. Mackenzie's ministry and Sir John took the reigns of Government he announced that he would continue the construction of the road in the same way by means of Imperial credit, but failing to obtain this credit, he entered into private negotiations with the present syndicate which resulted in a contract being signed in direct contravention of the law which provides that the Government shall shall not award any contract for an expenditure over $10,000 without having first advertised for tenders. Parliament was hastily summoned and the contract was laid on the table, all duly signed, and only waiting ratification of Parliament to be put into execution. It will be remembered how amazed were the people at the bargain this Syndicate had made:—They were to get 706 miles of the best portion of the road, built at a cost to the country of $28,000,000; $25,000,000 in cash and 25 million acres of the choicest land of the North-West; a monopoly of the carrying trade, exemption from taxation, &c. Capitalists were at once struck with the liberality of the Government, and the result was that another offer was made by a new company for $9,000,000, less. Though this tender was also too high we said accept it—it is a saving of $9,000,000; but the Government would not do this. They alleged that the second syndicate was bogus. When this statement was made the second syndicate made a deposit of $1,000,000 as evidence of good faith, and when this was done it was found that the first syndicate had not put up a dollar. Yet, notwithstanding, Parliament following the lead of the Government ratified the original agreement. Why, he asked, did not the Government accept the tender of the second syndicate, and if they were bogus, the Government would be the richer by the deposit forfeited. That they did not do this was evidence that they even believed this syndicate in earnest. The whole thing was born in sin and fostered in iniquity. (Applause). He enumerated the large grants provided by the contract, and showed how the money had been divided in the purchase of a half-dozen large roads in Ontario and Quebec. The syndicate now came before Parliament and demanded $30,000,000 more. On the C.P.R. proper they had only expended $29,000,000, while they had received in cash and lands $60,000,000; but in the face of all this, Parliament,

AT THE DICTATION OF THE GOVERNMENT, voted the money asked. Why the Government urged the granting of the money he did not know, if it was not that they felt themselves completely in the grasp of the company. He believed there was something behind all this. There were grave rumors afloat. It is said Cabinet Ministers are partners in the contract. He did not wish to make any charges, but he had his suspicions that all was not right. So outrageous did the first bargain appear to even one of the Government's own supporters, (Hon. William McDougall), that he was led to exclaim that the Government must have been either "drunk, fools or bought." He showed the way the company's stock had

Farmers of Lennox & Addington.

The Directors of the Co-operative Warehousing Co. of Napanee,

Having chosen me as their Manager, I would say to all whom it may concern, that the storage of grain can be obtained on as favorable terms as heretofore, or there will be a purchaser of grain, Mr. A. N. Diamond, who has formerly proved himself one of the most liberal and satisfactory buyers that we have ever had dealings with (or other buyers if they wish to avail themselves of the opportunity.) Having obtained the services of Mr. Diamond as an experienced salesman at a moderate commission, farmers can have their grain shipped and sold to the Company, any Bank or other responsible person whom they may choose whereby they can obtain the advantage of the prices of the best markets with the least possible cost of charges, and there will be no more moving of stored grain into neighboring storehouses, contrary to your expectations and wishes and contrary to any understanding ever made with the Company or the late Manager that I ever heard of. Of his determined motives and objects I leave yon to form your own opinion.

THE RAILROAD TATTLER

A Mechanical Detective Invented by a Methodist Minister.

A Scranton despatch in the New York Times says: A mechanical contrivance, invented by a Methodist minister, and now in use on the railroads centering in this city, for the purpose of checking the manner in which freight trains are run by the employes, has recently attracted a good deal of attention, and been vigorously denounced by railroad men. The claim is made by the employers that some such thing was necessary to prevent the deceptions practiced upon the companies by the crews running freight and coal trains faster than schedule time to make up for the unnecessary delays at the various stations. The officials allege that no matter how faithfully a conductor and engineer may promise not to run faster than fifteen miles an hour, there are times when they will disregard all obligations and run as fast as thirty miles an hour to make up time squandered with their cronies at some of the stations along the line. The invention already alluded to makes it impossible for railroad men to practice any such deception. It is a simple piece of mechanism constructed much on the principle of the "tape" that checks off the condition of the stock market. It is wound up like a clock, locked within a box, and placed in the caboose, where it is geared to the axle of the car. On a large sheet of stiff paper, marked into small squares, a pencil or tracer keeps moving with the train and records the revolutions of the axle, the delay made at any given point, the number of jolts and jars sustained on the trip, and where they occurred, together, with other facts going to make an accurate record of the journey. The record is laid befors the superintendent, who sees at a glance how any particular train was run, and acts accordingly. It is claimed on the part of the companies that the irregularity of running coal and freight trains and the "soldering" of the men at the stations, as well as their method of making up for lost time, have in the past been prolific of many serious accidents, resulting in much loss to railroad property in wreckage, as well as in wear and tear. With the "tattling machine" at work in the caboose, recording every throb of the locomotive with the precision of a shorthand reporter, this will be impossible. But "the tattler" is not liked by railroad men. They consider it not only a nuisance, but a blunt warning on the part of the companies that their men are untrustworthy and cannot be relied upon.

An Electrical Exposition in Philadelphia.

Some time during the coming fall Philadelphia will hold what it is hoped will be the most important exhibition of electrical machines and methods so far convened anywhere. Some very novel and startling events will mark this display of electrical power. It is proposed to place an electric light of 100,000 candle power in the bed of the Schuylkill River. This is to show how torpedoes and other warlike instruments can be detected before they do damage by exploding. The developments of electrical science as applied to daily necessities are simply marvelous. A vast industry has thus been created in the last few years involving tens of millions of dollars. It has so far been found impossible to procure trained experts to supply the demand for electrical machinery. In the classification adopted the different groups will consist of: First, apparatus for the production of electricity; second, electric conductors; third, measurements; fourth, applications of elec-

The Latest Smuggling Dodge.

A carriage drove furiously down the Cunard dock in New York, and a red-headed man bounced out. "Is this the Cunarder?" he asked breathlessly. "Yes, sir," replied a customs official. Down came the red-headed man's trunk off the driver's perch, and together they carried it, with his valise, aboard the steamer. "When does she sail?" demanded the red-headed man of a passenger pacing the deck. "In a few days," returned the passenger courteously; "she has just come in." "Great Scott!" roared the red-headed man, "isn't this the outgoing boat?" It was explained to him that he had made a mistake in the day, and the courteous stranger invited the red-haired man into his room to partake of some refreshment. Half an hour later the red-headed man bade his friend adieu, with many kind wishes for their better acquaintance. Five hours later, in New York the red-headed man and the courteous stranger sat gloating over the valise full of laces, watches, gloves, and the like, which the former had brought from the ship, and which the customs officials had never thought of examining, as he had not come in on the steamer.

Presence of Mind in a Dog.

The Boston Journal says, Elmer Wier, aged ten, while skating at a mill pond in Salem, Mass., ventured out too far on the thin ice, near the lower sluice way, where there is a powerful current, and fell through. A Newfoundland dog, who had followed the little fellow to the shore, at once perceived the lad's danger, and ran to his assistance. The boy, in the mean time, had been drawn under the ice. The dog made a large space of open water, and diving quickly, brought the boy to the surface, dragging him thence to the shore. Some men in the vicinity who witnessed the accident attempted to rescue the lad, but were unable to reach him on account of the thinness of the ice, and he would have been drowned but for the dog. The animal was a waif recently adopted by the family.

They tell a capital story in the Temple of ex-Chief Baron Pollock, that one who wished him to resign waited on him, and hinted it, suggesting it for his own sake, entirely with a view to the prolongation of his own valued life, &c. The old man arose, and said, with his grim, dry gravity, "Will you dance with me?" The guest stood aghast as the Lord Chief Baron, who prided himself particularly upon his legs, began to caper about with a certain youthful vivacity. Seeing his visitor standing surprised, he capered up to him, and said, "Well, if you won't dance with me, will you box with me?" and with that he squared up to him, and half in jest half in earnest, fairly boxed him out of the room. The old Chief Baron had no more visitors anxiously inquiring after his health and suggesting his retirement.

The Bradlaugh Case.

Bradlaugh has been again elected to Parliament and again expelled by a very large vote of the members of the House of Commons. As he has now been four times elected by the people of Northampton no doubt can remain but it is the wish of the majority of the people to have him as their representative in Parliament, and as he has been more than four times refused, the right to take his seat among the other representatives, there is now a direct and unmistakable issue between Parliament and the people in regard to Bradlaugh's case. The man is a well known and blatant infidel, and when he first came to the House, he raised an objection against taking the ordinary Christian oath before taking his place with the other members. Had he not foolishly raised this objection of his own accord it is quite probable he would have been allowed to take his seat without objection from any one. He chose to raise a storm, however, and it will not subside again when he chooses. There are undoubtedly other infidels in the British House of Commons, but they did not flaunt out their standard when they sought admission to its precincts ; nor were any of them so coarse and repulsive in manner and habit as Bradlaugh.

The great question on the one hand is, Shall a man notoriously an infidel be allowed to sit and take part in making the laws of a nation professedly Christian, and especially shall a man of that stamp have his full voice in the laws to govern a state Christian Church? On the other hand the question is asked with equal earnestness, Shall a nation acknowledging the right of freedom of thought to all its people on all religious questions undertake to judge of any man's belief and to deprive any citizen of his full rights as a citizen because of the belief he may profess? Mr. Gladstone, though one of the most religious men in public life in England, favours the admission of Bradlaugh on the broad principle that every man shall enjoy his full rights of personal opinion on such questions, but he is in hopeless minority in the Parliament that heartaly acknowledges his leadership on all great political issues. Years may pass yet before the question is settled that has been raised in the Bradlaugh case, but the probabilities are that the doors of Parliament will yet be opened to men of all creeds, or of no creed, providing they are otherwise unexceptionable.

Chinese Superstition.

If they were not superstitious, the Chinese would not be anything. Every commonest act seems to be done according to some mode described by the ubiquitous astrologers or soothsayers.

You can not take a walk along the Bund without encountering over and over again illustrations of this national tendency. Joss sticks will be burning aboard the sampens, or the snapping of fire crackers right at your elbow in midwinter will nearly carry you off from your feet. Inquire what it means and you will be told that an effort is being made to "drive Joss away." Fear of the devil seems to more the character of Chinese religion than love of God, and when these ignorant dwellers on the water experience

Important to Ruptured Persons.

The Excelsior Rupture treatment was introduced to the American people several years ago in such a manner as to completely secure the confidence of the whole nation. The mode of introduction was by furnishing the remedy to those afflicted with Hernia in any of its various forms and collecting no pay until a permanent cure was effected. In this way the treatment gained a world-wide reputation on its own merits, never failing to cure any reducible Hernia. The Company has at the solicitation of thousands placed the remedy on sale by all druggists, both wholesale and retail, in the United States, Canada and England. In this way bringing it within the reach of all classes at a trifling cost compared with the benefits which are derived from the use of the treatment. Flax-Seed.

The evidence produced to establish the superior claims of FLAX-SEED EMULSION COMPOUND as a remedy for Nervous exhaustion and all its symptons is unquestionable. The large and increasing demand is almost entirely due to its own merits. We do not place it in competition with patent medicines or secret remedies, as we furnish the formula and can show that it consists of a superior combination of phosphorus, with the fat-producing properties of the Flax-Seed. During the past six months over FOUR THOUSAND BOTTLES have been dispensed in the city of Ogdensburg, N. Y., and county of St. Lawrence, where it is manufactured, and the universal verdict is that it is the best NERVE TONIC, BLOOD ENRICHER, and PURIFIER ever produced. We solicit investigation as to the reputation of the remedy where ever it has been used.

See advertisement in another column, and ask your Druggist for circulars containing remarkable cures.

rant dwellers on the water experience some accident they promptly resort to means of driving his rather satanic majesty back into the water whence he came. One of the most curious of the notions popularly entertained (and one at which the Chicese are fond of pointing as evidence of their superior reverence for that which is literary) is a scrupulous preservation of any paper which may have writing upon it. It this paper must be destroyed, it is solemnly consigned to the flames; but the custom is to preserve all bits thus written upon. Letters are always kept in the household filed away for future reference; and as Chinese letters consist of long strips of paper, it is customary to paste all the letters of a single correspondent together.

A Remarkable Case.

An inquest was held recently at Belfast on the body of a person who for many years has been known as John Coulter, but who, on dying on Sunday from the result of injuries accidentally received, was discovered to be a woman. Evidence was given to the effect that for years she had worked in the employment and Ontario laborer at Belfast quays, to erect a monunine years ago she got married to a woman who was employed of the inquest, and deposed that the Legislaceased was her husband; that they Elias been separated for the past six years. account of the drinking habits of the deceased, whom she throughout described as her husband. At the time of their marriage the deceased was a farm servant in the employ of the witness' father. The evidence went to show that as far as could be traced the deceased had always worn men's clothing, and had been engaged in men's work. The death was the result of injuries sustained by falling down-stairs on Sunday last while she was in a state of intoxication. The woman who had been married to deceased undertook to inter the remains of her so-called husband.—St James' Gazette.

An observant negro says: "De man who takes up the moas sidewalk am not allus de pussan ob de moas consequence. A 15 cent drunkard wants mo' room in dis world dan de judge of de supreme court.

Among the singular circumstances of the late terrible disastrous floods at Cincinnati were the suffering of many from the absence of water to drink, and for cooking and other household purposes. Of course the muddy waters flowing everywhere about were not fit for such purposes. The floods became so high that the engines of the city water works had to stop and the ordinary supplies failed in consequence. There was also the want of the ordinary water supplies felt by the fire brigades.

An American paper says:—The permanency of official life in Canada has been recently brought out by a little circumstance that occurred in Western Ontario a few days ago. This was the meeting together in Brantford of three government officials, viz: Judge Jones, Sheriff Smith and Register Shenston, who celebrated their 31st year in office, their appointments having been made on January 21st, 1853, during Lord Elgin's adminstration. Had these offices been under our government, in that period, three or four hundred men would have had a chance at them.

The prospects of the future meat market are excellent, and Ontario farmers, especially, should make careful note of the fact. The London Telegrayh, an excellent authority, states that in Europe the meat demand is something over eight million tons per year, and the home supply not a great deal off seven million tons, leaving nearly a million tons to be supplied from elsewhere. Then, in England, especially, as wages kept increasing so increased the demand for the more costly meat food. These supplies must be drawn from America, and it is said that in the United States the population has grown more rapidly than the meat supply, so that in Boston, New York, and the other large cities meat is to-day commanding nearly the same price as in England. The demand yearly increases and prices continue to advance. Our farmers may just as well avail themselves of the opportunity.

Ontario has been largely dependent on considerable loss each year. Last year it cost the Dominion $252,808 to run the road, and the receipts derived were $146,-170, leaving a deficit balance of $106,639 to be met out of the public treasury. It is doubtful if the Island railways can ever be made to pay very well, even if under the more economical management of a private company. They run through a long narrow section of country, but thinly inhabited and a country destitute of minerals or of manufacturing facilities. The railways are, however, a commercial necessity.

The new Church of England Bishop of Huron has recently been at St. Thomas, and he took occasion while there, to pay a friendly visit to the Methodist Episcopal Ladies College in that town. Such a friendly trip is just like what might be expected of Bishop Baldwin, but it is not such a thing as is usually expected from a dignitary of that particular church. It is not many months ago since the Roman Catholic Bishop of Kingston attended the commencement exercises at the Presbyterian College in that city, and took a hearty and active part in the proceedings, the students in the gallery singing, "For he's a jolly good fellow," when he resumed his seat. We notice these innovations on the old time church exclusiveness with a good deal of satisfaction. They are among the tangible evidence that times are changing for the better, and that sectarianism, with its haughty airs, is giving away. It is well that it is so. The bitterness, the exclusiveness and sometimes open hostility of the representative men of the various churches, from time to time, has done much more to breed in the hearts of many people the feeling of skepticism in regard to the genuineness of religion than these otherwise well-meaning men often imagined.

The terrible floods along the Ohio valley during the last few weeks have ruined thousands and thousands of the inhabitants, sweeping away entirely many hundreds of homes, and so badly destroying many hundreds of others as to leave them all but worthless. Last year there was great destruction along the Ohio, the river rising at Cincinnati sixty-six feet above its low water mark. This year it rose to seventy-one feet. In a flat lying country it can be easily imagined the unfortunate state of things there must be under such circumstances. As the Ohio drains, it is said, nearly two hundred thousand square miles of country, the chances are of heavy floods any year when there are great rains, or sudden thaws during the winter. The Government was asked to give half a million of dollars for the immediate relief of the unfortunate inhabitants, and it is stated that a million would not make good the loss they have sustained. The wonder is that such a large number of intelligent people are found willing to risk their homes and their life-long earnings in a locality notoriously so dangerous. While no people should be left to suffer in the hour of misfortune it is hardly to be expected that a people erecting their homes in a locality thus situated can reasonably expect the same sympathy that others would naturally look for.

An Ice Time.

The strip of coast opposite the island on the eastern side is generally supposed to belong to Canada, says the Detroit Free Press. This is a popular error. It is a bit of new world France. Those who live there are French, French manners and customs prevail, and the language spoken is entirely French.

On Sunday morning a long line of vehicles of almost every description goes down the road that borders the river, and after church is over the long line returns. When the Frenchman gets through his devotions he sees no reason why he should not enjoy himself for the rest of the day. Every Frenchman loves to have a nice fast horse. The horse may be scraggy, and, to borrow that Anglo-French pun, a bony part, and yet if it can get over the ground at a lively rate that is all the Frenchman asks.

Last Sunday afternoon the strip of ice that fills the bay above the Walkerville ice-house presented a lively scene. About a score of fast horses, with cutters attached, raced for a mile or more along the ice that fringes the coast of France. There were hosts of skaters and a big crowd of spectators on the ice and along the shore. It was a lively sight to see six cutters coming dashing down abreast along the smooth ice.

"Don't you know that you are breaking the Sabbath?" said a good Windsor man who took his usual Sunday walk up in that direction.

"Oh, no," said the gay Frenchman, "I break nothing but dis colt; but I come mighty near breaking troo de ice, I tell you."

At the ice-house where the road joins the river, the men have been cutting ice, and the house is now full. Along the shore and some distance out is a clear space, solidly frozen again. Until a person gets quite close to it the space looks like clear water. This gave the occasion for several practical jokes. Two dudes from Detroit attempted to go down the slippery bank near the ice-house. Naturally their feet went from under them and they slid far out on the glassy ice.

"For heaven's sake, lie flat!" cried a Walkervillan; "that's thin ice." The Detroiters spread themselves out, and one yelled for a plank.

"Get them a plank!" was cried along the bank, and willing hands eagerly betook themselves to the work of rescue. A couple of planks from the ice-house were shoved carefully out to the distressed and scarcely breathing men. There was a moment of intense excitement as each cautiously lay over on his plank.

"Now, work yourself ashore," cried the kind-hearted leader on the bank.

The men did as directed, and all went well till one of them noticed a slanting crack in clear ice that showed it to be about two feet thick. Then he rose to his feet, crying in a tone of disgust: "Aw, what are ye giving us?" to which some one on shore replied: "A plank, of course." Both got up and dusted themselves off and then got up and dusted.

Later in the afternoon a fellow in a smart livery rig from Windsor came flying down the ice to this clear spot, when a shout of warning startled him. He cast one glance ahead and then cast himself out of the cutter, robes and all. As the opportunity.

Ontario has been largely dependent on its lumber trade as one of its principal sources of wealth. During the past four or five years the lumber trade has been excellent, and prices very remunerative, principally in consequence of the large demand in the American markets. Last year the total value of exports, the produce of the forest, amounted to nearly twenty-seven million dollars, the exact figures being $26,648,411. This year the prospects are that there will be a very large falling off in the lumber export trade. Business being dull in the United States the lumber market is correspondingly dull, and prices are low. Except for the first quality of lumber it is quite probable that the demand will be much less than for many years past. The demand for any lumber, principally in the dressed or manufactured form, for Manitoba has been growing very rapidly for some years past, but it is not probable that any very great market will spring up in that direction, as it is well understood that great quantities of good lumber material exist in the "Disputed Territory" west of us which will soon be opened up and cut off any demand that may now exist from the older portions of this Province.

The spirit of railway speculation is very rife these days. It is yet a matter of grave doubt whether the Hudson Bay waters are open for navigation during the winter season, but without taking time to dispose of that doubt two or three companies are asking for charters for railways to the waters of the Hudson Bay. From Winnipeg, or thereabouts, a railway six or seven hundred miles long would reach the Bay, and if only good navigation could be assured the great portion of the grain and other freight trade of the great North-west ithw Europe would find its way out in that direction. The cost of such a road, both as regards coustruction and after working, would be very great, for it would run nearly its entire distance through an uninhabited and uninhabitable country, but there are bare possibilities of a great through trade springing up. A movement is also on foot to extend our Ontario system of railways on north from Toronto to the same waters. After the C. P. R. is passed only about 350 miles of road will be required. The Dominion Government is very wisely taking steps to put the possibilities of winter navigation in Hudson's Bay to the practical test. It is proposed to send out suitable vessels for several consecutive seasons so as to give the experiment a fair and full trial.

The Dominion Government has among its assets a good deal of railway property, but, so far as income is concerned, there is little coming in from that source. Unfortunately these railways are nearly all run at an actual cash loss each year, much as they benefit the people by their operations. The Intercolonial begins to show a balance in the right side, but the loss of running during the first five years, amounted to a very large sum. The entire railway system of Prince Edward Island was built by that Province before it entered the Confederation, and the property was all handed over to the Dominion Government for which the Province received a handsome cash sum. These railways are now being run at a

A TERRIBLE END.

A Missouri Murderer Torn to Pieces by Bloodhounds in Texas

News has just reached Moberly, Missouri, from Texas, to the effect that Clifton Wade, the man who brutally murdered Robert Cummmings at Madison, Monroe county, last summer, has been torn to pieces by bloodhounds. The particulars are as follows: Two men went into Waxahatchie, Ellis county, Tex., on the 18th inst., and offered horses for sale. The officers suspected that the horses had been stolen, and arrested one of the men, who called himself Wilson, on suspicion. The other man escaped. Bloodhounds were put upon the track of the fugitive and were followed by the officers. When the officers came up to the hounds, not far from the town, they had overtaken the man and killed him, mangling his body in a most horrible manner.

One of the officers had photographs of several criminals whom they were seeking and one of these was that of Clifton Wade. The photograph was a striking likeness of the dead man, and the officers concluded that the corpse must be that of the Monroe county murderer. Wade was supposed to be somewhere in the south, and two months ago a man was arrested in Tennessee answering his description. The Sheriff of Monroe county left here with the necessary papers to bring him back, but failed to identify him as the person wanted. Wade has killed several men, and was a terror to the neighborhood in which he lived.

Tippling Clergymen.

The temperance movement does not appear to have made much progress as yet in clerical circles. Commissions of inquiry are continually being appointed by bishops to investigate accusations of drunkenness brought against clergymen by members of their flocks. One of the commissions was appointed the other day to inquire into no fewer than eleven specific charges of drunkenness against the rector of a country parish, and having reported that a prima-facie case had been made out against him, he has, after unconditional submission to his diocesan, been suspended from his clerical office for two years. The punishment is not too severe considering the scandal caused by the spectacle of a pastor reeling about his parish in a state of intoxication; but the frequency of these cases suggests the probability of some especial cause for the alarming increase of clerical intemperance. Is it possible that a constitutional change has taken place in the clergy of the present day, or that the wine they drink is of so inferior a quality that it effects their heads more readily than the generous liquor imbibed by their predecessors? Clergymen in former years were in the habit of drinking port wine by the bottle without apparently suffering any ill effects. Even the squire of the parish was not more free in his libations than the parson who dined with him, yet he seldom landed his guest beneath the table, or even sent him home with an unsteady gait. The whole question is shrouded in mystery.—St. James' Gazette.

cast one glance ahead and then cast himself out of the cutter, robes and all. As he slid a helpless mass along the ice the girl in the cutter stopped the horse, and [illegible] turned around drove up the river to the road, and turned from thence to Windsor alone.

As things appear now, the society column will not contain the announcement of that couple's engagement.

Some sporting men got up a stake purse for the fastest skater. One stake was near the bank, and was placed purposely there so that there would be a jam getting around it, and consequently the money's worth of fun should be obtained. The other stake was near the clear water's edge. This disposal of stakes had a contrary effect from what was anticipated. As the seven skaters were rushing round the outside stake one of them tripped on a chunk and went head first into the cold river. The crowd was horror-stricken for a moment, till he rose to the surface and grasped the ragged edge. The ice was quite thick, even at the brink, and his companions had no difficulty in getting him on his feet once more. He stumped with chattering teeth towards the shore, then struck out, and before the astonished skaters saw his design he had rounded the stake at the bank and claimed his money. This run on the bank netted him $4.75.

The Reis Telephone of 1864.

Mr. H. F. Peter is a teacher of music in the village of Friedrichsdorf, Germany, which was for many years the home of Philipp Beis, and which contains the Garnier Institute, where he was instructor in physics. Herr Peter states that he was present at Reis' experiments, and can testify that audible speech was actually reproduced by his telephone. He says that many members of the "Physikalissher Verein," of Frankfort-on-the Main were also present.

A RUSSIAN CEREMONIAL.

An Interesting Ecclesiastical Spectacle at the Great Cathedral at Moscow.

I have just had an opportunity of witnessing one of the most important ceremonials of the Russian ecclesiastical year, under circumstances of unusual pomp and magnificence, writes a Moscow correspondent of the Glasgow Herald. It took place in the famous Uspensky Sobor, and had the rare dignity of being conducted by a metropolite and two arch-bishops. The cathedral is one of the sights of Moscow. Nearly as ancient as the city itself, there is more historical suggestion in this one edifice than in all the other four hundred church buildings of the old capital put together. It was the lot of the Uspensky Sobor to be built in stone on the site of the wooden cathedral of the same name by Fioraventi, an Italian architect specially sent for the purpose by one of the ancient doges of Venice, and Fioraventi, not less artist than architect, but, if possible, more Byzantine in his work than the Muscovites themselves, erected a structure which still remains in harmony with its surroundings, even after the lapse of centuries. The wonder is that there is anything left about the building to remind one of its foreign architect at all, for, twice defaced and plundered, it once had to pass through the ordeal of one of Moscow's conflagrations. It was in the Uspensky Sobor, moreover, than Ivan the Blind raised his voice against Isidor's traitorous consent to the proposed union of the Greek and Roman churches in 1440, and it was in the same cathedral (the whirligig of time bringing its revenges even for metropolites) that Phillip denounced the unholy deeds of Ivan the Terrible. How far the generation of "orthodox" are in the habit of leavening their devotional exercises with historical retrospects I do not undertake to decide. But I know well enough that at the Uspensky Sobor, and that in all Moscow there is no church that is more popular or one that is better filled. From this it follows as a matter of course that on special occasions large numbers fail to gain admission to the building. On the afternoon of my visit the throng was great, and ten minutes only out of the hour allotted for the purpose sufficed for filling of the cathedral in every part. To a West European eye the aspect of a Russian congregation waiting in this manner for the beginning of the service is highly novel, in some respects even strange. Anything more like a "free and open church" in principle and less like it in detail could scarcely be imagined. Everybody stands. Seats can not be had for "love or money." You can not get in the thin end of the wedge of class distinctions even in the matter of standing-room. Precedence or place, so far as either is desired or possible, depends entirely on the hour at which the worshippers present themselves. And when the building is at last filled you look upon an expectant assembly, in which fashionable ladies and peasant women, landed proprietors and muzhiks, rich merchants and poor chinovinks, are huddled together, put cheek by jowl so to speak, with democratic

The metropolite really worked hard to satisfy everybody; a more conscientious effort to confer the greatest happiness upon the greatest number was perhaps never put forth, yet even Moscow's highest church dignitary found his amiable purpose partially thwarted by the inexorable law of supply and demand, since, in the curious physiognomical study left behind him in his retreat it was easy to see that while the delight was limited, if somewhat boisterous, the disappointment was poignant and widespread.

The church is thus a power in Moscow, and being a power in Moscow is a power throughout the empire of the Czar.

"Wanted, a Good Plain Cook."

New York papers complain that good plain cooks cannot now be obtained there for "love or money." It is just possible that love is the condition on which more of them are obtained than money. Many a good love match, however, brings to the fortunate man in the case a very poor cook. Why such an important branch of female industry as plain cooking should generally receive such very little attention seems inexplicable. It ought to be a prominent part of the real education of every young woman who ever expects to have charge of a household of her own; but, as a matter of fact, many young ladies whose education is "finished," and who may have carried off high honors, even in scientific subjects, know little theoretically, absolutely nothing practically about such a necessary matter to the good health, the happiness, and even the success and prosperity of the household as plain cooking.

If girls or women understanding good cookery could be easily procured the evil, so far as the neglect among wealthy and educated classes are concerned, would not be so great, but this is very far from being the case. Plain cooking is evidently considered "too common," or "too vulgar," or too much of a mere drudgery to get its fair share of attention even amon those who are dependent on their dail industry. In Toronto or in any other large city in Canada or the United States to-day, an advertisement asking for female help, for clerks, or for milliners, or for seamstresses of any kind will at once receive hundreds of responses, and that, too, by persons well qualified for the duties required. Let a good plain cook be advertised for, however, and the experience is quite different. The consequence is that really good plain cooks are always in demand, always wanted and can always demand good situations and good pay, whereas good clerks, and good sewers are all the time crowded by too much competition. Cookery ought to be made more fashionable and more popular than it is. If some great leader of a social reform in this direction would rise up and popularize the business, he or she would confer a great blessing on the world.

Li Hung Chang's Position.

KILIMANJARO.

The Snowy Mountains of Equatorial Africa.

This was the subject of a lecture delivered recently at the Royal Institution by Mr. H. H. Johnston, who is about to head an expedition, under the auspices of the British Association and the Royal society, for the purpose of exploring the region of the Kilimanjaro and thoroughly exploring its flora and fauna. The mountain in question, which is 18,000 feet above the sea level, is the highest point of a chain stretching from Abyssinia, and continuing again until the lofty ranges in the neighborhood of Nyass Lake is reached. These on their part are connected across the Zambesi and Matabeleland, with chains of hills and high tablelands, which in their turn trend their way into the mountain ranges of Natal and southern Africa. With a little stretch of imagination, said the lecturer, we may suppose that the mountains of Abyssinia are slightly connected northward, by means of the Nubian and West Arabian hills, with the mountain mass of Sinai, and that again with the Lebanon, th Caucausus, the Taurus, the Balkans. and the Alps. So that it is not very far-fetched to say that there is an almost continuous line of elevation, whether marked by plateaus or sierras, or isolated peaks, extending from the West Asiatic and mid-European systems down the east side of Africa to the cape, and in this long line Kilimanjaro comes nearly midway. One object of his expedition, Mr. Johnston went on to explain, was to determine whether Kilimanjaro belonged to Europe or the cape; whether this snowy mountain had intercepted and retained some of the present South African forms of life, which have been driven in the course of time to the temperate regions of the south by the incursion across the Sahara of the more vigorous northern agencies; or whether it makes an extension southward of the several glacial epochs which passed over Europe, and whether, in that case, will be found on its summit creatures or plants which will connect its fauna and flora with those of the Alps, the Taurus, and the Himalayas. The lecturer explained at length the results obtained by previous explorers, and concluded by stating that the name Kilimanjaro did not mean Mountain of Greatness, but the Mountain of Njaro—or the Wicked Spirit—who is supposed by the natives to cause the biting cold, and to inflict on them such ills as chilblains and frostbites.

License Legislation

At the late meeting of the Dominion Alliance Council, held in Ottawa, Mr. J. J. McLaren, Q.C., of Montreal, read an elaborate paper on the s ubject of temperance legislation. He is a lawyer of eminent ability, and it will be remembered that he was selected by the Alliance to go to England and argue the case of the constitutionality of the Canada Temperance Act before the Privy Council, which he did very successfully. Probably there is not another lawyer in Canada whose opinion on the question of liquor legislation should have greater weight. Here is a s summary of his paper, read at Ot-ladies and peasant women, landed proprietors and muzhiks, rich merchants and poor chinovinks, are huddled together, put cheek by jowl so to speak, with democratic disregard of social classifications to be found, perhaps, in no other country or church in the world. This suggestive part with the purely material part of the service; and the obscurity left in Russian churches by architecture has to be dissipated by the sufferings of the orthodox. The illumination of the Uspensky Sobor had already made some progress when I entered. A brisk traffic in candles was going on at a counterlike table erected not far from the altar. The people were sending in orders from all parts of the building. Passed from hand to hand until it reached the counter, the money never failed to arrive at its destination, or to be immediately transferred in the shape of lighted candles, small or large, according to the amount of contribution, to vacant branches of chandeliers. From time to time a man, bearing in his hands a tray on which a small bell rang continually, issued from the counter, ploughed his way through the closely-packed crowd of worshippers, and having cut it up, so to speak, in almost every possible direction, returned at last with the result in money, the "copper" contributions, I noticed predominating. The service itself, consisting entirely of liturgical matter, read or sung, interested me little, apart from the chanting of a really fine choir composed of men and boys. The most striking effect was one I had least anticipated. All at once, without the slightest warning of any kind, the metropolite appeared in the centre of the cathedral. The archbishops were also there, one on each side; but the metropolite sat higher than they, wore a hat of spotless white, in the front of which a large diamond glittered, and was distinguished, moreover, from all around him—so far as the distance between us enabled me to judge—by strikingly intellectual features, of which an air slightly ascetic cast seemed almost to disappear in an expression of rare sweetness and composure. The people devoured him with their eyes, and when, at the close of the service, he rose, or rather ascended, to go, the crowd seemed to allow him up in a sense by no means merely metaphorical. For some moments I lost sight of him, and began to fear—the crush to get near him being so great—that he must have fallen in the press. Soon, however, he emerged, again, then I discovered the cause of the scramble. That a struggle had been going on I had already seen clearly enough, but it was no struggle to resist the pressure of an irreverent crowd. The people were simply thrusting themselves forward to kiss the metropolite's hand, and the metropolite, moving slowly through the lane made for him, was "giving his hand" right and left as rapidly as he could. Everybody snatched at the coveted member; everybody sought the virtue of the momentary osculation. Now a stout, red-faced merchant pressed his hand to his lips; now it was seized by a general in uniform; an official took it up and passed it on to a beggar; mere children fought for it until they ran the risk of being trampled on; and so hotly did the women contest the privilege that I saw several of them black in the face.

don Times writes:—Affairs in China are felt to be in a critical position. Not that there is the least risk of war with France, for it is difficult to say which of the two powers has least "stomach for the fight." But there are ignorant and pig-headed people at the seat of government who are disposed to bluster and make things dis- who know what it is to fight against a civilized army, and some of the provincial officials on whom no responsibility for the consequences would rest, are throwing out Homeric challenges in the rich vituperative style which must make the gallant French commanders long to be at them. The position of Li Hung Chang is far from enviable, standing as he does between the stupidity and fanaticism of the imperial court and the presence of the outer world whose sources he has measured, and whose energy he fully appreciates. His career as a general, a statesman, and a man of affairs, has raised him to the highest rank to which any Chinese subject can hope to attain. He is viceroy of a province, minister of war, of commerce, and in a certain sense, of foreign affairs, and is beyond challenge the master mind of China at the present moment. But he is not all-powerful. He has his enemies who are watching eagerly to trip him up. He can hardly in the nature of things score any further successes, but he can easily have failures, and, powerful as he is, he may still be made to answer for his failures with his head, or, at least, with his worldly goods by the savages who pull the strings of the empire at Pekin. Li Hung Chang is a patriot in the only sense which that term can be applied to any Chinese official under the present regime, but patriotism or loyalty must be severely strained when a great man, weary and old with service, has to endure the contumely of eunuchs and vermin of that sort about the palace. The whole thing is rotten, and the reigning family no better than an ulcer on the body politic. The country is ripe for rebellion, and a foreign war would be the signal for simultaneous risings north, south, east, and west. That is the real danger that threatens China, or rather the alien rulers who so grossly misgovern it.

Feline Prescience.

I must give a fact which was communicated to me many years ago by an old physician, of which the good old man assured me he was an eye witness. In his house were two old cats, each with a litter of kittens but a few days old. One of the cats was very young, it was her first litter, and the old cat was her mother. It was noticed that the younger cat did not seem well. Each one had her litter by herself, although both were in the same room. As the old cat lay suckling her own litter the young cat came to her mother and made a low mewing, then went to her own litter. The old cat followed her immediately began removing the grand-kittens, adding them to her own. The truth was, she had adopted them, and seemingly at the request of their mother, for not many minutes more had elapsed before they were orphaned by their mother's death.

is not another lawyer in Canada whose opinion on the question of liquor legislation should have greater weight. Here is a s summary of his paper, read at Ottawa:—

"The text from which he spoke was divided into five parts, viz., the history of legislation; the classifying of licens- more generally Act; why it has not been Quebec, and the question of the advisability of calling for a simultaneous Scott Act campaign in all possible counties through the Dominion with a view to demanding general prohibition next year. He believed that we might look at the state of legislation when the provinces went into the Dominion. In Ontario and Quebec partially prohibitory laws were passed in the last session of the Parliament of Old Canada. In 1869 there was passed a provision almost identical for both provinces, giving local councils power to pass prohibitory by-laws. In Nova Scotia there was a very strict law, which required that two-thirds of the ratepayers must sign a petition for a license before it could be granted, and that it must be ratified by two-thirds of the grand jury and by the Court of Sessions. New Brunswick, in 1855, was in advance of all other provinces, for it passed a prohibitory law, which, however, only remained in force a few years. The Temperance Act 1878 was the result of a succession of appeals to Parliament. The speaker next referred to the Liquor License Act of last session. He did not think that this was the time or place to discuss some of the questions that had lately arisen concerning it, for unfortunately party had entered too largely into these questions. For his part he was a temperance man first and a politician afterwards. He had, however, predicted last year that the Privy Council would not sustain the opinions expressed in Parliament that the Local Legislatures has no right to control the liquor traffic, and that all their legislation for the subject was null and void, and circumstances had since shown his prediction to have been correct. The case was now somewhat different from what it was when the case of Hodge v. The Queen was brought before the Privy Council, because there was then no conflicting laws. He regretted that there would be a contest between the Dominion and the Province through the establishment of the new Act, which was something temperance people did not desire to see. The press was on the side of temperance, and the House should be divided on the subject this very session.

The temptations thrown in some people's way, by the common custom of exposing all kinds of articles at shop doors is much greater to some than is often realized. No doubt many a boy has picked up his thieving habits by picking up small articles lying thus loosely in his way. A man was recently convicted before an English court for stealing from a shop door, but the judge refused the prosecutors any expenses in the case on the ground that the loose exposure of the goods held out a temptation to steal.

The Duke of Wellington, on being asked by Lord Warncliffe, "Is drunkenness, in your opinion, the great parent of all crime in the British army?" replied, "Invariably!"

Among the singular circumstances of the late terrible disastrous floods at Cincinnati were the suffering of many from the absence of water to drink, and for cooking and other household purposes. Of course the muddy waters flowing every where about were not fit for such purposes. The floods became so high that the engines of the city water works had to stop and the ordinary supplies failed in consequence. There was also the want of the ordinary water supplies felt by the fire brigades.

An American paper says:—The permanency of official life in Canada has been recently brought out by a little circumstance that occurred in Western Ontario a few days ago. This was the meeting together in Brantford of three government officials, viz: Judge Jones, Sheriff Smith and Register Shenston, who celebrated their 31st year in office, their appointments having been made on January 21st, 1853, during Lord Elgin's adminstration. Had these offices been under our government, in that period, three or four hundred men would have had a chance at them.

The prospects of the future meat market are excellent, and Ontario farmers, especially, should make careful note of the fact. The London Telegrayh, an excellent authority, states that in Europe the meat demand is something over eight million tons per year, and the home supply not a great deal off seven million tons, leaving nearly a million tons to be supplied from elsewhere. Then, in England, especially, as wages kept increasing so increased the demand for the more costly meat food. These supplies must be drawn from America, and it is said that in the United States the population has grown more rapidly than the meat supply, so that in Boston, New York, and the other large cities meat is to-day commanding nearly the same price as in England. The demand yearly increases and prices continue to advance. Our farmers may just as well avail themselves of the opportunity.

considerable loss each year. Last year it cost the Dominion $252,808 to run the road, and the receipts derived were $146,170, leaving a deficit balance of $106,639 to be met out of the public treasury. It is doubtful if the Island railways can ever be made to pay very well, even if under the more economical management of a private company. They run through a long narrow section of country, but thinly inhabited and a country destitute of minerals or of manufacturing facilities. The railways are, however, a commercial necessity.

The new Church of England Bishop of Huron has recently been at St. Thomas, and he took occasion while there, to pay a friendly visit to the Methodist Episcopal Ladies College in that town. Such a friendly trip is just like what might be expected of Bishop Baldwin, but it is not such a thing as is usually expected from a dignitary of that particular church. It is not many months ago since the Roman Catholic Bishop of Kingston attended the commencement exercises at the Presbyterian College in that city, and took a hearty and active part in the proceedings, the students in the gallery singing, "For he's a jolly good fellow," when he resumed his seat. We notice these innovations on the old time church exclusiveness with a good deal of satisfaction. They are among the tangible evidence that times are changing for the better, and that sectarianism, with its haughty airs, is giving away. It is well that it is so. The bitterness, the exclusiveness and sometimes open hostility of the representative men of the various churches, from time to time, has done much more to breed in the hearts of many people the feeling of skepticism in regard to the genuineness of religion than these otherwise well-meaning men often imagined.

The terrible floods along the Ohio valley during the last few weeks have ruined thousands and thousands of the inhabitants, sweeping away entirely many hundreds of homes, and so badly destroying many hundreds of others as to leave them all but worthless. Last year there was great destruction along the Ohio, the river rising at Cincinnati sixty-six feet above its low water mark. This year it rose to seventy-one feet. In a flat lying country it can be easily imagined the unfortunate state of things there must be under such circumstances. As the Ohio drains, it is said, nearly two hundred thousand square miles of country, the chances are of heavy floods any year when there are great rains, or sudden thaws during the winter. The Government was asked to give half a million of dollars for the immediate relief of the unfortunate inhabitants, and it is stated that a million would not make good the loss they have sustained. The wonder is that such a large number of intelligent people are found willing to risk their homes and their life-long earnings in a locality notoriously so dangerous. While no people should be left to suffer in the hour of misfortune it is hardly to be expected that a people erecting their homes in a locality thus situated can reasonably expect the same sympathy that others would naturally look for.

An Ice Time.

The strip of coast opposite the island on the eastern side is generally supposed to belong to Canada, says the Detroit Free Press. This is a popular error. It is a bit of new world France. Those who live there are French, French manners and customs prevail, and the language spoken is entirely French.

On Sunday morning a long line of vehicles of almost every description goes down the road that borders the river, and after church is over the long line returns. When the Frenchman gets through his devotions he sees no reason why he should not enjoy himself for the rest of the day. Every Frenchman loves to have a nice fast horse. The horse may be scraggy, and, to borrow that Anglo-French pun, a bony part, and yet if it can get over the ground at a lively rate that is all the Frenchman asks.

Last Sunday afternoon the strip of ice that fills the bay above the Walkerville ice-house presented a lively scene. About a score of fast horses, with cutters attached, raced for a mile or more along the ice that fringes the coast of France. There were hosts of skaters and a big crowd of spectators on the ice and along the shore. It was a lively sight to see six cutters coming dashing down abreast along the smooth ice.

"Don't you know that you are breaking the Sabbath?" said a good Windsor man who took his usual Sunday walk up in that direction.

"Oh, no," said the gay Frenchman, "I break nothing but dis colt; but I come mighty near breaking troo de ice, I tell you."

At the ice-house where the road joins the river, the men have been cutting ice, and the house is now full. Along the shore and some distance out is a clear space, solidly frozen again. Until a person gets quite close to it the space looks like clear water. This gave the occasion for several practical jokes. Two dudes from Detroit attempted to go down the slippery bank near the ice-house. Naturally their feet went from under them and they slid far out on the glassy ice.

"For heaven's sake, lie flat!" cried a Walkervillan; "that's thin ice." The Detroiters spread themselves out, and one yelled for a plank.

"Get them a plank!" was cried along the bank, and willing hands eagerly betook themselves to the work of rescue. A couple of planks from the ice-house were shoved carefully out to the distressed and scarcely breathing men. There was a moment of intense excitement as each cautiously lay over on his plank.

"Now, work yourself ashore," cried the kind-hearted leader on the bank.

The men did as directed, and all went well till one of them noticed a slanting crack in clear ice that showed it to be about two feet thick. Then he rose to his feet, crying in a tone of disgust: "Aw, what are ye giving us?" to which some one on shore replied: "A plank, of course." Both got up and dusted themselves off and then got up and dusted.

Later in the afternoon a fellow in a smart livery rig from Windsor came flying down the ice to this clear spot, when a shout of warning startled him. He cast one glance ahead and then cast him-

It is yet a matter of grave doubt whether the Hudson Bay waters are open for navigation during the winter season, but without taking time to dispose of that doubt two or three companies are asking for charters for railways to the waters of the Hudson Bay. From Winnipeg, or thereabouts, a railway six or seven hundred miles long would reach the Bay, and if only good navigation could be assured the great portion of the grain and other freight trade of the great North-west ithw Europe would find its way out in that direction. The cost of such a road, both as regards coustruction and after working, would be very great, for it would run nearly its entire distance through an uninhabited and uninhabitable country, but there are bare possibilities of a great through trade springing up. A movement is also on foot to extend our Ontario system of railways on north from Toronto to the same waters. After the C. P. R. is passed only about 350 miles of road will be required. The Dominion Government is very wisely taking steps to put the possibilities of winter navigation in Hudson's Bay to the practical test. It is proposed to send out suitable vessels for several consecutive seasons so as to give the experiment a fair and full trial.

The Dominion Government has among its assets a good deal of railway property, but, so far as income is concerned, there is little coming in from that source. Unfortunately these railways are nearly all run at an actual cash loss each year, much as they benefit the people by their operations. The Intercolonial begins to show a balance in the right side, but the loss of running during the first five years, amounted to a very large sum. The entire railway system of Prince Edward Island was built by that Province before it entered the Confederation, and the property was all handed over to the Dominion Government for which the Province received a handsome cash sum. These railways are now being run at a would naturally look for.

A TERRIBLE END.

A Missouri Murderer Torn to Pieces by Bloodhounds in Texas

News has just reached Moberly, Missouri, from Texas, to the effect that Clifton Wade, the man who brutally murdered Robert Cummmings at Madison, Monroe county, last summer, has been torn to pieces by bloodhounds. The particulars are as follows: Two men went into Waxahatchie, Ellis county, Tex., on the 18th inst., and offered horses for sale. The officers suspected that the horses had been stolen, and arrested one of the men, who called himself Wilson, on suspicion. The other man escaped. Bloodhounds were put upon the track of the fugitive and were followed by the officers. When the officers came up to the hounds, not far from the town, they had overtaken the man and killed him, mangling his body in a most horrible manner.

One of the officers had photographs of several criminals whom they were seeking and one of these was that of Clifton Wade. The photograph was a striking likeness of the dead man, and the officers concluded that the corpse must be that of the Monroe county murderer. Wade was supposed to be somewhere in the south, and two months ago a man was arrested in Tennessee answering his description. The Sheriff of Monroe county left here with the necessary papers to bring him back, but failed to identify him as the person wanted. Wade has killed several men, and was a terror to the neighborhood in which he lived.

Tippling Clergymen.

The temperance movement does not appear to have made much progress as yet in clerical circles. Commissions of inquiry are continually being appointed by bishops to investigate accusations of drunkenness brought against clergymen by members of their flocks. One of the commissions was appointed the other day to inquire into no fewer than eleven specific charges of drunkenness against the rector of a country parish, and having reported that a prima-facie case had been made out against him, he has, after unconditional submission to his diocesan, been suspended from his clerical office for two years. The punishment is not too severe considering the scandal caused by the spectacle of a pastor reeling about his parish in a state of intoxication; but the frequency of these cases suggests the probability of some especial cause for the alarming increase of clerical intemperance. Is it possible that a constitutional change has taken place in the clergy of the present day, or that the wine they drink is of so inferior a quality that it effects their heads more readily than the generous liquor imbibed by their predecessors? Clergymen in former years were in the habit of drinking port wine by the bottle without apparently suffering any ill effects. Even the squire of the parish was not more free in his libations than the parson who dined with him, yet the he seldom landed his guest beneath the table, or even sent him home with an unsteady gait. The whole question is shrouded in mystery.—St. James' Gazette.

a shout of warning startled him. He cast one glance ahead and then cast himself out of the cutter, robes and all. As he slid a helpless mass along the ice the girl in the cutter stopped the horse, and was so indignant at his desertion that she turned around drove up the river to the road, and turned from thence to Windsor alone.

As things appear now, the society column will not contain the announcement of that couple's engagement.

Some sporting men got up a stake purse for the fastest skater. One stake was near the bank, and was placed purposely there so that there would be a jam getting around it, and consequently the money's worth of fun should be obtained. The other stake was near the clear water's edge. This disposal of stakes had a contrary effect from what was anticipated. As the seven skaters were rushing round the outside stake one of them tripped on a chunk and went head first into the cold river. The crowd was horror-stricken for a moment, till he rose to the surface and grasped the ragged edge. The ice was quite thick, even at the brink, and his companions had no difficulty in getting him on his feet once more. He stumped with chattering teeth towards the shore, then struck out, and before the astonished skaters saw his design he had rounded the stake at the bank and claimed his money. This run on the bank netted him $4.75.

The Reis Telephone of 1864.

Mr. H. F. Peter is a teacher of music in the village of Friedrichsdorf, Germany, which was for many years the home of Philipp Beis, and which contains the Garnier Institute, where he was instructor in physics. Herr Peter states that he was present at Reis' experiments, and can testify that audible speech was actually reproduced by his telephone. He says that many members of the "Physikalissher Verein," of Frankfort-on-the Main were also present.

A RUSSIAN CEREMONIAL.

An Interesting Ecclesiastical Spectacle at the Great Cathedral at Moscow.

I have just had an opportunity of witnessing one of the most important ceremonials of the Russian ecclesiastical year, under circumstances of unusual pomp and magnificence, writes a Moscow correspondent of the Glasgow Herald. It took place in the famous Uspensky Sobor, and had the rare dignity of being conducted by a metropolite and two arch-bishops. The cathedral is one of the sights of Moscow. Nearly as ancient as the city itself, there is more historical suggestion in this one edifice than in all the other four hundred church buildings of the old capital put together. It was the lot of the Uspensky Sobor to be built in stone on the site of the wooden cathedral of the same name by Fioraventi, an Italian architect specially sent for the purpose by one of the ancient doges of Venice, and Fioraventi, not less artist than architect, but, if possible, more Byzantine in his work than the Muscovites themselves, erected a structure which still remains in harmony with its surroundings, even after the lapse of centuries. The wonder is that there is anything left about the building to remind one of its foreign architect at all, for, twice defaced and plundered, it once had to pass through the ordeal of one of Moscow's conflagrations. It was in the Uspensky Sobor, moreover, than Ivan the Blind raised his voice against Isidor's traitorous consent to the proposed union of the Greek and Roman churches in 1440, and it was in the same cathedral (the whirligig of time bringing its revenges even for metropolites) that Phillip denounced the unholy deeds of Ivan the Terrible. How far the generation of "orthodox" are in the habit of leavening their devotional exercises with historical retrospects I do not undertake to decide. But I know well enough that at the Uspensky Sobor, and that in all Moscow there is no church that is more popular or one that is better filled. From this it follows as a matter of course that on special occasions large numbers fail to gain admission to the building. On the afternoon of my visit the throng was great, and ten minutes only out of the hour allotted for the purpose sufficed for filling of the cathedral in every part. To a West European eye the aspect of a Russian congregation waiting in this manner for the beginning of the service is highly novel, in some respects even strange. Anything more like a "free and open church" in principle and less like it in detail could scarcely be imagined. Everybody stands. Seats can not be had for "love or money." You can not get in the thin end of the wedge of class distinctions even in the matter of standing-room. Precedence or place, so far as either is desired or possible, depends entirely on the hour at which the worshippers present themselves. And when the building is at last filled you look upon an expectant assembly, in which fashionable ladies and peasant women, landed proprietors and muzhiks, rich merchants and poor chinovinks, are huddled together, put cheek by jowl so to speak, with democratic disregard of social classifications to be

The metropolite really worked hard to satisfy everybody; a more conscientious effort to confer the greatest happiness upon the greatest number was perhaps never put forth, yet even Moscow's highest church dignitary found his amiable purpose partially thwarted by the inexorable law of supply and demand, since, in the curious physiognomical study left behind him in his retreat it was easy to see that while the delight was limited, if somewhat boisterous, the disappointment was poignant and widespread.

The church is thus a power in Moscow, and being a power in Moscow is a power throughout the empire of the Czar.

"Wanted, a Good Plain Cook."

New York papers complain that good plain cooks cannot now be obtained there for "love or money." It is just possible that love is the condition on which more of them are obtained than money. Many a good love match, however, brings to the fortunate man in the case a very poor cook. Why such an important branch of female industry as plain cooking should generally receive such very little attention seems inexplicable. It ought to be a prominent part of the real education of every young woman who ever expects to have charge of a household of her own; but, as a matter of fact, many young ladies whose education is "finished," and who may have carried off high honors, even in scientific subjects, know little theoretically, absolutely nothing practically about such a necessary matter to the good health, the happiness, and even the success and prosperity of the household as plain cooking.

If girls or women understanding good cookery could be easily procured the evil, so far as the neglect among wealthy and educated classes are concerned, would not be so great, but this is very far from being the case. Plain cooking is evidently considered "too common," or "too vulgar," or too much of a mere drudgery to get its fair share of attention even amon those who are dependent on their dail industry. In Toronto or in any other large city in Canada or the United States to-day, an advertisement asking for female help, for clerks, or for milliners, or for seamstresses of any kind will at once receive hundreds of responses, and that, too, by persons well qualified for the duties required. Let a good plain cook be advertised for, however, and the experience is quite different. The consequence is that really good plain cooks are always in demand, always wanted and can always demand good situations and good pay, whereas good clerks, and good sewers are all the time crowded by too much competition. Cookery ought to be made more fashionable and more popular than it is. If some great leader of a social reform in this direction would rise up and popularize the business, he or she would confer a great blessing on the world.

Li Hung Chang's Position.

A Shanghai correspondent of the London Times writes:—Affairs in China are felt to be in a critical position. Not that there is the least risk of war with France, for it is difficult to say which of the two powers has least "stomach for the fight."

KILIMANJARO.

The Snowy Mountains of Equatorial Africa.

This was the subject of a lecture delivered recently at the Royal Institution by Mr. H. H. Johnston, who is about to head an expedition, under the auspices of the British Association and the Royal society, for the purpose of exploring the region of the Kilimanjaro and thoroughly exploring its flora and fauna. The mountain in question, which is 18,000 feet above the sea level, is the highest point of a chain stretching from Abyssinia, and continuing again until the lofty ranges in the neighborhood of Nyass Lake is reached. These on their part are connected across the Zambesi and Matabeleland, with chains of hills and high tablelands, which in their turn trend their way into the mountain ranges of Natal and southern Africa. With a little stretch of imagination, said the lecturer, we may suppose that the mountains of Abyssinia are slightly connected northward, by means of the Nubian and West Arabian hills, with the mountain mass of Sinai, and that again with the Lebanon, th Caucausus, the Taurus, the Balkans. and the Alps. So that it is not very far-fetched to say that there is an almost continuous line of elevation, whether marked by plateaus or sierras, or isolated peaks, extending from the West Asiatic and mid-European systems down the east side of Africa to the cape, and in this long line Kilimanjaro comes nearly midway. One object of his expedition, Mr. Johnston went on to explain, was to determine whether Kilimanjaro belonged to Europe or the cape; whether this snowy mountain had intercepted and retained some of the present South African forms of life, which have been driven in the course of time to the temperate regions of the south by the incursion across the Sahara of the more vigorous northern agencies; or whether it makes an extension southward of the several glacial epochs which passed over Europe, and whether, in that case, will be found on its summit creatures or plants which will connect its fauna and flora with those of the Alps, the Taurus, and the Himalayas. The lecturer explained at length the results obtained by previous explorers, and concluded by stating that the name Kilimanjaro did not mean Mountain of Greatness, but the Mountain of Njaro—or the Wicked Spirit—who is supposed by the natives to cause the biting cold, and to inflict on them such ills as chilblains and frostbites.

License Legislation

At the late meeting of the Dominion Alliance Council, held in Ottawa, Mr. J. J. McLaren, Q.C., of Montreal, read an elaborate paper on the subject of temperance legislation. He is a lawyer of eminent ability, and it will be remembered that he was selected by the Alliance to go to England and argue the case of the constitutionality of the Canada Temperance Act before the Privy Council, which he did very successfully. Probably there is not another lawyer in Canada whose opinion on the question of liquor legislation should have greater weight. Here is a s summary of his paper, read at Ottawa:—

princes and khanims, rich merchants and poor chinovinks, are huddled together, put cheek by jowl so to speak, with democratic disregard of social classifications to be found, perhaps, in no other country or church in the world. This suggestive mental light, however, has little counterpart with the purely material part of the service; and the obscurity left in Russian churches by architecture has to be dissipated by the sufferings of the orthodox. The illumination of the Uspensky Sobor had already made some progress when I entered. A brisk traffic in candles was going on at a counterlike table erected not far from the altar. The people were sending in orders from all parts of the building. Passed from hand to hand until it reached the counter, the money never failed to arrive at its destination, or to be immediately transferred in the shape of lighted candles, small or large, according to the amount of contribution, to vacant branches of chandeliers. From time to time a man, bearing in his hands a tray on which a small bell rang continually, issued from the counter, ploughed his way through the closely-packed crowd of worshippers, and having cut it up, so to speak, in almost every possible direction, returned at last with the result in money, the "copper" contributions, I noticed predominating. The service itself, consisting entirely of liturgical matter, read or sung, interested me little, apart from the chanting of a really fine choir composed of men and boys. The most striking effect was one I had least anticipated. All at once, without the slightest warning of any kind, the metropolite appeared in the centre of the cathedral. The archbishops were also there, one on each side; but the metropolite sat higher than they, wore a hat of spotless white, in the front of which a large diamond glittered, and was distinguished, moreover, from all around him—so far as the distance between us enabled me to judge—by strikingly intellectual features, of which an almost slightly ascetic cast seemed almost to disappear in an expression of rare sweetness and composuse. The people devoured him with their eyes, and when, at the close of the service, he rose, or rather ascended, to go, the crowd seemed to allow him up in a sense by no means merely metaphorical. For some moments I lost sight of him, and began to fear—the crush to get near him being so great—that he must have fallen in the press. Soon, however, he emerged, again, then I discovered the cause of the scramble. That a struggle had been going on I had already seen clearly enough, but it was no struggle to resist the pressure of an irreverent crowd. The people were simply thrusting themselves forward to kiss the metropolite's hand, and the metropolite, moving slowly through the lane made for him, was "giving his hand" right and left as rapidly as he could. Everybody snatched at the coveted member; everybody sought the virtue of the momentary osculation. Now a stout, red-faced merchant pressed his hand to his lips; now it was seized by a general in uniform; an official took it up and passed it on to a beggar; mere children fought for it until they ran the risk of being trampled on; and so hotly did the women contest the privilege that I saw several of them black in the face.

there is the least risk of war with France, for it is difficult to say which of the two powers has least "stomach for the fight." But there are ignorant and pig-headed people at the seat of government who are disposed to bluster and make things disagreeable for the wise and practical men who know what it is to fight against a civilized army, and some of the provincial officials on whom no responsibility for the consequences would rest, are throwing out Homeric challenges in the rich vituperative style which must make the gallant French commanders long to be at them. The position of Li Hung Chang is far from enviable, standing as he does between the stupidity and fanaticism of the imperial court and the presence of the outer world whose sources he has measured, and whose energy he fully appreciates. His career as a general, a statesman, and a man of affairs, has raised him to the highest rank to which any Chinese subject can hope to attain. He is viceroy of a province, minister of war, of commerce, and in a certain sense, of foreign affairs, and is beyond challenge the master mind of China at the present moment. But he is not all-powerful. He has his enemies who are watching eagerly to trip him up. He can hardly in the nature of things score any further successes, but he can easily have failures, and, powerful as he is, he may still be made to answer for his failures with his head, or, at least, with his worldly goods by the savages who pull the strings of the empire at Pekin. Li Hung Chang is a patriot in the only sense which that term can be applied to any Chinese official under the present regime, but patriotism or loyalty must be severely strained when a great man, weary and old with service, has to endure the contumely of eunuchs and vermin of that sort about the palace. The whole thing is rotten, and the reigning family no better than an ulcer on the body politic. The country is ripe for rebellion, and a foreign war would be the signal for simultaneous risings north, south, east, and west. That is the real danger that threatens China, or rather the alien rulers who so grossly misgovern it.

Feline Prescience.

I must give a fact which was communicated to me many years ago by an old physician, of which the good old man assured me he was an eye witness. In his house were two old cats, each with a litter of kittens but a few days old. One of the cats was very young, it was her first litter, and the old cat was her mother. It was noticed that the younger cat did not seem well. Each one had her litter by herself, although both were in the same room. As the old cat lay suckling her own litter the young cat came to her mother and made a low mewing, then went to her own litter. The old cat followed her immediately began removing the grand-kittens, adding them to her own. The truth was, she had adopted them, and seemingly at the request of their mother, for not many minutes more had elapsed before they were orphaned by their mother's death.

A Manchester (N. H.) man found ninety-nine shoe nails in a chicken's gizzard. The result of frequent "shooing" probably.

opinion on the question of liquor legislation should have greater weight. Here is a s summary of his paper, read at Ottawa:—

"The text from which he spoke was divided into five parts, viz., the history of legislation; the classifying of licens' laws; the Scott Act; why it has not been more generally adopted in Ontario and Quebec, and the question of the advisability of calling for a simultaneous Scott Act campaign in all possible counties through the Dominion with a view to demanding general prohibition next year. He believed that we might look at the state of legislation when the provinces went into the Dominion. In Ontario and Quebec partially prohibitory laws were passed in the last session of the Parliament of Old Canada. In 1869 there was passed a provision almost identical for both provinces, giving local councils power to pass prohibitory by-laws. In Nova Scotia there was a very strict law, which required that two-thirds of the ratepayers must sign a petition for a license before it could be granted, and that it must be ratified by two-thirds of the grand jury and by the Court of Sessions. New Brunswick, in 1855, was in advance of all other provinces, for it passed a prohibitory law, which, however, only remained in force a few years. The Temperance Act 1878 was the result of a succession of appeals to Parliament. The speaker next referred to the Liquor License Act of last session. He did not think that this was the time or place to discuss some of the questions that had lately arisen concerning it, for unfortunately party had entered too largely into these questions. For his part he was a temperance man first and a politician afterwards. He had, however, predicted last year that the Privy Council would not sustain the opinions expressed in Parliament that the Local Legislatures has no right to control the liquor traffic, and that all their legislation for the subject was null and void, and circumstances had since shown his prediction to have been correct. The case was now somewhat different from what it was when the case of Hodge v. The Queen was brought before the Privy Council, because there was then no conflicting laws. He regretted that there would be a contest between the Dominion and the Province through the establishment of the new Act, which was something temperance people did not desire to see. The press was on the side of temperance, and the House should be divided on the subject this very session.

The temptations thrown in some people's way, by the common custom of exposing all kinds of articles at shop doors is much greater to some than is often realized. No doubt many a boy has picked up his thieving habits by picking up small articles lying thus loosely in his way. A man was recently convicted before an English court for stealing from a shop door, but the judge refused the prosecutors any expenses in the case on the ground that the loose exposure of the goods held out a temptation to steal.

The Duke of Wellington, on being asked by Lord Warncliffe, "Is drunkenness, in your opinion, the great parent of all crime in the British army?" replied, "Invariably!"

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 1884.

—The proceedings this week in both the House of Commons and the Ontario Legislature have been of a routine character. The discussion on the Major Gen. Luard embroglio in the House of Commons caused quite a brush among military members, in the course of which the Mail was repudiated by several Conservatives.

—Mr. Ree has been absent an entire week from the Legislature, yet the business of the House seems to be progressing all right. "Bob Jack," who is a good Tory, should see that A. H. Roe does not draw pay from both the Legislature and the County Council for this week.

—On Monday last in answer to Mr. Charlton, Sir Leonard Tilley said the net amount of the public debt of Canada on January 1st, 1884, was $163,578,402. This amount does not include the millions of dollars voted away since the Dominion Parliament opened this session. It certainly looks as if this Canada of ours is fast approaching bankruptcy and ruin.

—A deputation from the U. E. Loyalist Committee applied to the County Council yesterday for a small grant towards the expenses of the proposed celebration in Adolphustown on the 16th of June. The project is worthy of a grant and we have no doubt the Council will not refuse the request.

—The by-law which Mr. Ball gave notice of last session to do away with county roads, was voted down on Wednesday. Now that the Council has again expressed itself in favour of adhering to the county roads system it should devise some means of keeping the roads in better condition, especially in winter. At every session there are bills for damages presented as the result of the roads being improperly kept. This should not be.

—It will be remembered that during the

COUNTY COUNCIL.

March Session.

The March session of the County Council opened on Tuesday afternoon last. All the members were present. The only change in the representation was that of Mr. John D. Ham as Reeve of Newburgh in place of Mr. Chester Files.

The WARDEN on taking the Chair congratulated the members on their health permitting them to again reassemble at the County board. He stated that the finances of the County were in a satisfactory condition. He reported that the Clerk was unable to attend the Council owing to illness, but hoped to be able to attend Wednesday morning. In the meantime he suggested the appointment of a Clerk pro tem.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, seconded by Mr. J. C. CARSCALLEN, Mr. Fred Roe was appointed Clerk pro tem.

The minutes of the last day's proceedings of the January session were read and approved.

A communication was read from Mr. Fred Membery, claiming $10 damages to his horse and cutter while driving the mails on the county road between Hawley and Chambers P.O.—Referrred to the Roads and Bridges Committee.

The account of N. Ure & Co. for stationery, referred to the Clerk last session, was, on the report of Mr. Mordan that the County was not liable, ordered to be filed.

On motion of Mr. SEXSMITH, Mr. John D. Ham was placed on the Finance Committee in the place of Mr. Chester Files, late Reeve of Newburgh.

Mr. SHARP moved, seconded by Mr. POLLEY, that the Treasurer be instructed to bring down the last pay-list of the County Councillors, also the mileage each member received.

The mover said he introduced the motion at the request of the Reeve of Amherst Island.

Mr. POLLEY said he had seen a letter in the public press over the signature of "Bob Jack," accusing him along with other members of receiving extra pay from the Council. Now, when he was paid last session it never occurred to him whether he had received too much or too little. He put the money in his pocket and never gave it a second thought. He did not wish to receive more than he was entitled to, and if he had received too much he did not wish to keep it. The paylist when brought down would show how the matter stood.

Mr. MALLORY said that he understood that the reeves of the back townships and of Amherst Island had been granted an extra day's pay because of their having to start a day earlier than the members near by to attend the Council.

Mr. PARKS said that this, no doubt, was what the writer referred to.

The motion was carried.

The Council then adjourned till 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

WEDNESDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Council met at 10 a.m., pursuant to adjournment. The minutes of yesterday were read and confirmed.

A communication was read from Messrs. Gibbard & Son, claiming damages to their hearse which had been upset on the county road between Napanee and Morven, to the amount of $15.—Referred to Committee on Roads and Bridges.

SALE OF DEBENTURES.

Mr. WILSON presented the report of the Finance Committee as follows :—

The Finance Committee beg leave to report that they have opened the following tenders for the purchase of county debentures :—

1st. Edwin H. Smythe, of Kingston, tenders $31,650 for $33,600 in accordance with our adver-

REID, that the correspondence and tenders be read.

Mr. MALLORY moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. PERRY, that they be not read.

The WARDEN said he understood that the chair had already ruled that they be read.

Mr. MALLORY withdrew his motion.

Correspondence was read from Mr. Smythe, of Kingston; Mr. J. G. McDonald, manager of the London & Canadian Loan Agency, Toronto; J. M. Macker, Kingston; Messrs. Scarth, Cochran & Co., Toronto; Robins Bros., of Toronto, and also a telegram from the same, asking information respecting the advertisements they had seen in the papers.—The Committee was instructed to recommend the Council to file the same.

The tenders of Messrs. Smythe, Kingston; J. G. McDonald, Toronto; Dominion Bank, Napanee; P. P. Aylsworth, Bath; J. Snider, Napanee.—The Committee was on motion instructed to recommend the Council to file the same.

The report was read clause by clause and adopted.

AUDITORS' REPORT.

The auditors' report was then read as follows :

We have carefully examined the books and accounts of your Treasurer for the year ending 31st December, 1883, and have compared each item of payment with its appropriate voucher and have found them correct with some trifling exceptions. The sum of $227.86 being accrued interest for the past year on the amount deposited to the credit of the Sinking Fund should have been added to that amount but was overlooked until after the close of the year; it will, however, appear in next annual statement.

The statement shows a balance of cash on hand of $702.11, and in the Dominion Bank of $1,554.44. We find, however, that only the sum of $1,127.81 was at the credit of the Treasurer in the bank on Dec. 31st, '83, the balance having been checked out by him in error on private account.

It is only necessary to call the attention of the Treasurer to this matter to have it corrected, but as the account with the bank constitutes one of the largest and most important accounts of the county we deem it our duty to refer to it.

We beg to recommend that the Treasurer be authorized to purchase a new stamp for stamping "Paid" and date of payment on all his vouchers and thus render it possible to have this very desirable method of marking vouchers uniformly carried out.

We have prepared a statement in detail of Income and expenditure properly classified, also an abstract of the account together with trial balance and statement of assets and liabilities which we submit herewith.

W. F. HALL, JOHN HINCH, } Auditors.

The report, together with the accounts of the auditors' for $100, were referred to the Finance Committee.

The Council adjourned till 2 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Upon resuming, a communication was read from Mrs. Jane Thompson, asking for damages to the amount of $20 to buggy and harness in August last on the Kingston and Napanee road.

The WARDEN said this matter had been referred to the Committee on Roads and Bridges last December and they recommended no action.

Mr. HAYCOCK, County Councillor of Frontenac, was present and was heard. He said the accident had occurred, as the communication set forth, and Mrs. Thompson had asked him to present the petition to the Council and explain it. There was a load of wood on one side of the road at which her horse became frightened and swerved to one side into a ditch four or five feet deep. She and her children were thrown out and the buggy and harness were badly broken. She could not force them to pay it, because she had not entered an action within three months after the accident, but he thought they would not let that interfere with their doing what was right.

Mr. POLLEY moved, seconded by Mr. PERRY, that the communication be referred ing improperly kept. This should not be.

—It will be remembered that during the election of 1882 the Tory speakers and canvassers made a good deal of capital for the Premier out of an alleged promise that he would cause the erection of a new post office and customs house in Napanee. It now turns out that such a thing as the erection of a public building in Napanee was never contemplated by the government. It was only a little "taffy" the politicians were giving the people of Napanee. When the question new post offices was being discussed in the House on Wednesday, Sir Richard Cartwright pointed out that the promised building in Napanee had not been erected. Sir Hector Langevin, Minister of Public Work, in reply said that "this was the first time his attention had been called to the requirements of Napanee in the matter of public buildings."

If the government's attention was never called to the matter, there was some tall lying done by some of our local politicians.

Bob Jack Wants an Explanation.

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

SIR,—According to THE EXPRESS and other Napanee papers the County Council of Lennox and Addington sat in January, 1884, five days, and the largest amount allowed them by law is $3 each per day. According to the pay list receipted Mr. Bosley received pay for six days at $3 per day, amounting to $18, and $3.50 mileage; Mr. Lane received pay for seven days at $3 per day, amounting to $21, and $8.50, mileage; Mr. Polly received pay for six days, at $3 per day, amounting to $18, and $2.50 mileage.

Mr. Editor, perhaps Messrs. Bosley, Polly, or some other person, will explain the above instead of getting their backs up and abusing Bob Jack or drawing red herring across the track.

Yours &c., BOB JACK.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The March monthly meeting of the Board of Education was held in the Council Chamber on Tuesday evening last.

Present—A. L. Morden, Chairman; Chas. James, Secretary, and Messrs. McCay, Webster, Dunning, Russell, Perry, Strong, Henry and Carlette. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. A communication from the Mail Printing Company, Toronto.—Filed.

The auditors' abstract statement of High and Public School accounts was presented and read, and on motion it was referred to the Finance Committee.

On motion, Messrs. Strong and Perry were appointed school visitors for the ensuing month.—Carried.

The following accounts were ordered to be paid:—D. W. McKim, repairing pump, $3; Webster & Boyes, two rods for wood shed, $3.50; Mr. Patterson, delivering ice for High School, $10.50; R. G. Wright, seats for schools, $59.14. J. J. Perry, glass, putty, &c., for High School, $13.33, was referred to committee with power to act.

Mr. Henry reported that Mr. Fessenden, head master of the High School, was willing that the Board should have a portion of his garden, provided that they would fence it in and flatten the ground as a play-ground for the boys attending the school.

The Board then adjourned.

The Finance Committee beg leave to report that they have opened the following tenders for the purchase of county debentures:—

1st. Edwin H. Smythe, of Kingston, tenders $31,650 for $33,600 in accordance with our advertisement for tenders, rebating accrued interest to date of sale.

2nd. J. Grant McDonald, of Toronto, tenders $35,011 for $33,600 of debentures on 1st September next with coupons attached for half year ending Jan. 1st, 1885.

3rd. The Dominion Bank tenders at a rate that will enable them to obtain 6 per cent on the investment.

4th. P. P. Aylsworth, Bath, tenders for $3,000 at par or less if any are sold at par or less than par.

5th. J. Snider, Napanee, tenders for one debenture at par.

And your committee after carefully considering the various tenders beg leave to recommend that E. H. Smythe's tender be accepted, provided an arrangement can be made with proper security that the tender will be carried out.

Mr. WILSON said that the Council would remember that at the last session the Finance Committee were authorized to advertise for tenders for the sale of debentures, and in accordance with that resolution he inserted advertisements in all the papers for tenders up till March 4th. He explained how the committee had thought it wisest to accept the tender of Mr. Smythe of Kingston. He moved the adoption of the report.

Mr. PARKS wanted to know if the Council had given the committee power to close tenders by March 4th.

Mr. WILSON said that nothing had been said about it. It had been left in the hands of the committee to report at March session and it was necessary to do that in order to be able to report.

Mr. LANE seconded Mr. Wilson's motion that the report be adopted.

Mr. PARKS said that by shortening the time for closing contracts the number of applicants might have been restricted. They could have reported that they had received tenders and describe them, and further extend the time till June. They might get a better offer.

The WARDEN said that a communication had been sent to Mr. Herring, late chairman of the Finance Committee, and he wanted to know if it was in the committee's hands.

Mr. WILSON presented it from Mr. J. M. Macker of Kingston, asking information from Mr. Herring respecting the sale of debentures and the time for closing them up. Mr. Wilson presented another from the same person addressed to himself, saying that he had written a letter to him but had never been answered and again asking information.

Mr. HAM said he was not here last session but he understood from the reports in the papers that one of the principal causes for holding the March session was to consider these debentures. It was very indiscreet to lay it over until the June session. The offer of Mr. Smythe was a very good one indeed, and he did not think it could be improved.

Mr. PARKS said the question was not whether this was the best offer or not. He thought it would have been better for the committee to have reported in June. They could open up the tenders again but they might lose this good chance by doing so. They were compelled to close up the business now as the time had been set.

Mr. CARSCALLEN said they could advertise for further tenders which would not thereby endanger the ones they had.

Mr. PARKS moved, seconded by Mr. PERRY, that the Council go into committee of the whole on this report and that all papers and correspondence in connection with these advertisements be brought before the Council.

Mr. WILSON withdrew his motion with the consent of his seconder, and Mr. Parks' motion was then carried.

Mr. WILSON took the chair and the report was read clause by clause.

Moved by Mr. HAM, seconded by Mr. SEXSMITH, that the first clause be adopted. It was evidently the best offer in the report.

Mr. PARKS moved, seconded by Mr doing what was right.

Mr. POLLEY moved, seconded by Mr. PERRY, that the communication be referred to Committee on Roads and Bridges to report.

Mr. BROWN moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. WAGAR, that it be filed.

The amendment was lost and the original motion was declared carried.

Mr. PERRY introduced a by-law to assume as a county road the road from Newburgh to Croydon.—Referred to the Committee on Roads and Bridges.

The WARDEN said there were several by-laws to be brought before the Council, and in order not to get things mixed up the accounts that were in should be disposed of first.

The following accounts were then presented:—Gibbard & Son, supplies, $46.75.—Referred to Committee on County Property; John Paisley & Bro., supplies, $16.68—Referred to Committee on County Property; Hinch Bros., $24.34—Referred to Committee on County Property to report; John Crysdale, repairs to court house and gaol, $5.48—Referred to Committee on County Property.

The Treasurer's statement of receipts and expenditures from Jan. 1st to March 1st was submitted as follows:—

RECEIPTS.

Cash on hand, Jan. 1st, 1884	$ 702 11
" in Dominion Bank, Jan. 1, '84.	1554 44
Receipts from Jan. 1st, 1884, to March 1st, 1884	15573 75	$17830 30

EXPENDITURES.

Money due from different municipalities to the county—Sheffield, $798.92; N. Fredericksburgh, $143.83; Ernesttown, $644.28; Camden, $300; total, $1887.03.

The report was referred to Committee on Finance.

The TREASURER, as he had been requested, presented a statement of the pay received by the County Councillors last year, with number of days and mileage of each.

Mr. HAM moved, seconded by Mr. REID, that whereas a resolution was passed at the December session in 1883, allowing the Reeve of Amherst Island an extra day's pay, that it be struck out at his request.—Carried.

An account was presented from Mr. T. S. Henry for stationery and printing, amounting to $75.76.—Referred to Committee on Education and Printing.

Mr. BROWN brought in a by-law assuming as a county road the road leading from Tamworth to Kennebec road at McDonald's Corners in the township of Sheffield.

A by-law was presented by Mr. DIAMOND, assuming as a county road the road known as the 2nd concession road in the township of S. Fredericksburgh, from the Napanee and Hamburgh road at Galt's Corners to Bath, to be known as the western extension of the Napanee and Hamburgh road.

A by-law was presented from Mr. WILSON, assuming as a county road that part of Centre-st. in Napanee lying between Dundas-st. in Napanee and the road known as the Napanee river county road.

Mr. PARKS brought in a by-law to extend the Napanee river road to the Hay Bay road, the extension to be known as the Napanee and Hay Bay road.

These by-laws were referred to the Road and Bridge Committee to report.

Mr. POLLEY moved, seconded by Mr. DIAMOND, that the Council make a grant to aid in laying a cable from Ernesttown shore to Amherst Island.—Referred to Finance Committee.

The REEVE of Amherst Island brought in the statement of the special grant expended in that municipality.—Referred to Committee on County Property.

Mr. BALL brought in a by-law to do away with county roads, and all roads heretofore known as county roads be vested in the different municipalities in which they are.

been watered, until it was now 30 per cent. money and 70 per cent. water, for the express purpose of over-riding a clause in the contract limiting freight rates at 10 per cent. on the actual cost of the road. The same villiany was blossoming out in Canada that had disgraced the financial corporations of the United States. In the United States the Government is struggling against these corporations, but

IN CANADA THE STRUGGLE IS PAST.

Our Government is merely the tool of the corporations. The question with the people of Canada is, will they condemn those who have proved thus recreant to their trusts. It was to give the people a chance of thus expressing themselves that he believed these meetings should be held. He next dealt with the land policy of the Government and showed that owing to the obnoxious regulations, giving large sections to colonization companies and the C. P. R., many people are now in the United States who would otherwise be settlers in the North West. He next took up the Boundary Award and Streams Bill questions, dealing with them in a vigorous manner. Speaking on the license question he quoted the 97th sec. of the B. N. A. Act which clearly places the power of controling the licensing of taverns, shops and auctioneers in the hands of the Provincial Legislatures. Sir John Macdonald, to spite Mr. Mowat, had tried to take this power from the provinces, and had framed a license law for the Dominion. The result was great confusion, the publicans not knowing whom to pay tribute to—Peter or Paul—Mowat or Sir John. His opinion was that they had better pay it to Mowat. In speaking of the Streams Bill disallowance, he pointed out that the veto power was intended to be exercised only when the act was unconstitutional. Mr. Mowat, for his course in resisting these attacks on the rights of the province deserved the thanks of the whole people. (Applause.)

THE GERRYMANDER.

He next discussed the Gerrymander, showing how the Government had changed the boundaries of 57 constituencies in Ontario in order to provide for four new members. These four members should have been given to four counties he enumerated, which were entitled to them by their population. But this did not suit Sir John's purpose. His object was to "hive" the Grits, and by this unfair and cowardly trick to secure the election of a majority of supporters. Under the pretence of "equalizing the population" he "hived" a surplus of 723 Grits in North Brant; 688 in South Oxford; 1,200 in North Oxford. In nine constituencies a surplus of 7,000 Grits was "hived" and by this outrageous means to two Tories were given the power of three Grits. It was a scandalous proceeding which was condemned by the respectable Conservatives of the ridings attacked. His constituency was one of the gerrymandered, but it had theeffect of increasing his majority from 180 to 300. (Applause.) "Equalization of population" was merely a blind; the gerrymander left the population more unequal than ever before. His hearers migh ask why Sir John had not gerrymandered the Maritime Provinces. Well, he would answer that question by a story. Two gentlemen were sitting on the wayside one day when a green looking Irishman came along and they thought they would have some fun with him. "Good day, Pat," said one. "Good day to you," was Pat's response. "Pat can you tell us which of us three the Devil would take if he came before us now?" "Shure and he'd take meself," said Pat. "How is that, my good fellow?" asked his questioner. from which there is no appeal. In ending he quoted the beautiful words of the poet Whittier on the ballot:—

"Not lightly fall beyond recall
The printed scroll a breath might float,
The kingliest act, the crowning fact,
Is the freeman's vote."

Mr. Charlton in taking his seat was applauded to the echo.

A vote of thanks, moved by Mr. H. M. Deroche, ex.M.PP., seconded by Mr. W. F. Hall, was tendered Mr. Charlton for his b le speech, and the meeting dispersed.

COUNTY COUNCIL.

The mover said that the county roads were never well cared for and as a result bills for damages were constantly being presented to the council. They had a county engineer, but it was very unreasonable to suppose that he could look after the roads all over the county. It never had been done and it was not likely that it could be done. Let each municipality take care of its own roads, and having the responsibility they would be more likely to take better care of them.

Mr. HAM pointed out that teams loaded with grain were continually passing through Newburgh and never stopping on their way to Napanee, and if county roads were done away with, Newburgh would have to keep up roads that she did not derive any benefit from. The township of Ernesttown was very pleasantly located—a road was built through the length of the township which didn't cost them any more than it did the other municipalities; a railway ran through it also; they had the benefit of a water front and had altogether the best advantages. Bath was the same; it only had one road and had the advantage of a sea-port. He thought these municipalities should be generous enough to help their less fortunate neighbors. He didn't think Mr. Ball was serious in his action.

Messrs. Lane and Wagar were willing to support Mr. Ball's motion if he would assume all bridges as county bridges.

The WARDEN said he thought the township of Camden was able to take care of its own roads. Farmers from the back township passed through Camden, and they had to take care of the roads for them.

Several other members spoke in favor of continuing the county road system.

Mr. PARKS moved, seconded by Mr. WILSON, that the by-law be given a six months' hoist, which was carried on the following division:—

YEAS—Messrs. Bosleay, Brown, Carscallen, J. C., Carscallen, T. G., Ham, Diamond, Lane, Lloyd, Reid, Perry, Parks, Sexsmith, Wagar and Wilson.—14.

NAYS—Ball, Davis, Johnson, Mallory, Polly, Sharp—5.

An account of T. Trimble, for meat, amounting to $17.17 was referred to the Committee on County Property.

The Council then adjourned till Thursday morning.

THURSDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Council met at 10 a. m., pursuant to adjournment. After routine—

Mr. SHARP brought in a by-law to assume as a county road, the road from Odessa to the boundary of Camden.—Referred to Committee on Roads and Bridges.

Accounts were presented frem W. M. O'Beirne, for advertising, to the amount of $16 62; and from Templeton & Beeman, printing and advertising, $74 58, both of which were referred to the Committee on Education and Printing.

Moved by Mr. PARKS, seconded by Mr. DENISON, that the Committee on Roads and Bridges, in making out their appropriations to the different municipalities in aid of legal way the municipalities of Adolphustown, Amherst Island and Kaladar could not get a cent. They had no county roads. He thought justice should he done.

The motion was carried after a short discussion, in which the members all spoke in favor of dealing out justice instead of law.

Mr. BROWN moved, seconded by Mr. WAGAR, that the township of Sheffield be allowed to expend $100 of the grant to that municipality for 1884 on the road from Tamworth to McDonald's Corners—Carried.

Mr. WILSON said the question of back taxes was one that had always given the council a great deal of trouble, and the clerk had made a synopsis of the clauses in the statute book dealing with this subject, which were read. It showed that the law had not been complied with in any of the municipalities. He suggested that a short printed list of rules should be prepared and forwarded to each assessor and township clerk for their future guidance. The suggestion met with co-incidence from nearly all the members of the council.

Mr. WILSON moved, seconded by Mr. J. C. CARSCALLEN, that the clerk be authorized would take if he came before us now?" "Shure and he'd take meself," said Pat. "How is that, my good fellow?" asked his questioner. "Why, becase he's shure of ye two at any toime." (Great laughter.) Sir John did not touch the lower provinces because he is sure of them at any time, but not always of Ontario. (Applause.) He next dealt with the Charlebois and McDonald tender outrage of Sir Charles Tupper, which resulted in a loss of $208,000 to the Dominion. He held that a government which was proved guilty of such contract jobbery did not merit the confidence of a free people. He pointed out that the new franchise bill meant the formation of two distinct sets of machinery in each province—two voters' lists in each county and two setts of regulations. The new voters' lists were to be in the charge of revising barristers, creatures of the government, from whom there was to be no appeal to the county judge, as now; no remedy, no redress. A government that has so forfeited the confidence of the people that they have to resort to this sort of thing to retain power, the sooner an end is put to it the better for public morality, for the actions of the government are having a damaging effect on public morals. Many men who in their private lives would scorn to do a mean or dishonest act are willing to defend and support a government they know is corrupt. If men could be led to vote more in the interests of their country and less for party a stop would be put to this sort of thing. If the people are not soon led to adopt this course he had little hope for the future of the country. The charge had been frequently made by the Conservative press and speakers that the Reform party had no policy. He thought the Reform party had a platform and a vey broad one. One of the planks was the reorganization of the Senate which does not in its present shape represent public sentiment in the least. It has been packed with worn-out Conservative politicians who seemed to think their only duty was to do the bidding of the man who appointed them. Other planks were the liberty to make our own treaties; reduction and equalization of the taxes in such a way as not to favour the rich at the expense of the poor, as at present; reduction of the expenditure—that the increase of the public debt which is now $40 per head be stopped. We would protect the farmer against the monopolist. We hold there should be a stop to contract outrages. We would protect the North-West from huge railway and land monopolies. We protest against the gerrymander. In short, the Reform party has a policy wide in its scope and beneficent in its character. (Applause.) Liberty is a priceless heritage and should be cherished. We, at this day, do not often stop to think what our liberties cost or we would be more on the alert to defend them. He deprecated the extreme party spirit in the country and expressed the wish that an independent party would arise which would keep a check on both parties. Although we claimed greater purity in the administration of our public affairs than in the United States, yet it was significant that not a man who was connected with the Credit Mobilier scandal in the United States some years ago—which paled into insignificance alongside our Pacific scandal—was in public life there to-day, while every man who figured in the Pacific Scandal held high and responsible offices in Canada. Schuyler Colfax, ex-President of the United States, upon whom the bare suspicion rested that he was implicated with Oakes Ames, was hurled from power and could not now be elected to any office even in his own State. The contrast, he said, was very detrimental to the people of Canada. He appealed to his hearers not to vote through thick and thin for party. Judge the men and their actions. Every elector was a judge, and he is a tribunal

DENISON, that the Committee on Roads and Bridges, in making out their appropriations to the different municipalities in aid of keeping up the county roads, be requested to take into consideration the increased travel over the roads leading to Napanee market by heavy loads and the difficulty of keeping said roads in repair, and that they make their appropriations accordingly.—Carried.

Mr. SEXSMITH, Chairman, brought in the first report of the Committee on County Property, recommending that none of the by-laws referred to them be passed.

Mr. SEXSMITH moved, seconded by Mr. SHARP, that the report be adopted.

Mr. PERRY moved, seconded by Mr. HAM, and resolved, that the Council go into the Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on County Property.

The yeas and nays were taken as follows:—

YEAS—Carscallen, T. G., Denison, Diamond, Ham, Perry, Parks, Reid and Wagar—8.

NAYS—Ball, Bosleay, Brown, Carscallen, J. C., Davis, Johnson, Lane, Lloyd, Mallory, Polly, Sexsmith, Sharp and Wilson—13.

The original motion was carried.

Mr. BOSLEAY moved, seconded by Mr. PERRY, that the township of Effingham be joined to Kaladar and Anglesea for municipal purposes, and that the Council pass a by-law to that effect.

The mover and seconder spoke on the subject and showed that it was in the interest of Kaladar to take such a course. It would not injure the county in any way. The motion was carried unanimously.

Mr. SHARP moved, seconded by Mr. MALLORY that rule 35 of the Council regulations enacting that no by-law can be brought in without first giving a day's notice, be suspended, for the purpose of allowing Mr. Bosleay to introduce his by-law—Carried.

Mr. BOSLEAY introduced a by-law to assume as a part of Kaladar the township of Effingham.

The by law then received its first reading and the Council went into Committee of the whole on the second reading, Mr. Bosleay in the chair.

The by-law was read clause by clause, and passed without amendment and so reported. The report was adopted and the by-law received its third reading and was finally passed.

Mr. T. G. CARSCALLEN brought up the matter of insurance on the jail and court house, which he considered was too high. If the buildings were burned he didn't think they could get the amount they were insured for, and it was a waste of money to pay so much insurance. He asked that Mr. Ham, as an old insurance agent, be allowed to speak on the subject.

Mr. HAM said he didn't think the endorsements were properly executed. They were done in a very slipshod manner and there was a possibility that the county could get no insurance money at all in case of fire. He coincided with Mr. Carscallen that the buildings were too highly insured.

Mr. PARKS moved, seconded by Mr. SHARP, that the question of the insurance on county buildings be referred to a committee composed of the Warden and Messrs. Ham and T. G. Carscallen—Carried.

Mr. REID moved, seconded by Mr. PERRY that Camden be allowed to expend $100 of the money to be granted that township for county roads, for 1884, on the road leading from Newburgh to Croyden, and known as the western road.

Mr. DIAMOND said the council could not legally make such an allowance. The money was granted to be expended on county roads, and the law compelled them to do so. It might be morally right but it was legally wrong.

Mr. BROWN said if they looked at it in a the members of the council.

Mr. WILSON moved, seconded by Mr. J. C. CARSCALLEN, that the clerk be authorized to have 100 copies of the duties of clerks and assessors of each municipality printed and distributed—Carried.

A communication was read from Mr. S. Gibson, asking the council to furnish wire to build a wire fence on the Tyendinaga road, near the railway track, which was drifted up every winter and passers-by had to drive through the fields. If the council furnished the wire the owners of the property would build the fence.

Referred to the Committee on Roads and Bridges.

The council then adjourned till 2 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Upon resuming—

A deputation appointed by the General Committee on the proposed U. E. Loyalist celebration at Adolphustown, in June next, was present, and presented a petition to the council asking for aid for the purpose of erecting a monument to memory of their ancestors and to hold a celebration next summer. Messrs. J. J. Watson, Jos. B. Allison and Dr. Ruttan spoke in an appropriate manner, setting forth the claims of the U. E. Loyalists upon the council.

Mr. SHARP moved, seconded by Mr. JOHNSON, that the matter be referred to a committee composed of the Warden and Messrs. Ham, Polly, Mallory, and the mover and seconder—Carried.

Mr. HAM moved, seconded by Mr. WILSON, that a petition be presented to the Dominion Government asking for aid to extend the N.T. & Q. R.R. so as to make a junction with the Ontario & Quebec Railroad, and fill up a troublesome sink-hole near Yarker that is taking more money than was expected—Carried.

Mr. SEXSMITH presented the second report of the Committee on Roads and Bridges which stated that they had examined the report of the money expended on roads on Amherst Island and found that the grant of $200 had been expended in full; recommending on the account of Gibbard & Son of $15 for damages, no action; on the account of Fred Membery, no action; on the account of Mrs. Jane Thompson they find that the matter had been disposed of by the council last December and recommended that the matter be referred back to the council. The by-law to assume as a county road a certain road in Ernesttown be not passed—Report adopted.

Mr. CARSCALLEN presented an account from Alex. Armstrong for calsomining two rooms, $12.06, which was referred to the Committee on County Property.

The council then adjourned.

Adolphustown U. E. L. Memorial E. Church.

The English Church people in the vicinity of Adolphustown have subscribed handsomely towards the building fund of the proposed church, fourteen individuals contributing one hundred dollars each. The ladies, by an excellent entertainment, realized over $80. The total amount subscribed so far is $1,705. The first load of sand has been deposited on the ground. Well done, Adolphustown!

PRESENTATION.

The old Town Hall, Odessa, groaned and creaked, the plaster on the ceiling grinned to such an extent as to show the naked lath through twenty apertures, whilst numbers were being added to the already crowded audience Monday evening. The occasion was the concert for the benefit of popular Capt. Atkins. Every available seat was occupied and standing room was at a premium. As Mr. Atkins entered the hall he was greeted with a hearty clapping of hands to which he bowed his acknowledgment. A pleasing programme was presented, the contributors being Odessa, Portsmouth, Napanee and 2nd concession talent. After this, Capt. Atkins was called to the platform, and Rev. J. J. Leach, on behalf of the Captain's many friends, read an address and presented him with a purse containing $42. The Captain feelingly replied in that quiet taking way of his which at once commands respect, thanking his friends,

Merited Praise.

The universal praise bestowed upon Kidney-Wort as an invaluable remedy for all disorders of the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, is well merited. Its virtues are universally known and its cures are reported on all sides. Many obstinate cases have succumbed to it after they had been given up by the doctors, and a thorough treatment will never fail to cure. Sold by all druggists. See adv't.

A Favorite Everywhere.

Wherever introduced Hagyard's Yellow Oil finds friends. It is the old reliable household remedy for external and internal use in all aches, pains, lameness and soreness of the flesh. A. L. Green, a prominent druggist of Belleville, says: "It is a great favorite here and has a good sale."

IN THE TREATMENT OF DYSPEPSIA WE HAVE in Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya a remedy worthy the attention of all those suffering from this protean disease. We frequently meet with cases in which all ordinary methods of treatment are of no avail; the stomach and bowels continue disordered, the liver torpid, tongue heavily coated, disagreable taste in the mouth, acidity, waterbrash, flatulence, head aches, drowsiness after eating, and irritability and restlessness, with a depression of spirits. Here the food is not digested and assimilated, the blood becomes impoverished, and constitutional vigor improved. The great number of these cases in which the Elixir has proved successful has demonstrated beyond question its efficacy in this distressing affection.

JAMIESON—At North Gower, on Tuesday, March 11th, James Jamieson, brother of Mr. J. Jamieson, M.P., and Mr. T. Jamieson, of Napanee, in the 49th year of his age.

Wisely Adopted by Dairymen.

The adoption by most of the prominent dairymen and farmers of the United States of the Improved Butter Color made by Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt., is a proof of their wisdom in a business point of view. Nearly all winter butter is colored in order to make it marketable, and this color is the best in regard to purity, strength, permanence and perfection of tint.

—James Brayley, Hamilton, says: "I read the testimonials for McGregor's Speedy Cure and found that I had not to go to New York, Philadelphia, Louisiana or Texas to find living witnesses of its value, we had plenty of persons right here to prove its merits. I got a bottle and it helped me right away. I was as bad with Bilious Fever and Indigestion as I think any one could be. I have taken three bottles and am nearly well and can eat any kind of food without it hurting me. I may say that I am better than I ever expected to be." Free trial bottles at T. A. Huffman's and A. W. Grange's drug stores.

Rest and Comfort to the Suffering.

"Brown's Household Panacea" has no equal for relieving pain, both internal and external. It cures Pain in the Side, Back or Bowels, Sore Throat, Rheumatism, Toothache, Lumbago, and any kind of a Pain or Ache. "It will most assuredly quicken the Blood and Heal, as its acting power is wonderful." "Brown's Household Panacea" being acknowledged as the great Pain Reliever, and of double the strength of any other Elixir or Liniment in the world, should be in every family handy for use when wanted, "as it really is the best remedy in the world for Cramps in the Stomach, and Pains and Aches of all kinds," and is for sale by all Druggists at 25 cents a bottle. 24-12-1y.

Love's Questioning.

BY R. CROOKENDEN.

If from my furtive eye should spring
The mute confession of a look;
And to my cheek his glances bring (Like timid bird on doubtful wing)
The ready blush Love ne'er mistook—
Then, should his eye a truant prove,
And, wanton, seek another's love,
Could I forget and coldly frown?
Would scorn then weigh my eyelids down?
And all my pleasant dreams be flown?
Ah no!
s presence yet my heart would fill
With throbbings I could never still,
And tell-tale blushes glow apace.
And drive the stoic from my face.

And should he whisper in mine ear
A secret both our hearts had known,
Which, like the vale when Summer's near,
Or joy's involuntary tear,
And all too full for silence grown;
And should he then Love's silken chain
With ruthless hand throw off again,
Could I in anger breathe his name?
Or blight with bitter spite his fame?
Or glory in his loss or shame?
Ah, no!
His truant heart I'd strive to reach
With wiles that only Love can teach;
I'd lure him with each tender grace
That in this bosom holds a place.

But O! how cruel thus to chide
This trusting heart, so fond and true;
His blindness, apatny and pride
Still take him farther from my side.
Well, be it so. Ingrate, adieu!
But could'st thou sound before we part
The deep recesses of this heart,
Oh, what would'st thou not give to share
The treasures that he hidden there!
Will naught thy wilful heart ensnare?
Then go!
Go, blinded, go, and never more
Shall Love present so rich a store,
But thou dost wound me, cruel Fate—
I must not love, yet cannot hate.

CUPIDITY AND CRIME.

"Nora has sent you her most prized possession," said Vance abruptly, as Nettie turned to him with a little gasp, too bewildered and taken aback to speak, while Jenny and Mrs. Clare pressed forward to examine the costly gift.

"But ought I to take them, Vance," she asked shyly—"jewels like these?"

"My dear, she is weighed down with jewels. Nora has more than she will ever wear or care for."

"But her mother's jewels—surely she must prize them!" the girl said, in a tone almost of distress. "If they had been any other jewels!"

"My dear Nettie, she could not give you Lord de Gretton's presents; these are her own," the young man answered a little brusquely, for he hated to think the state to which his step-sister must have been brought before this last sacrifice was made.

Nora had always been generous—the value of her gift was nothing; in her new state she could afford that and more. But these had been a sort of fetish to the Nora of the old days. She who would cheerfully strip herself of every other possession lent these only with extreme reluctance. It had always seemed to hurt her to see them glittering on Cristine's white neck and arms, as, at the time of the Nettleton balls, they not unfrequently did, for Miss Singleton admired the pretty jewels sincerely and what she admired or covet she seldom failed to obtain. Vance knew in his heart that, if Nora had been Arthur Beaupre's wife, she would have worn her mother's pearls at her own bridal, and parted with them only at her a week's engagement at Stoke Vernon, the small West-Country town to which so terrible a celebrity was soon to attach. It was the regatta week, the annual awakening of the slumberous little place, and the run on amusements of any kind was—for Stoke Vernon—tremendously great.

The queer irregularly-built town did not, of course, possess a theatre, or even a hall of any decent size or shape, and Nettie, who, on the strength of her growing popularity, was getting a little proud, was very much disposed to pooh-pooh the engagement. But her husband's popularity was still in the clouds, she had a vacant week, and, even could he have spared the pound, he could not spare the practice, so he asserted his rights as lord and master to accept the manager's offer, and Nettie, with only the mute protest of an exquisitely comical grimace, gave in, and followed him whither the guiding hand of Providence most surely led.

The work was easy in that easy-going place, and, as they had much time at their disposal, they wandered through the outskirts of the town, up the green fern-clad hills, and through the lovely over-arched lanes, lounged on the broad red sands, hunted for madrepores and sea-anemones in the clear cool green pools amid the slippery boulders, sailed on the summer sea, and, as Nettie said, renewed the enchantment of the honeymoon in the oddest and most unexpected fashion.

"Are you sorry we came?" Vance asked her, with a half laugh, one morning, being so very sure what the answer would be.

"Sorry!"—the pretty girlish face, to which the fresh morning breeze gave back all the dainty coral tints the gaslight stole away, lighted all over with the energy of her answer. "Vance, I wish we could stop here for a month—and we must go to-morrow."

"Ah, well," he said philosphically—it is very easy to be philosophical when you lie on your back in the shade and dreamily watch the gray spiral smoke of your cigar float up in curling clouds to the far perfect blue of a Devonshire sky—"ah, well, all things must end, the brightest the soonest! I should say that was a poetical quotation, only I don t believe the English language supplies 'soonest' with a rhyme. We have laid in a large stock of fresh air and sunshine; we have seen all that is to be seen."

"That I deny," Nettie broke in energetically. "There is one sight I have set my heart on seeing, Vance; and your laziness shall not stand in my way."

Vance groaned in spirit at the words, and looked with meek deprecation into his pretty tyrant's face, though all the time he knew the look was utterly wasted. If Nettie had a fault, of which fact he felt by no means sure, it was that she, so fearfully energetic, had so little appreciation of the dolce far niente, which was the truest joy of her husband's life.

"Troubler of my tranquility," he said, with a deep sigh, "what is there you still wish to see?"

"That," Nettie said, concisely; and she pointed with her forefinger up to the terraced height above, where a small pretty house gleamed marble white against the framing darkness of the trees.

"My dear girl"—with great relief Vance dropped back in his place, nestling the which the sunlight fell dazzlingly. "Shall I ever see her, Vance?"

The young man shook his head; his honest bright young eyes were dark with pain. Still it was hard to give up all thought of seeing Nora; nothing seemed more improbable than friendship between a couple of strolling players and Lord de Gretton's wife; and yet—— The young pair however, had not much time for moody thought; they were to leave Stoke Vernon by the early morning train, and travel straight to Glasgow, where their next engagement was made; their luggage, duly labelled with Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Vansittart's name, had been sent on before them, and they were burdened only with the ulsters, travelling wraps, and hand-bags which even the wisest of women will deem necessary.

As fate would have it, Vance grumbled a little at these superfluities when she set them out overnight; but Nettie laughingly appealed to the landlady, with whom she was at the moment settling all accounts, to say if she had one article too many, and the good woman promptly assured her she had not, adding with that superior smile which most men know only too well and dread—

"Gentlemen never understand these things, mum. I dare say Mr. Vansittart will be glad enough you took your wraps before the day is out."

Nettie laughed, and drew her straps a little tighter as she looked over her shoulder at her lord; the meekness of his aspect disarmed her, and she only said brightly—

"Oh, you must not think him a tyrant, Mrs. Stubbs! He hardly ever grumbles; do you, Vance? But when I left so many things out, I thought that maid, or dresser, with whom I made a half-engagement would have been here to carry them. It is very disappointing."

"It is indeed," the woman said sympathetically. "Little Polly—my grandchild, you know—might help; but I think the train goes at six."

"At six a.m. precisely," Vance said with a laugh. "My dear Mrs. Stubbs, you do not suppose I really mind those things! I claim my privilege to grumble, that's all."

"And, as I weakly told her what train we start by, I have no doubt that Hesba Greer will meet us at the station, and congratulate herself on the fact that we have done all her work for her," Nettie finished, with her quaint little shrug.

And so the matter dropped, passing from their thoughts as a thing of small account then, to be recalled with strange and startling significance afterwards.

The next day, as fair and bright an August morning as ever dawned upon this sad and sin-stained earth found Vance and Nettie early astir. Indeed a strange restlessness possessed them both. When they had swallowed the milk and bread Mrs. Stubbs laid out in the little sitting-room, it was still only half past-four; they had more than an hour to spare.

"Your watch was wrong, Vance," Nettie said, with comic dismay. "We cannot stay here all that time; let us run down and have a farewell peep at the sea."

Vance was nothing loath; so, softly letting themselves out, they walked down the irregular High Street, over the hills

Arthur Beaupre's wife, she would have worn her mother's pearls at her own bridal, and parted with them only at her daughter's; but now what did another link with the old life matter?

"There is a note too," Nettie said, flushing with pleasure as she read the few lines Nora had enclosed to give fresh value to her present. "Oh, read it, Vance; is it not kind?"

It was, the young man thought, as kind as it was brief—a last glimpse of the old Nora, who was to be merged in Lady de Gretton so soon—a little praise of Vance, a fervent wish for his happiness, a promise of future friendship—that was all; but it brought the tears to Nettie's honest eyes and an uncomfortable dimness to her lover's.

"How sweet she is, Vance!" the little girl cried enthusiastically. "She has given the one thing that was wanting to make me quite content. No, no, do not be absurd, sir. I did not mean the pearls, of course, but a word of kindness from your own home."

"Nora was always kind and thoughtful for others," Vance said, with a sigh, his own happiness making him in some dim fashion comprehend the sharpness of his old playfellow's pain. "Poor Nora, I wish we in turn could do something for her!"

"Who knows? Perhaps we may," Nettie said, with a sagacious nod.

The words, seriously spoken, made Vance laugh.

"My dear Nettie," he said with his most superior air, "do you really imagine that Mrs. Vance Singleton could render Lady de Gretton any service? That would indeed be a case of the mouse and the lion!"

"Exactly so," Nettie agreed, looking up innocently into the handsome face. "Why, Vance, what a singularly a propos quotation! The mouse did free the lion, you know, when the lion was caught in the toils."

The saucy little creature certainly had the best of the argument, as Vance was forced, with a grim smile, to admit. But the smile soon faded, for he carried on the allegory in his thoughts, and remembered that from the toils in which Nora had even ceased to struggle Death alone could set her free.

The next day Nettie wore her pearls at the altar, and left them in her mother's charge when the young pair started on their brief honeymoon-trip. It was a very brief one—an elysian week across the silver Solent, and then back to hard work and homely duties.

A round of country engagements lay before them, and then that grand debut in town which was to make or mar Vance Singleton's fortune, and which, in either case, was to be the signal for breaking the news to the Bruces. On this they were both agreed; Nora's wedding would be over and Lord de Gretton's haughty displeasure a thing of small account. Once they knew Nettie, Captain and Mrs. Bruce were sure to like her, the bridegroom proudly thought; and as for Cristine—well, she would be horrified, of course; but he could not mould his life anew to please Cristine. So they planned the course of events, hopefully and cheerfully enough, knowing nothing of the storm-cloud gathering darkly over their innocent heads.

The end of August found them finishing against the framing darkness of the trees.

"My dear girl"—with great relief Vance dropped back in his place, nestling the back of his head comfortably in his open palms—"an Englishman's house is his castle. I cannot take it by storm and run the risk of being arrested as a trespasser, even to satisfy your laudable interest in your neighbours' affairs."

"Have you quite done?" Nettie asked serenely. "Because, if so, you had better dust your coat, which is covered with red sand, and come up the hill with me. An Englishman may show his castle, may he not, you foolish boy?"

"But this not a castle, but a cottage," Vance pleaded forlornly.

"Exactly. It is Cliff Cottage, the marine residence of our county member, Mr. Dalmayne, and one of the show-places of the neighborhood. I read all that in the guide-book, Vance; so you see it must be true."

Mr. Singleton did not see; but protest was evidently useless. He resigned himself to his fate, which was not a very hard one, after all, for, though the sun was warm, the paths were exquitely shady, and vistas of green beauty opened on every side.

"You are good-tempered," Nettie said, with an affectionate and remorseful squeeze of the gray-clad arm, as the handsome young pair stood at the lodge gate, awaiting the answer to their modest summons, "After all, you know, I had no business to tyrannise and triumph over over you like that."

Poor Nettie! It was well she made her little apology when she did, for, after all, the triumph was not hers. The woman who opened the gate civilly informed them that Cliff Cottage was not on view that day.

"But I understand from the guide-book that it was always open to tourists," persisted poor Nettie, with a very crestfallen look; and her husband could not repress an unmerciful grin.

"Quite right, madam; but, in the circumstances, you see——"

"I suppose that Mr. Dalmayne has returned home?" Vance interposed, thinking it time to come to the poor baffled explorer's relief.

"Oh, no, sir!" the woman said, with a surprised look, as though he had shown strange ignorance of a matter of general and engrossing interest. "Mr. Dalmayne is still in Italy; but did you not know that he has rented the cottage to Lord de Gretton for his honeymoon? We expect his lordship and her ladyship to-day."

CHAPTER XVIII.

"Lord de Gretton and his lady will be here to-day."

The woman closed the gate with the words, and left the young pair staring blankly each in the face of the other. To each the shock was great; to Vance it brought a sharp and stinging pain. The thought that his little sister Nora, his pet playmate and loyal friend, was so near at hand, and yet so immeasurably distant, brought him down from his happy cloud-land into a disenchanted region of uncomfortable fact.

"I wish I had seen her!" Nettie said, pausing at the brow of the steep hill to glance wistfully up at the green belt of trees and the pretty white cottage, on Vance was nothing loath; so, softly letting themselves out, they walked down the irregular High Street, over the hills and so down to the beach.

The wind blew fresh and cold across the open sea; but Nettie, in her trimly-buttoned ulster and close little velvet cap, did not mind the chilliness, and revelled in the salt sea-breeze. Chatting gaily, she ran on from stone to stone, as light-hearted as any child, while her husband followed more soberly and more slowly, as became his condition.

Nevertheless he enjoyed the expedition as much as she did, and followed the springy figure with admiring eyes, until it disappeared round a projecting point of the cliff-line, where the boulders were thickest and the red sand was hardly to be seen.

"Take care you foolish child—you may get a nasty fall!" Vance cried, in sudden fear; but the warning words had hardly left his lips, when they were terribly answered by a wild despairing cry and an agonized "Vance, Vance, for pity's sake come quickly,!" in Nettie's clear shrill voice.

It hardly took him a second to lay down all that encumbered him and fly to his wife's assistance, yet in that flash of time a thousand agonizing possibilities flashed through his mind, a thousand scenes of horror rose before him, but not one—oh, merciful Heaven, not one, so terrible, as that which met his sight!

Upon the very verge of the sea, perched on a slippery rock which every instant threatened to dislodge her, stood Nettie, with both arms flung round a slender and desperately struggling female figure.

"Vance, come! I canuot hold her any longer!" Nettie gasped; and in another second Vance stood beside her, and she slipped gently to the ground.

For the moment the young fellow thought only of his brave wife's peril, and while his eyes turned eagerly to her, he restrained the woman's desperate struggles with unconsciously savage force.

Suddenly those struggles ceased, the head dropped back on his shoulder, the body lay an inert weight in his arms. So sudden was the change from violent muscular action to complete repose that it nearly overbalanced him, and, but for Nettie's prompt movement, he would have fallen.

"The poor creature has fainted; she tried to kill herself! Oh, Vance, who is she Nettie's terrified whisper thrilled him like an electric shock. He lifted the prone head; the black hair fell back from the white ghastly face. It was Nora!

"Nora!" Vance said blankly; and he could say no more. For the moment his senses deserted him, and he thought he had indeed gone mad. The whole thing seemed so wildly incredible. Nora, the courted, flattered bride of yesterday, Nora, Lady de Gretton, this desperate fugitive, this would-be suicide! It could not, could not be!

"Vance!" Nettie's voice broke in upon the young man's trance of horror. While he stood staring, trying vainly to understand, she had poured brandy from a flask, and in her quiet helpful fashion, had done her best to call the wandering spirit back. "Vance, come here! What does this mean?"

With a shudder she pointed to some dark spots on the soft velvet skirt, to the stained lace round the pretty wrists, to the small cold hands, which were red with blood.

"Wash them, Vance," She turned away her head, not able to endure the terrible sight. "She has tried to kill herself; she has been driven mad! Oh, Heaven help us all!"

She broke down in a passion of hysterical tears, a brief storm that cleared the atmosphere, and left brave Nettie free to think and act. Vance obeyed her, in a sort of blind stupor, finding as yet no clue to the maze of horror in which his mind was lost.

Meantime, with a long gasping breath, Nora opened her eyes. They rested on the white stern face that bent above her, wildly at first, then with a recognizing glance.

"Vance," she said horsely—"Vance! and here! And I——"

She raised her head from Nettie's lap and looked round her, then at her dress, and then, oh, Heaven, the wordless horror of her look, the maddened gleam of the dark dilating eyes!—she threw out her arms and would have broke into the weird wailing cry that woke the dangerous echoes once before; but Nettie placed one hand upon her lips.

"Be silent, for your own sake and ours," she said authoritatively. "We are here to save you—Vance and I."

But Nora struggled pitifully to break from the strong kind clasp.

"No, no, let me die; it is the only way!" she moaned restlessly. "Vance they will hang me if I am found! Arthur is here, alive and well, and he—is dead—murdered!"

Vance Singleton glanced at his wife; her face was deathly white, but full of steady purpose. She had divined already that which was slowly dawning, in all its ghastly horror, on the man's mind.

"Who is dead, Nora?" Vance asked sternly; and the answer came with a terrible promptitude that made his heart stand still.

"Lord de Gretton. Look!"—holding out her hands with a loathing gesture. "His blood is upon me—the curse of Cain! Oh, Vance, for my father's sake, for yours, for all of our sakes, let me die! The sea is better than the hangman!"

"She is mad," Nettie said, noticing the abhorrence with which Vance drew back from this plain confession of her crime. "Vance, it may be false or true, this—this story; but, truth or delusion, we must save her, if there is yet time."

"Listen, Nora! For your father's sake you must obey us now. We are leaving this place; you must travel with us. Remember that one word such as you have spoken here would kill your father. Do you understand me?"

Nora's wild passion had exausted her strength by this time. Only the unnatural glitter of the restless eyes told of the fire that burned within. She bent her head, and stood trembling from head to foot, but made no effort to escape, while Nettie, rapidly removing her own ulster, buttoned it over the tell-tale dress which she could not touch without a shudder, placed the black velvet hat on the bare head, and tied a thick Shetland veil across the face that must needs have betrayed her.

"MONTE CRISTO."

An Inspection of a Prison Made Famous by Dumas.

Across the beautiful bay from the city an hour or such a matter is the famous Ile d'If, on which is the famous state prison which Dumas made famous by his immortal romance of "Monte Cristo." Every body knows the foundation of the novel. Edmund Dantes, a young master of a vessel sailing from Marseilles, and betrothed to Mercedes, falls in a trap laid by a powerful lover of the girl, and is accused of conveying letters from the Emperor Napoleon, then confined at Elba, to his partisans at Marseilles. He is entirely innocent, but his accuser is powerful in the government, and poor Dantes is torn from the arms of his love and hurried to the Castle d'If. The young sailor was immured here for years, and had given up all hope of again seeing the outside world, when one day he was surprised to hear a scratching noise on the other side of the wall of his dungeon. He answered it and found that it came from an old abbe who had also been confined in the paison for years, and who was digging a hole through the wall, not knowing or caring what the result would be. A few days sufficed to widen the aperture so that they could converse, and the result was that the abbe, who was well-nigh gone with years, confided to Dantes the secret of the isle of Monte Cristo, near Naples, where fabulous wealth was concealed.

The abbe immediately expired, and Dantes determined to make a bold stroke for liberty. The custom was to envelop the dead bodies in a sack and throw them over the precipice into the sea at night. Dantes pulled the corpse of the dead abbe into his cell through the opening and enveloped himself in the sack, secreting a knife about his person. The two soldiers came at the proper hour, carried the supposed abbe, but really the living Dantes, to the precipice and threw it over. The moment he struck the water he liberted himself with his knife and swam to a rock in the neighborhood—there are plenty of them—and escaped by a miracle.

As everywhere else, the people now in charge of the island and the disused prison have made the most of the celebrity that Dumas' great work gave the place. They have selected two dungeons as the identical ones occupied by the abbe and Dantes. They dug the hole between them, and you are shown the cells and the opening, as though the great novel were a historical fact instead of the revelation of the most wonderful romancer France has yet produced.

However, it might have happened; the island is simply a rock in the sea, its summit crowned with a prison as horrible as one could imagine. There are cells below cells. There are dungeons into which the rays of the blessed sun never penetrate. There are others through which all the light there ever is is what may come through a narrow slit in the thick walls, and it is so situated that escape any other way than that suggested by Dumas would be impossible.

A WARNING TO MOTHERS.

How Incorrect Holding of Infants May Result in Convulsions and Death.

It is not often that a medical journal contains an article of such general interest as that contributed by Dr. J. F. Hartigan to the current issue of the American Journal of the Medical Sciences. The article relates to the prevalent infant malady known as spasms, nine-day fits, etc., which has heretofore proved extremely fatal, the number of deaths in this country alone reaching an annual total of twenty-five thousand. The technical name trismus nascentium, will be remembered by those who were interested in the lively discussion which took place upon this disease in the meeting of the board of health between Drs. Verdi, Bliss, and others. It was at this time that several cases of this malady came under Dr. Hartigan's observation, and he became gradually impressed with the importance of determining the cause or nature of a disease so fatal within the first month of infantile existence.

In the article referred to, which covers thirty-eight pages, no less than two hundred authorities are quoted in reference to the extent and fatality of this disease, and it is remarkable that nearly every physician has a different theory. In making post-mortem examinations Dr. Hartigan noticed that there was always an overlapping of the occipital and parietal bones in the head of the infant. He naturally associated the fact with the cause of death, and in pursuing his investigation he found that the same discovery had been made some thirty years previously by the celebrated Dr. J. Marion Sims, then of Alabama. But Dr. Sim's views were not accepted by the profession, a fact which up to his death was a sensitive matter to him, for it was almost a solitary exception in the history of his teaching.

The main point which Dr. Hartigan establishes in his article is that the cure is not in medicine, but that it is simply a matter of posture. When a child is laid upon its back, with its head resting on a hard substance, such as his mother's arm, the yet unhardened bones overlay and press upon the base of the brain, causing spasms and death. By allowing the child to rest upon its side or on a soft pillow, no such trouble can result, and the child remains unafflicted. In support of this, a large number of cases which came under the doctor's personal observation are cited, and it is shown that a change of posture, unless the physician's aid was sought too late, always resulted in cure. More than this, and in sdirect proof of the theory, Dr. Hartigan states that he has produced spasms at will, simply by pressing together the two bones mentioned. In one instance, it is stated that a German woman who had lost three children from this same disease saved the fourth by following directions as to the position in which the child should be held.

Another fruitful cause, especially of the chronic form of the disease, is said to be the modern baby carriage. A child is laid in this deep, narrow, coffin-like contrivance, pillow crosswise. The body as well as the head sinks in the middle. The child has no room to turn, and if it could it would be in imminent danger of smothering from the raised pillow on

"Take her to the station at once, Vance," she said, with an authority her husband dare not dispute. "The things are there ; it will all seem natural. Do not waste an instant."

"And you ?"

In all the whirl and confusion of the moment, with Nora's hand held tightly within his arm, and his heart throbbing in a mingled tumult of horror and pity at the contact, Vance glanced back still at the slender girl-figure bareheaded in the morning sunlight ; but she only waved him on frantically.

"Go ; I will follow with the things. You forget Mrs. Vansittart's maid will travel with you," she said, with a ghastly little smile. "For pity's sake waste no time !"

The walk to the station was a short one ; but it seemed to stretch on and on for ever And on that morning, early as it was, the streets were by no means deserted ; the little town was emptying fast of the visitors drawn thither by the regatta, and Vance dreaded every moment, that he would encounter sume chance theatrical acquaintance who would insist on pausing to bid him "good-bye." And beside that terror was the other haunting fear that Nora's frenzy would break out again.

But fortune favored—no, Vance never used that false and flippant phrase ; reverently and humbly he acknowledged that Heaven helped him in his desperate need. He met no one. And Nora walked beside him with an automatic obedience that saved her. They reached the station, mingled unobserved with the boisterous, chatting, laughing crowd that waited for the "cheap and nasty train," and almost before her husband dared expect her, Nettie joined him there.

Keep vice ahead until the last act and then give virtue a chance. The design of the play is to show how the villains would not have been foiled except for their own foolishness.

One of the series of "Lectures to the People," given under the auspices of the Yorkshire College, was delivered at the Philosophical Hall, Leeds, by Professor Miall, recently, the subject being "Live Dust." Professor Miall commenced by referring to the mode of collecting dust for examination, especially dust floating in the air. A glace slip smeared with glycerine had been extensively used for the purpose of collecting the dust ; but this method was open to the objection that all germs were killed by the glycerine, and that the volume of air which had yielded the dust could not be measured. Water shaken up in a large flask of air had been used to separate the dust, but by this means a sufficient volume of air could not be examined without using a vessel of inconvenient size. Atmospheric moisture, condensed upon the surface of a vessel cooled by ice, had been collected and examined. The modern instrument for passing a measured current of air through a fine jet, and scrupulously collecting all the dust which it contains, was described in detail, and illustrated by means of lantern slides. Proceeding to point out the various kinds of dust found in the atmosphere, the lecturer spoke of volcanic dust, minute particles of magnetic iron (believed to be microscopic meteorite), the dead organic matter which forms a large proportion of common dust, and living organic dust. Of the last named the chief constituents are pollen spores of moulds and mildews, and bacteria. The bacteria he observad, were of special interest nfrom their connection with putrefaction and with certain deadly diseases. I was shown long ago by Schwann that bacteria were indispensable to putrefaction, and that the most unstable organic fluid would not putrefy unless living bacteria obtained access to it. This demonstration ultimately led to Lister's antiseptic surgery. The life-history of some common bacteria was described, and an account given of the way in which a necessary connection between particular forms of bacteria and infectious fevers had been ascertained. The great number of bacteria everywhere present in the air made us feel that we were assailed by the germs of the disease at every point. But two or three practical considerations might be shown to greatly diminish the risk. In the first place, the bacteria of disease formed only an insignificant proportion of the whole number of living germs present n the air ; further, a great number of the bacteria of all kinds were dead, not more than one-twentieth being capable of germination in a suitable fluid ; and lastly the putrefective and other less dangerous bacteria were very prone to get the upper hand of the more special and delicate organisms which constituted the germs of infectious disease.

In his reply to the congratulations of several English Temperance societies on his promotion, Bishop Wilberforce said : "He was thankful every day that he was a total abstainer. He was better in health, lighter in head, and heavier in purse for it."

Cardinal Manning is a practical man, and moreover a strong believer in the principle that example should always enforce precept, in temperance as well as in Church work.

could it would be in imminent danger of smothering from the raised pillow on either side. Arriving home after its jolting and head-jarring expedition, panting and fretful perhaps, it only needs a little improper handling (lf the bones are not already dislocated) to inaugurate the disease. The child refuses to nurse and convulsions follow. A physician arrives, but the cause is not recognized, and all sorts of remedies are employed. Twitchings, convulsions and other symptoms continue until death ensues. This is said to be no fancy sketch, but an every day occurrence.

The custom of "bouncing" on the arms or lap for the supposed purpose of quieting the baby is another evil. Precaution against the disease ought to be observed from birth, by proper instructions to the mother and attendants, and especial care should be taken that the child has a soft feather pillow to lay its head upon when asleep, during nursing, or when carried in the arms or lap. This is probably the reason why there are not more victims of trismus among the better class of people, among whom infants are not allowed to lie upon the back in a narrow crib long enough for injurious effects, among whom too, they have the attention of well paid nurses and the benefit of frequent change of position from the lavish manner in which they are fondled.

A table of 220 deaths accompanies the article, showing that, contrary to the theories of some physicians, the average is the same in winter and summer. In conclusion Dr. Hartigan states that the investigations are yielding good results. During the past year, even with the increase in population, only thirty-four cases were reported by the coroner, a reduction of 37 per cent. from the previous year and 46 per cent. less than the year 1879. He naturally attributes this gratifying exhibit to his efforts to bring the matter to the notice of midwives, through whom it is fast becoming known and understood by mothers.

A Dog at the Telephone.

The telephone has enabled a physician, several miles away, to detect whether a child had the croup. The child's mouth was held near to the mouth-piece of the instrument, and the physician heard it cough. But more singular than this is the following case of a dog recognizing its master's voice through the telephone : Jack is a coach dog that found his master by telephone. In some way Jack got lost, and fortunately was found by one of his master's friends, who went to his office and asked by telephone if the man had lost his dog. "Yes, where is he ?" was the reply "He is here. Suppose you call him through the telephone." The dog's ear was placed over the ear-piece and his master said, "Jack ! Jack ! how are you, Jack ?" Jack instantly recognized the voice and began to yell. He licked the telephone fondly, seeming to think his master was inside the machine. At the other end of the line the gentlemen recognized the familiar barks, and shortly afterward he reached his friend's office to claim his proporty.— Sidney (Australia) Eye.

Better Than Banking.

Banking the house to prevent the cellar from freezing is so objectionable on the score of neatness, and for other reasons, that of the two evils one might better take the risk of possible injury from frost. But even this is not necessary, since there is a neat, cheap and effectual way of making all secure, which cannot be said of banking even at its best. A cellar seldom freezes the first winter after being built, but it will be observed that in subsequent years the walls in drying and settling will become more and more open, so as to let in the wind; this will be found by passing a lighted candle within a foot or two of such walls on a windy night, and one can even feel it too if making the examination at such a time. This is the reason the cellar freezes; not because the walls are not thick enough, for where the air cannot penetrate, as, for instance, through the double glazing of the cellar windows, giving an air chamber of less than an inch, it will not enter, but wherever the air can enter it will carry the frost with it, and such embankments as are usually made are so easily penetrated by the air that they cannot be depended upon as a protection.

But putting a good coat of mortar over the side of the walls to exclude the air, or wind, is a sure remedy. The latter part of summer—the most favorable time—when the cellar is nearly empty, sweep the walls down thoroughly, then mix up a good batch of mortar on the cellar bottom; let this stand a few days to "make" and toughen; then, when all is ready, begin by putting a good body of plaster along the bottom of the sills and well up their sides, on top of the wall; when a sure job is made of that, then slap on the mortar and smooth down over the whole face of the wall, which will make it frost-proof for all time, be cheaper in the long run, and more than answer the purpose of the too common and unsightly "banking up," which makes for four or five months of the year a nuisance about the house, where everything should be neat and tidy, especially during the bare season, when outward surroundings are least attractive.

A Good Time to Paint.

There is no better time to paint buildings than during the pleasant days in winter. Paint spread in cold weather makes a better covering for the wood than if laid on when the wood is hot, and excessively dry, so that the oil is immediately absorbed, leaving the lead or other material used as a chalky substance on the surface ready in a few months to rub off or be washed by rains. It will require a little more paint at a single coat in cold than in warm weather, as the oil will be thickened a little by the cold, but then it will stay where it is put, and a second coat will be less needed.

One advantage in painting now, is the absence of flies and other small insects which, in warm weather, often make freshly laid paint look anything but attractive. If there is snow on the ground to cover the earth, and prevent dust and behalf of the success which brings prosperity and peace and harmony between the purchaser and buyer. A great deal of the trouble with the wheat dates back to poor seed. The association has purchased and will continue to purchase the best Scotch fife wheat that is to be obtained—the pure unadulterated, and unmistakeable stuff. It is the best wheat in the world. We propose to offer it the farmers for seed for just what it costs. If the farmers do not obtain it, it will not be our fault. Every facility will be offered them to produce it, and it will be sold for actual cost, for sowing purposes."

The Diminution of Crime.

The English criminal statistics of last year go to show that there has been a considerable falling off in the number of criminals during the past few years. This is certainly an encouraging outlook. The courts nearly all bear cheerful testimony that the healthy growth of temperance sentiment throughout Great Britain has had much to do with this. The excise returns show that there has been a great falling off in the revenue in connection with the liquor tax, which of course indicates a less quantity of strong drink manufactured. There is therefore less sold, less consumed, and less drunkenness. No less than three Chancellors of the Exchequer have expressed their satisfaction at the decreased receipts from the drink traffic, and the Queen took occasion to congratulate the nation over the same thing from the Speech from the Throne last year. So long as the amount of drink consumed diminishes so long will there surely be a diminution of crime among the people. It is a fact well understood that much of the crime punished every year is induced by intemperance.

Another reason assigned for the diminution of crime is the result of the excellent work done by the Prisoners' Aid Societies. Many a discharged convict has been driven, almost, into crime again simply because of his difficulty in procuring employment in any of the ordinary honest industries. Such men are in bad repute and no one cares for them, or has a good word to say in their behalf. The tendency of all this is to discouragement and to a resort to old crime habits again. These aid societies are calculated to assist and encourage these unfortunates, and probably many an ex-convict is now prospering and honest who would have been in prison again but for the kindly aid extended to him. It is well that such societies are springing up in Canada. There is a grand field of usefulness for them, and they well deserve the encouragement of the community.

Bismarck and the Cronprinz

The profound disagreement between the crown prince ef Germany and Prince Bismarck has long been well known. The prince loses no opportunity to show the German people that he does not share the political views of the chancellor. On one point in particular they differ in toto. Bismarck has a violent dislike to the Orleans princes. The death of the Comte de Chambord, by increasing the chances of a monarchical restoration in

SCENES IN TANGIERS.

Strange Sights in the Streets of the Morocco Capital.

Just below the hotel and outside the gate of the city is the soko or market-place. On Sundays and Thursdays it is filled with a motley crowd, who bring game, meat, eggs, fowl, and other provisions from the surrounding country. It is here that Gibraltar obtains its supplies.

Here you see the genuine Bedouin Arab. Wild and dirty as he is, he is clean when compared with the horrid-looking men from the Riff coast, descendants of the old pirates. They are wild and untamed, and fiercer than wild animals. They do not even cover their heads. Their heads are closely shaved after leaving a lock by which they fervently believe that Mohammed will pull them up to heaven. The Jews are very numerous. They are known by their peculiar dresses. They cringe to the dust and put up with every insult so as to remain in Tangiers.

The noise and din in the market-place is infernal. At least five thousand tongues are at work. You can hardly force your way through the crowd. Once on the outskirts you are lost in great herds of cattle and strings of loaded donkeys from Brrbary. These little creatures carry wonderful loads. They look small by the side of the camels. These animals, relieved of their loads, are lying down in a circle with their fore-legs tied together. Near them are numbers of goatskin tents, filthy in the extreme, and only high enough to sit under. The confusion is terrible. Some of the men are banging on drums, and others are playing the khutah, which is infinitely worse than the Moorish drum.

On passing through two gates we came to a fountain. It was surrounded by a mob of water-carriers. Tattered rags fluttered over their naked legs. They fought fiercely for precedence in filling their water skins. Women whose faces were covered with the exception of an eye crouched on the ground near by, selling bread. The magnificent Moor in flowing white robe and spotless turban, strutted majestically by, not deigning to cast his haughty glance at us. The streets swarmed with children in various costumes. The small shops were packed with men sitting cross-legged. Above, below, around, and beneath there was dirt of every description. Fortunately for us, the viler smells had been tempered by recent rains. In summer the stench is said to be almost unbearable.

This morning we were awakened early by a great noise. We heard cries, shouts, and beating of drums, the firing of guns, and the steady tramp of animals, biped and quadruped. These were the thousands who had filled the "soko" returning to their home in Fez, Morocco, and the great desert of Sahara. There is, however, a dense resident population.—Cor. New York Sun.

A Vivisectionist's Laboratory.

The following somewhat gruesome description of M. Pasteur's laboratory, taken from a recently-published volume entitled "L'Histoire d'un Savant par un tractive. If there is snow on the ground to cover the earth, and prevent dust and leaves from being blown into the paint, all the better. In the very coldest weather it may be well to keep the materials in a warm room, as the paint will spread more easily than if cold enough to freeze water. It is a good plan too, as far as may be, to keep on the sunny side of buildings, painting the east sides in the morning, and the west in the afternoon. The north sides may be painted in the middle of pleasant days, and the south side when it would be too cold to work anywhere else.

All the plain, outside painting of a farmer's buildings may just as well be done by himself and his ordinary farm help, as by a professional painter, though it might be well to employ one such to do the more difficult portions, and to give advice and oversee the work. Excellent paints now come mixed all ready to spread, so that but little practice will be required for a "green hand" of ordinary ability to become equal to any ordinary farm painting. If owners of buildings would paint them a little oftener, one coat would always be enough to put on at a time. It is the long neglected work that takes up oil at a fearful rate, the wood being full of little checks which absorb like a sponge. A thin coat on the surface of solid wood is equal to a heavier coat half absorbed by air checks. A building painted with one good coat every third year, will always look well, while the wood will be thoroughly protected. A painted house is warmer than an unpainted one, the paint filling in many joints that would let cold winds through.

Scotch Fife Wheat.

General Agent Hubbard, of the Minneapolis Millers Association, writes to the Northwestern Miller regarding Fife wheat. He says :—"In all the talk about wheat and wheat grades, the fact should not be lost sight of that it has never been so clearly and forcibly illustrated as in the case of the present crop that the farmers sustain a direct loss and encounter additional dangers by not sowing hard wheat, instead of the soft varieties now in use. Owing to the great increase in the amount of soft wheat raised in the northwest, hard wheat now commands a premium of 7 @ 10c. per bushel. In addition to this difference in value, there is the greater loss occasioned by the diseases to which soft wheat is susceptible and from which hard wheat is exempt. Scotch fife is now the only recognised standard hard wheat, and this variety has never been known to smut, is just as prolific as other varieties, when properly handled, is better adapted to our climate, and is the wheat to which we are indebted for the world wide reputation attained by Minneapolis flours. Would it not be wiser to sow such wheat as is in demand rather than that which buyers and millers do not want? It is a fact well established that smut will reproduce itself, and the farmer who sows smutty wheat next spring will have no one but himself to blame if his crop is graded down on that account. The farmer ought to understand this, if he does not already.

"Now the millers are interested in the production of the best wheat. They are interested in it, if for no other reason in chances of a monarchical restoration in France, has increased in the same ratio this dislike. Prince Bismarck is anxious that the republic should remain in France, thinking that thereby she is more isolated from the rest of Europe and less able to make powerful alliances. The future emperor of Germany looks on the question from a higher point of view. He is a true German, and wishes Germany to retain the fruit of her conquests, but he considers that there is a common interest between the royal families of Europe, and is of opinion that an alliance of all of the crowned heads against socialism and revolution is the surest safeguard against that ever increasing danger.

When in Seville the crown prince spoke in the highest terms of the Comte de Paris, le nouveau chef de la maison de France. It was this idea which was in his mind. His words, repeated as they were by the entire press of Europe, were particularly displeasing to Bismarck. I have it from the very best authority that the chancellor sent at once for the French ambassador, M. de Courcel, and said to him: "Tell your Government, Monsieur l'Ambassadeur, that I know nothing of the maison de France; I do not know what it means."

Prince Bismarck has too much genius not to be well aware of the immense advantage that would accrue to France were Philippe VII. to ascend the throne; but he believes that he is, without assistance, capable of strangling revolution should it show its head, and hence his politics are the exact contrary to those of the kronprinz.

Gunpowder For Sale.

The terribly disastrous gunpowder accident at London a few days ago is drawing attention to the important fact that there are sources of very great danger in the business parts of every town and city such as few have even thought of. Gunpowder is an article of every day demand and it is kept on sale almost everywhere. Even a very small quantity in stock is a standing danger to all the immediate surroundings. Such an accident as that which destroyed three human lives and a large amount of property in London last week may occur in Toronto, in any store where a few pounds of gunpowder is stored, almost any hour of the day. The fact is not a very pleasant one to think of, and yet it should be thought about.

It would not be a very serious hardship on trade to fix "gunpowder limits" in every town just as fire limits are now fixed, and to prohibit all sales of gunpowder within such limits. The safety of the people would be consulted and it would be no great hardship to trade, for it is not an article required by a very great many persons, or for a great variety of purposes. The regulation of confining the quantity kept to ten pounds, or even half that amount, is not of itself sufficient. Even such a small quantity would make a very serious explosion, and the dangers of explosion are too many to be lightly considered.

Chinese try to smuggle opium into San Francisco by putting it into the soles of their shoes. Shall the heathen be allowed to thus trample on our laws?

entitled "L'Histoire d'un Savant par un Ignorant," gives a very striking picture of the modern physiological workshop:

All the animals in the laboratory, from the little white mice hiding under a bundle of cotton wool to the dogs barking furiously from behind their iron-railed kennels, are doomed to death. These inhabitants of the laboratory, which are marched out day after day in order to be subjected to operations or other experiments, share the space with still more ghastly objects. From all parts of France hampers are arrive, containing fowls which have died of cholera or some other disease. Here is an enormous basket bound with straw; it contains the body of a pig which has died of fever. A fragment of lung forwarded in a tin box, is from a cow dying of pneumonia. Other goods are still more precious. Since M. Pasteur, two years ago, went to Pauillac to await the arrival of a boat which brought yellow-fever patients, he receives now and then from far off countries a bottle of vomito negro. Tubes filled with blood are lying about, and small plates containing drops of blood may be seen everywhere on the work-tables. In special stores bottle-like bladders are ranged resembling small liqueur bottles. the prick of a pin into one of these bladders would bring death to any man. Inclosed in glass prisons millions and millions of microbes live and multiply.

M. Pasteur's views on vivisection are known well enough. His own words on the subject are; "Never should I have the courage to kill a bird for sport, but when it comes to experiments I h never been troubled by the sligh scruple. Science in that case has right of pleading the sovereignty of purpose."—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Economy in Elopement.

"That's all bosh!" remarked a well-known American physician to a journalist the other day, as he threw down a paper containing an account of a runaway in which the daughter of a local politician figured as heroine.

"What's bosh, doctor?" asked the reporter, on the lookout for a possible item.

"Why, this runaway match which you have just published. The girl's father is a sharp man, bnt this is one of the sharpest tricks he has ever played since I knew him. The elopement was all a sham. It's as simple as can be. The girl's father is one of the best known men in this section of the town and is a politician besides. He has, necessarily, a large acquaintance with the element who are always expecting him to stand treat upon the slightest pretext, and, what with this and the wedding festivities, supper and other etceteras, his daughter's marriage, if solemnized in the ordinary manner, would cost him a great deal of money. An elopement saved all this, so he just opposed his daughter's wishes strongly enough to give a pretext for the two to run over to Jefferson, where the expenses of the wedding, all tyld, didn't amount to more than five or ten dollars."

A Warning.

Some weeks ago a Halifax Methodist minister married a soldier to a young girl in that city without the necessary license having first been obtained. The understanding was that one would be procured next day in order to meet the requirements of the law. The rascal has since endeavoured to throw the girl off, taking advantage of the fact that the marriage was not a legal one. The minister has been fined $200 for his part in the loose transaction. If the punishment will have the tendency of making other ministers more careful how they perform the important duties vested in them by virtue of their office much good will come out of the exemplary punishment. The fact is that many ministers are entirely too careless in regard to the way they perform their marriage ceremonies. They appear to act as though they did not feel any responsibility rested upon them whatever. A good many unfortunate marriages might be averted if they did but faithfully and deliberately their part of the work, instead of hastily going over the service for any persons calling on them without taking any pains whatever to enquire fully, or at all into the circumstances of the case.

Extraordinay Skating.

When, three weeks ago, seventeen of the fleetest skaters in the country drew into line to start on a ten-mile race, very few had any idea the quiet scholarly-looking gentleman with eye-glasses, old-fashioned skates, and retiring demeanor was destined to astonish them all by his splendid record and easy victory. Mr. Axel Paulsen, from Norway, having thus drawn the attention of the athletic world to his powers as a skater, arrangements were soon made to still further test his abilities in a twenty-five-mile race against the record.

It took place recently in the Washing-

NAPOLEON THE GREAT.

His Infirmity Repeated in the Experience of a Leading Public Man—Truths for the Aged.

(Syracuse, N. Y., Courier.)

"How long has he been in public service?"

"Before the memory of the oldest inhabitant."

"And he has kept his name untarnished during all that period?"

"Absolutely!"

"He is a man I should like to meet."

The above conversation occurred between two gentlemen at one of our leading hotels. The interrogater was from abroad, the other a resident of this city. The conversation had drifted into politics and Hon. Thomas G. Alvord was the man whose record and qualities were being discussed. To trace the history of public men who have grown old in the service is a task both interesting to the investigator and entertaining to those who read his investigations. It was with this truth in mind that the writer set out to call upon the man, about whom those politicians were so earnestly talking, at his spacious residence on Turtle street.

Mr. Alvord, who has been and is, familiarly known as "Old Salt," owing to his advocacy of the salt interest, is now well advanced in years, being on the shady side of seventy. He has long, white hair and a snowy beard which give him an appearance both dignified and grand. His voice is full and clear and the moment any stranger comes into his presence he cannot but be impressed with the inherent power of the man. Indeed he was endowed by nature with an unusually strong organization, both mentally and physically, which all the strain of public life, both as speaker of the Assembly and Lieutenant-Governor, failed, for many years, to in any way undermine.

It was during the year 1881, while Mr. Alvord was a member of the Assembly at Albany, that he first began to feel, most peculiar sensations. At that time he was in the midst of very important work, which was seriously interfared with by reason of the mysterious troubles which seemed to assail him. He felt unaccountable nausea almost constantly, accompanied by occasional violent retchings. History recounts that Napoleon the Great, while in the midst of his public career, was frequently attacked by an enemy greater than any he had ever faced, which came in the same insidious yet violent manner as the terrible troubles that overtook Mr. Alvord, and are to-day menacing so many thousands of others. In speaking on this subject to the writer, Mr. Alvord said:

"This same bitter experience came to me again in 1882 while I was a member of the Assembly, with symptoms identical to those I had felt the year before. I believe it was largely caused by my advanced years, for I had a 'worn out' feeling that was terrible. This conclusion is evidently the correct one, for I was again attacked last Summer while away from all cares and recreating at my Island in the St. Lawrence River. I experienced a painful sense of fullness in the lower portion of the body, accompanied by sensations of feverish heat or chilling shudders. All efforts to move my limbs or body were followed by intense weariness or exhaustion. Those who have reached my years can appreciate my sensations."

"And did neither yourself nor the physicians understand the cause or nature of these troubles?"

"It seems not entirely, for the physicians failed to relieve me and I kept growing worse. I suffered intensely and the only relief I could possibly obtain was by lying upon my back and this was only temporary."

"But you are looking well and strong now.

ments were soon made to still further test his abilities in a twenty-five-mile race against the record.

It took place recently in the Washington Park Rink, Brooklyn, with a result that threw all former records far in the shade, and leaves him without a rival in this branch of athletics.

The scene on the ice during the great race was a very novel and beautiful one. Thousands of merry skaters glanced and whirled, singly or in couples, and hundreds chased from side to side of the great quadrangle to catch a glimpse of the tireless skater as he passed the most favorable points of view. On one side ef the course a dense mass of expectant humanity formed a lane, leaving a pathway about twelve feet wide for the skater, and in the middle distance the judges, timekeepers, and recorders formed an equally interested group at their table. The track is a quarter of a mile, with several sharp turns, and as the spectators watched the racer dashing down the straight stretches it seemed next to impossible for him to round the corners without a collision.

Near the track it was impossible to study his actions closely. At the cry, "There he comes!" the crowd leaned eagerly forward. There was a rapidly increasing and musical ring of steel on ice, the flash past of a dark body, like the flitting of a shadow, which shrank and faded away in a rapid diminuendo of perspective most trying to the eye unaccustomed to such rapid movements. It was only by repeatedly watching him in this position that the spectator could catch an inkling of the secret of his suprising speed. You noted a powerful outward clans failed to relieve me and I kept growing worse. I suffered intensely and the only relief I could possibly obtain was by lying upon my back and this was only temporary."

"But you are looking well and strong now, Mr. Alvord. How did you bring about the change?"

"By using a remedy which is very popular and which I have found wonderfully efficient—Warner's Safe Cure. Indeed it has proven remarkable in its power over me. I believe in it and therefore recommend it to others, especially to those who are advanced in life; who feel a breaking down when there is no necessity and whose lost vitality and manhood remind them of their increasing years."

The interview then drifted to other topics, but as the reporter gazed at the man whose experience is so ripe and who has seen so much of the different phases of life, he could not but wish that those who are suffering from the various forms of physical ailment, and especially those persons who are advanced in years, might see and converse with the veteran whose experience and knowledge have been so rich and who is so firm a believer in the efficacy of the remedy that cured him. There is no excuse for shortening life, as so many have done and are doing. There is no necessity for "breaking down" early in years. Premature decay and death are a disgrace to our modern civilization. They are wholly needless and men or women who permit them when they can be so easily avoided should blame no one but themselves.

ROUND TOWN.

—Town Council next Monday evening.

—The County Council is in session and the genial reeve and deputy are abroad.

—Wanted, an intelligent boy to learn the printing business. Apply at THE EXPRESS OFFICE.

—The Napanee cornet band are negotiating with Mr. Brooks, an E flat player of Picton, to come here as leader.

—Dr. Grange is erecting an office, kitchen and dining-room in the rear of his residence, corner Bridge and Centre-sts.

—At the last regular meeting of the A. O. U. W. ten applications for membership were received. The order is "booming" in Napanee.

—The marble season is approaching. "Knuckle down tight" is a better indication of spring than the appearance of a robin or an organ grinder.

—Mr. Robt. Burley had 36 empty grain bags stolen from his sleigh on Tuesday evening from the Brisco House hotel yard. The party who took the property has been traced and if the matter is not settled he will be made an example of, as he is an old offender.

—Mr. John Forbes of Woodstock has made a match to run Wm. Boyd of that town, formerly of Napanee, against Carruthers of Kingston. The race will be 100 yards for $250 a side, and will take place in Toronto —On Friday afternoon last two vehicles came into collision while turning the corner of John and Dundas-sts. The shaft of one sleigh was broken, but no other damage was done.

—The pancake social will be held according to announcement in the M. E. Church on Tuesday evening next, 18th inst. Buckwheat pancakes and maple syrup. A good programme will be rendered. Tickets, 25c. All are invited.

—Mr. Michael Normoile, who lives near the station, is the owner of a splendid lot of poultry, and lately has been missing some of his finest birds. Saturday evening he set a trap, and in less than an hour a large mink was caught. It was shot.

—A meeting of the Napanee Lacrosse Club was held at the Huffman House on Friday evening last for the purpose of re-organizing for the coming season and to arrange for a dramatic performance. A committee was appointed to negotiate with the Belleville Dramatic Club for that purpose. We understand the performance will take place after Lent. Another meeting of the club will be held this (Friday) evening at the same place for the election of officers. A full attendance of the members is requested.

A Thief Trapped.

A west-end groceryman lately noticed that the quantity of tea in a tea-box in his store was diminishing more rapidly than his sales warranted, and very naturally came to the conclusion that somebody or something was in the habit of pilfering it. He resolved to discover the guilty one, and for that purpose purchased a large steel rat-trap and placed it in the box, covering it well over with tea. Shortly afterwards agonizing cries were heard proceeding from the vicinity of the tea-box, and on the merchant hastening thither he found that he had caught some-"thing" indeed. The author of the cries proved to be a full-sized man, who shouted lustily to be released from his bonds. Before doing so the merchant searched the pockets of his victim and found therein a large quantity of tea, of which the fellow was relieved, and then given the "g. b." in the most approved style. The matter was let drop.

OBITUARY NOTES.

—We regret to learn that Mr. Geo. Fraser, printer, who left Napanee for Denver, Colorado, about three or four weeks ago for the benefit of his health, died in that city on Friday last. He was a good typo and a most estimable young man. He leaves a two children who have the sympathy of a host of friends. The remains were interred in Colorado.

—A telegram was received by J. M. Parrott, Esq., County Treasurer, from Lindsay, announcing the death of his brother, James Richmond.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Plenty of snow yet and the roads are very rough.

—The large maple grove purchased by Mr. Empey is about cut down.

—We are pleased to hear that Mr. Jacob Cline is able to be about again.

—Mr. Michael Pringle has bought part of Mr. Peter Barton's farm.

—Mr. B. Chamberlain is preparing to build a new house.

PERSONAL.—Mr. Merle Sills has been visiting friends in Hay Bay.....Miss Nina Leslie is visiting friends in this vicinity.....Mrs. Michael Pringle has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Empey, at Storrrington.....Mr. Thomas Wagar is about leaving home again for the West.

Mr. Elisha Sharp is convalescent.

—The necktie social and oyster supper announced in your last issue, though the weather was not inviting, was a very good success. Mr. Duprau was present, and as he is a man of eloquence and ability, it would be useless to say that he didn't do justice on such an occasion. Proceeds, about $23. CASSIVELANNIE.

—Mr. Charles Shibley, of Portland, brought 84 bushels of grain to the grist mill here through these heavy roads with one horse. The distance was about five miles.

—Mr. John Chapman a widower of Ernestown, was married to Mrs. Huffman, a widow residing near Moscow.

—Mr. Allan Weagant, formerly school teacher here, is on a visit to his brother, Dr. Weagant.

—Mrs. Allison has returned home after a long visit.

—The Ontario Legislature in amending the law regarding County Councils should put it out of their power to go beyond a certain amount for their services, especially township councillors.

—Our hotel keepers, before they receive a new license, should be restrained from giving liquor to some men who are ruining themselves and families. But so long as they have five cents the liquor will be given. It is a shame and disgrace to our county that men in a Christian community should be allowed to ruin themselves and their families, and no one to interfere.

—The Beaver's classical correspondent in order to fill up his paper has given us a short chapter of his early days. He must have sat too long before the blackboard, for its dark shade is visible in the chaste and flowery expressions he employs. No wonder the poor fellow cannot improve himself from reading THE EXPRESS and other Reform journals, for like the sow that washed, he turns again to wallow in the Tory mire and garbage furnished by the Mail.

Enterprise.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—I see you have no regular correspondence from this little hamlet and I think it a shame if as fine a place as this can't afford one.

—Business is brisk and Enterprise is booming. This is a very Enterpris-ing place.

—Mr. J. Lockwood has broke up shantying, and his mill-yard shows that he has not been idle.

—Mr. E. Clark has been seriously ill but we are glad to hear that he is on the gain and hope to see him with us before long.

—Miss Ida Wier is also seriously ill.

—It is rumored around town that our friend Mr. George Loveless is about to remove to the State of Michigan and the Mill Company has bought his possessions. We wish him success.

—We were much surprised last week at the unexpected arrival of Mr. Amos Yeomans, who has been absent from this place twenty-three years, in British Columbia, trading with the Indians.

—Mr. Wellington Wagar has arrived home from Michigan well pleased with the place, and intends going back soon.

—The young people of this place and the surroundings had a party at the residence of Mr.

a match to run Wm. Boyd of that town, formerly of Napanee, against Carruthers of Kingston. The race will be 100 yards for $250 a side, and will take place in Toronto on the 10th of April next at the new lacrosse grounds.

—Mr. James Jamieson of North Gower, brother of Mr. J. Jamieson, M.P. and Mr. Thos. Jamieson of Napanee, died on Tuesday last. The deceased gentleman was in the 49th year of his age. Mr. Jamieson left town Wednesday morning to attend the funeral.

—Any person anxious to have a good time would secure it by going out to Wilton to their church social on the 20th inst. 15c. admission. Good hot coffee and any quantity of eatables. The intellectual food will be of a superior quality. Take your girl, she'll enjoy it if you don't.

Tavernier's Comedy Company gave two excellent performances in the Opera House Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Miss Ida Van Cortland is a powerful emotional actress and is well supported, while little Annie Bird, the child actress, is a marvel of intelligence. The Company is in every respect worthy of liberal patronage.

—We were yesterday shown a copy of "The Upper Canada Herald," published at Kingston, bearing date Sept. 13, 1825. Its contents mainly consists of selections from English magazines and newspapers. In the advertising columns is a notice of dissolution of partnership between Wm. Church and D. McKenzie, of Fredericksburgh.

—Capt. Atkins has taken command of the Saved Army corps here, and its future is again brightened. On Tuesday evening there was a concert and the Captain was presented with one of Gardner's Baby Jumpers by the inventor, Mr. C. T. Gardner, on behalf of the corps. The chair was occupied by Mr. E. S. Lapum. The band was present and gave some fine selections. The attendance was large and a pleasant evening was spent.

—Another case of petty larceny has come to light within the last few days. A farmer placed a parcel of tea in his sleigh under a certain hotel shed, and when he returned the tea was gone. He suspected the guilty one who denied all knowledge of the article, but the farmer was too cute for him. The goods were found at his house and $25 was offered to settle the matter. This would make the tea worth over $4 per lb.

—We are pleased to learn that the rumour which in some way got abroad that Dr. Wray, dentist, contemplated removing from town, is without foundation. Mr. Wray's business has increased wonderfully the past year and he has not the remotest idea of making a change. His numerous patrons will find him as usual ready to fulfill all professional engagements. Office—Rooms formerly occupied by Dr. Clements, over Roblin & Ford's store, Dundas-st.

—A frightful railway accident was averted at the Opera House Wednesday evening by an alert property man. The play was "Under the Gaslight" and when the railway scene was being enacted the tender jumped the track at a critical moment and for a second the audience was terror stricken at the imminent peril of the couple beside the track, when a burly supe. grasped the recalcitrant car and pushed it through to its destination. No lives were lost and the damage to rolling stock was merely nominal.

—A. L. Morden, Esq., chairman of the Board of Education, entertained the members of the Board and the press at an oyster supper on Tuesday evening after the Board had adjourned. The oysters were served in capital style at Mr. Dickens' restaurant. Bachelor though he is, Mr. Morden proved himself a most genial and hospitable host. His guests marvelled that he had not long ago exercised his talents in this regard on a more extended scale. He is a most efficient presiding officer; perhaps he may yet—well who knows?

in Colorado.

—A telegram was received by J. M. Parrott, Esq., County Treasurer, from Lindsay, announcing the death of his brother, James Parrott, Esq., of Camden East, which sad event took place at the residence in that town of his son-in-law, Mr. E. McTavish, jr. The cause of death was paralysis, to attacks of which the deceased gentleman was a subject. The remains will arrive in town to-day and will be taken to Camden East for interment.

—The many friends of Dr. McGurn, late of Marysville, will regret to hear of his death, which sad event took place on Monday last at Alpena, Mich., where he has been practicing his profession for the last couple of years. As recorded in these columns some weeks ago he was prostrated a couple of months ago by blood poisoning contracted during a post mortem examination. He had the best medical skill—Dr. Sullivan of Kingston having gone out to attend him—but all efforts to save his life were futile. The deceased young gentleman was making his mark in the west in his profession, and his early death is very sad indeed. His remains are expected home to-day for interment.

LAST MINUTE LOCALS.

—Messrs. Herring & Son, on Wednesday last, disposed of the balance of their stock of glass to McArthur, Corneil & Co., Montreal.

—McAlister is now showing two hundred ready-made suits in men's, youths' and boys' sizes.

—John B. McLaughlin, of Newburgh, was yesterday committed by Squire James as a dangerous lunatic. The unfortunate man sustained a shot wound during the American war which has effected his reason.

—J. F. McAlister is sole agent for Christys' English Hats, also full lines of American and Canadian styles.

—Returning home from town fair day Bob Fitchett and a man named Knight got into an altercation by their rigs getting into a pitch hole, the result of which was that Fitchett gave Knight a severe pumelling. Knight had his assailant before the Mayor on Tuesday and a fine of $10 was imposed.

—Over three hundred pieces of tweeds and coatings to select your spring suit from at McAlister's. Mr. Williamson gives universal satisfaction as a cutter.

—Mr. Fred. Miller's Uncle Tom's Cabin Company appear in the Opera House next Tuesday evening. The Company includes a number of the popular soloists of the Tennessee Jubilee Singers, so well known in Napanee. It is the strongest Uncle Tom's Cabin Co. on the road. The press of Toronto and Hamilton speak in the highest terms of the performances. Reserved seats at J. J. Perry's drug store.

—Division Court was held on Wednesday before Judge Price. There was the usual docket. The only case of public interest was that of the Township of Richmond vs. N. A. Caton, late Treasurer, for $100. It seems that the banks only credited the collector with a payment of $500, while the receipt held by the collector was $600. Mr. Caton's defence was that he made a mistake in the receipt. The case was adjourned till next court.

—Wm. Chambers, post-master at Close's Mills, was up before Squire James on Monday, charged with keeping a vicious dog, which attacked a young lady, daughter of Mr. George Vanalsting, and tore her arm in several places. The young lady was retiring from the post-office at the time. It was shown that the dog had attacked other people before. The case was adjourned till Thursday, when it was settled by Chambers paying $25 and agreeing to destroy the animal.

—Two scamps arrived in town this week with two girls of dissolute character and put up at a leading hotel as married people. On Wednesday one couple made a disgraceful exhibition on Dundas-st., the man being drunk and driving about in a reckless manner, while the woman's condition was little better. After trying to run into several rigs Constable Holmes took them in charge and placed them in the lock-up, where they remained all night. Thursday they were before the Mayor, and the man was fined $5 and costs and the woman $1 and costs in default of payment they are now in gaol.

—Mr. Wellington Wagar has arrived home from Michigan well pleased with the place, and intends going back soon.

—The young people of this place and the surroundings had a party at the residence of Mr. T. Wilson, on Friday night last, and all enjoyed themselves, but in the end one gentleman got whittled out. But never mind, Wess.

—There is to be a concert in the C. M. Church in behalf of the Sunday School, on the evening of the 18th. All are cordially invited and a good time is expected. Admission 15 cents, children 10 cents.

Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—An accident of quite a painful nature happened to our worthy Dr. Kennedy, during a drive through the snowdrifts on Saturday last. His horse became unmanageable and ran away, capsizing the cutter and giving the Doctor an ugly wound on his head. He lay for some time quite unconscious and it was with difficulty that he made his way to the nearest house. He is, we are happy to say, now able to resume his work.

AT REST.—Mr. John Galt, an old and highly respected resident of South Fredericksburgh, was consigned to the tomb on Sunday last at the Lutheran cemetery in that township. He was buried with Masonic honors, and notwithstanding that the day was a stormy one, quite a large number of his fraternity were present to do honor to his memory.

DIVISION COURT.—Owing to the great storm of Saturday last His Honor Judge Wilkison could not fill his appointment at the sittings of this court at Bath. This is the first time in 15 years that he has failed to be present when there was business on the docket to be attended to, and we are assured he would have been with us at this sittings if it had been possible for him to make his way through the snow blockade and the blinding blizzard which attended it. The Court stands adjourned till the 19th inst.

—Our people are looking forward to connection with the G. T. R. the coming summer. The Company look upon the connection with favor, and if our city fathers are alive to their interests we will be looped in on the double track and made a permanent and paying station.

The aged, debilitated and infirm will find renewed vigor and strength by taking Burdock Blood Bitters. The young hastening to early decay will also find in Church Notes.

—The Rev. David Winter, Conference Evangelist of the Methodist Church of Canada, commences on the last Sabbath of this month gospel meetings in our town.

—This (Friday) evening in the C. M. Church, under the auspices of the Y. P. M. & L. S. the Rev. M. L. Pearson will lecture upon "Reminicenses of a visit to Britain and France." Admission—Silver.

—On last Tuesday evening, by invitation of Rev. M. L. Pearson and lady, the members of the Pastor's class and the Sunday School Bible class, which is under the direction of S. Gibson, Esq., assembled at the parsonage. A most enjoyable evening was spent. Singing, conversation and getting acquainted formed the special features of the programme. At 9.30 refreshments were served, and at 11 o'clock, the singing of a number of well known hymns with an earnest prayer by Capt. Atkins, terminated a very pleasurable evening.

Personals.

—Mrs. Edward Storr, of Ottawa, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Peter Fraser, Clarksville road.

—Mrs. W. Ferguson, of Oswego, N.Y., is visiting relatives in town this week.

—Mr. W. R. Membery and Miss Membery, of Adolphustown, are spending the week in town.

—Mr. Sills, of Picton, better known as "Old Baldwin," is visiting his brother, Mr. G. B. Sills, License Inspector.

—Mr. Fred Bell, of Brighton, formerly of Napanee, is now in town visiting friends before going to Montana.

—Miss Armour, of Bowmanville, and Miss Ham. of Conway, who have just returned from a visit to friends in Ottawa, are guests of R. G. Wright, Esq.

—Mr. Ted Flagherty has resigned his situation with Mr. A. T. Harshaw and accepted a position in Messrs. Hennessy & Co.'s large dry goods establishment, Belleville.

—Mr. T. B. Howe, cutter, of Toronto, at one time with Messrs. A. C. Davis & Bro., for several years in this place, paid the town a visit on Tuesday renewing old acquaintances. Mr. Howe has resided in Toronto since, and has just returned from a visit to friends in the old country. It seems strange that a good, honest Scotchman like Mr. Howe should be arrested in Liverpool for a Fenian, but he was only detained an hour and a half and honorably acquitted.

—Mr. J. D. Dunlop, late of this town and formerly of Orillia, passed a highly successful examination before the Medical Faculty of New York City University last week, and was admitted to the degree of M. D. He took 92 1-7 per cent of the marks. We congratulate our young friend on his achievement and wish him success in the practice of his profession. We understand that he intends opening an office at Northport, on the Hudson, about 10 miles from New York.

PRESENTATION. — Miss Libbie Laurence, daughter of Rev. J. Laurence, went home from school a few days ago with a light heart, being made by her teacher and school mates the recipient of a beautiful autograph album and scent bottle, accompanied by the following nicely worded address —

DEAR LIBBIE,—Having endeared yourself to the hearts of your teacher and school mates during the short time you have been among us by your many estimable qualities, we would at this time desire to give expression to our love towards you by presenting you with this address and accompanying trifles as a mark of our esteem for you. With the sincere desire that your health may improve and that soon you may be as strong and healthy as we are,

With the kindest affection for you, your dear parents and little brothers, we are your loving friends, —On Sundays the 2nd and 9th inst. Rev. Mr. Drew, of Yarker, preached in the C. M. Church, Wilton, on "Brains and Heart" in religion. They were masterly efforts, rich in spicy quotations and eloquent effusions. They bore unmistakeable evidences of much thought and deep research. The voluntaries by the choir, selected especially for the occasions, were brilliant in their execution. Much credit is due to the ladies and gentleman comprising the choir for the extra efforts they put forth, and great credit is due the popular leader, Mr. Koyl, for the marked improvement made. —A large number of invited guests enjoyed themselves on the evening of the 5th inst. at the residence of the second Deputy-Reeve, Mr. Johnson, who has the pleasing faculty of making visitors feel comfortable and then urging them to eat till they feel uncomfortable, and judging from the list of guests I rather think there was a large amount of provision disposed of and they didn't require much urging to accomplish it.

—Extra effort is being put forth to obtain means for paying the pastoral financial deficiency, and a series of social or sort of travelling tea-meetings will be held, at which choice provender, delightful music and excellent readings will add to the success of the gatherings.

—The first social in connection with the C. M. Church, Wilton, took place at the residence of Sidney Warner, Esq., on Wednesday evening. About one hundred were present. Good coffee and music and a very pleasant time. The next social will be given by Mr. James Thompson and Mr. Wm. Walker in Grange Hall, Wilton, on Thursday evening, March 20th, at 7 p. m. Readings, recitations, and lots of music. The Yarker band are are kindly invited to visit Wilton, attend this social and give the Wiltonites some good music.

Fact Stranger than Fiction.

It is a fact that Alonzo Howe of Tweed, had a fever sore that afflicted him for thirty-five years. Six bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters cured him, which he considers almost a miracle. It was but the natural result of the remedy restoring pure blood and perfect secretion.

A little son of John Spinks, Toronto, had his foot crushed by a G. T. R. express train some time ago. SEED
POTATOES AND OATS FOR 1884.

The Bay View Farm, Deseronto,

offer an excellent stock of Seed Potatoes at very much below the catalogue rates of reliable seedsmen. The varieties were imported last season not only to procure change of seed but also to procure desirable new sorts. We offer Jumbo White Elephant, White Star Early Beauty of Hebron, St. Patrick Brownell's Best, Burbank's Seedling Early Ohio, and an extra quality of Early Rose. All varieties are warranted true to name and thoroughly matured. They are all free from disease and other defects. We also offer White Russian Oats of fine quality. This is without doubt the best White Seed Oat grown, being an immense cropper and large bright grain. Our seed will weigh from 40 lbs. to 43 lbs. to the struck bushel, and this weight is an average of the oats grown on all sorts of soil. Call on or address,

OBIT.—A sad and sudden death occurred on Friday morning last in the person of Miss Maggie Huffman, daughter of Edward Huffman, Esq. She was taken ill April 1st and was a great sufferer. Drs. Weagant, Beeman and Dupuois were summoned, but all agreed that medical assistance would be of no avail. She was an amiable young lady about twenty years of age, and previous to her sickness was the picture of health. Her sad and sudden death has cast a gloom over the entire community. The funeral took place at the C. M. Church here on Sunday last and was attended by a large concourse of sorrowing friends. The family have the deepest sympathy in their sad bereavement.

—The new cheese factory in course of erection here is fast approaching completion and presents a fine appearance. The building is of wood, is situated on a plot of ground adjoining the town hall and will be painted as soon as completed. The directors of the company are Messrs. J. Rennie, D. G. Vandewater and S. Mullett, and no expense will be spared in making the factory a first-class one in every particular. The carpenter work has been done by Mr. G. B. Carn and sons in their usual neat and careful manner. The utensils of the factory are entirely new and are being supplied by Mr. R. G. Wright, of Napanee. Some of the presses and vats arrived yesterday, and will be put in during the week. The directors have made arrangements with Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Diamond for the manufacture of cheese during the season. Milk waggons will be put on four different routes and operations will probably be commenced on the 1st day of May.

—A movement is on foot which has for its laudable object the formation of a brass band in this village.

—Mr. Campbell, late of the Banner Mill, Buffalo, arrived in town on Monday to enter upon the position of head miller of the Deseronto Flour Mills. The Mills close for a few days to make some repairs and add some late improvements.

—A young man named T. G. Culbertson was in the act of loading a revolver the other day when it went off accidentally, the ball entering the left hand. Dr. Newton extracted the ball and the wounded hand is rapidly healing.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.—An emergency meeting of Craig Lodge No. 401 A. F. & A.M. was held in their hall on Tuesday evening with a full attendance of members. The meeting was called for the purpose of presenting an address and testimonial in the shape of a key stone to Mr. Chas. E. Greenacre, one of the members, who intends leaving Deseronto. The address was read by Mr. G. A. Browne, Secretary of the Lodge. Brother Greenacre replied in a short address. After some remarks from members and an address from the W. M. the meeting adjourned. The address was elegantly engrossed by Mr. Bedford. The Key Stone is of Parian marble, set in gold, having this inscription, "Presented to Chas. E. Greenacre by the officers and members of Craig Lodge No. 401 A. F. & A. M., of Deseronto, Ont., April, 1884." Mr. Greenacre, who intends going to South America, has made many friends here, and leaves Deseronto with the best wishes, not only of the Masonic Fraternity, but of the community at large.

—Mr. Reginald Fowler has rented his farm to Mr. Samuel Reid and intends building a new store at Emerald. We look forward to the time when Emerald will outrival Stella, and become a flourishing little village.

—Mr. John McDonough intends leaving next Tuesday for Chicago, where his relatives reside.

—This is good weather for sugar-making, and not a few are taking advantage of it.

—The Star grocery of Bath has passed into the hands of another, Lester Paul, the former proprietor, having taken his departure. His mother intends going to the U. S., where she has relatives.

—The lighthouses are sending forth their bright lights again.

—Mrs. Jos. Trimlett, of Bath, who has been very ill for some time, is getting around nicely again.

—We regret the sad death of Mr. John C. Murray, of Millhaven. Typhoid fever is said to have been the cause of his death. He leaves a wife and family to mourn his loss, as well as all who knew him.

—What is the cause of no fishing being allowed in the Bay of Quinte, and why are farmers permitted to fish without license? These are two questions which ought to be solved. How is it that the tavern-keeper cannot sell his alcohol without license, when the farmer can fish without one, and when the fishermen take out a license why not allow them to fish in the Bay as well as elsewhere?

—A house to rent or sell, belonging to Mr. Charles Willard, Stella, containing 5 rooms, with an acre of land. For further particulars apply to the proprietor.

—Mr. Edward Milligan is settled on Mr. Howard's farm.

—Farmers have commenced ploughing.

—The roads are becoming better. The snow in the swamps is fast disappearing, and the water has fallen in the river. The danger of a flood is over.

—Mr. Charles Wilmot, of the Newcastle fish hatchery, was accompanied by Mr. G. Denison, M.P.P., and Overseer Purcell in depositing white fish fry in the lakes of the northern parts of the counties. The fry were in a healthy condition and were liberated in good order.

—On Tuesday the remains of Mrs. Munro were taken from the vault and placed in the White Church cemetery. A large number of her friends were present to witness the removal.

—Mr. John Emberly has built a large drive house, which is a great improvement to his place.

—Work is progressing on the railway. They are beyond the bridge over the outlet of Mud Lake and are half way through the swamp. There are good prospects of their getting through without much difficulty.

—Mr. Stover Benn, farmer, a few days ago lost a fine mare, six years old. The cause of her death was a fall on the ice in the barn-yard, which brought on inflammation.

—Shibley & Son have completed their spring stock. Their store is tastefully fitted up, and no doubt they would do a rushing business if the public knew more about them through the press.

—THE EXPRESS must have cut deep into the Beaver man's hide to make him squeal so loud—must have touched a sore spot. The comparison between his language and the animal formerly mentioned is about right, and also shows the source from which he draws his ideas; they are so much like those of the Mail and Kingston Daily Abuse which he peruses.

Don't You Do It.

Don't suffer any longer with the pains and aches of Rheumatism, which make life a burden to you. Relief, speedy and permanent can be procured at the nearest drug store, in the form of Kidney-Wort. Elbridge Malcolm of West Bath, Maine, says:—"I was completely prostrated with Rheumatism and Kidney troubles and was not expected to recover. The first dose of Kidney-Wort helped me. Six doses put me on my feet, it has now entirely cured me and I have had no trouble since."

—Our highly esteemed and gifted juvenile instructor has separated himself from those near and dear and gone to Brockville to spend the Easter holidays. He is especially adapted for the calling he has assumed, and the fatherly interest he takes in those placed under his care is indicative of a good husband and kind parent in the future.

—The sugar social on Thursday evening last was attended by a large and enthusiastic audience. The programme was supplied by the members of the Presbyterian church choir of Napanee and was replete with interest. Mr. Sharp, our popular Reeve, accupied the chair, and as a chairman he is sharp. The municipal council was well represented. Four out of five put in an appearance—quite an unusual thing at this time of the year. The readings given by Mr. Ferguson, taken from Peck's Bad Boy, were well received. If he's as good at selling hardware as he is at reading, he must be doing a rattling trade. The boot and shoe department was well represented. Maybee I'm not a judge but I thought he sang nicely. At any rate the audience were delighted and especially pleased with the musical talent evinced by the ladies of the choir.

—The sugar season is about drawing to a close and unless the Literary Society engage in a series of dramatic entertainments or something equally as interesting there will be little of interest to chronicle. Their next debate, "Poor Cromwell," will be interesting.

—I was requested by a lady friend who has a perfect horror of publicity not to mention her arrival in the village. Of course I complied with her request, but must express the pleasure it gave me to see her occupy a position in the choir Sunday morning. We appreciate foreign talent. Newburgh has reason to be proud of its young ladies, and I was informed by a young lady well posted in such matters that there's not a homely girl in that town, and I find, in thinking the matter over, that we are similarly situated.

—The fruit festival at Lapum's school house on Monday evening was, as expected, fully as interesting as its predecessors. Miss Blanch Taylor has charge of the school in that locality, and it is really astonishing the progress the children are making.

—Miss Maybee, of Odessa, has had charge of the Florida school for the past two years and takes delight in imparting knowledge to the rising generation in section 18.

—Mr. Rockwell informs me the children in the brick school house section are rapidly acquiring knowledge.

—The Easter offerings at St. Mary's Cathedral, Kingston, amounted to $1,240, the largest since 1876.

—The increase in license fees created a commotion among the victuallers at Kingston. Some will retire from business.

—The Dean of St. George's Cathedral, Kingston, has appointed Rev. Mr. Petry successor to Dr. Wilson.

—It is reported that an opening was made in the earth by an earthquake about seven miles north of Trenton on Tuesday.

—The Rathbun Company have bought this season's cut from Gilmour & Co., Trenton—8,000 cords of millwood.

—A syndicate has been formed for the purpose of placing a steam yacht on Sharbot Lake for the benefit of tourists.

—A Belleville doctor cut a tumor from the head of an infant the other day, which was considerably larger in a distended state than the child's head.

—Thomas Lindsay left St. Thomas on Tuesday of last week to put in two years at Kingston for forgery. On the same day his aged mother died of grief over her son's disgrace.

—The working staff of the Locomotive Works, Kingston, has been reduced from nearly 500 to less than 100. The men have been obliged to leave the city for employment.

—The announcement is made that Major Coombs, of England, takes command of the Salvation Army in Canada, and that Kingston is to be the headquarters. Major Moore commands the United States contingent.

—There was a premature explosion of dualine at the railway works at Calabogie one day last week. Two men were seriously injured, one having a piece of iron driven through his thigh.

—The body of R. Lee, who disappeared mysteriously from Kingston last fall, was found floating in the harbor on Monday. It was almost beyond identification.

—At a meeting of the Saved Army on Sunday at Portsmouth General Lindsay said since the origin of the organization a year ago it had increased until now there are 5,000 soldiers, 35 officers and 30 stations.

—Rathbun & Son, of Deseronto, who have the contract of erecting seven stations on the Ontario & Quebec Railway, have begun work. The framework and other material for stations is prepared in Deseronto.

—The grist mill of Latti's Mills, Tyendinaga, owned by Messrs. Wallbridge and occupied by G. L. Grass, was burned Wednesday morning of last week with 600 bushels of wheat. Loss, $40,000; insured for $4,000.

—They have to pay a license fee of $300 in Picton for running a billiard table. We imagine there will not be many tables in operation there this year.

—Mr. John Banwell, of Picton, received intelligence from England week before last that an uncle of his had died in New Zealand and left him by will property valued at about $25,000.

—While the double tracking of the G. T. R. is going on the heavier grades and cuttings, which have been so long an impedimedt to traffic, will be reduced. The first estimated cost of the work, as furnished by the company's engineer, was $8,000,000. Other estimates have since been made, based on more accurate information, and it is now believed that it will not reach $7,000,000.

—Capt. Hinckley says there is a remarkable apple tree upon Long Island, at the back of Horne's Hotel. Its circumference immediately below the limbs is 7½ ft. Four branches project from it. Two them measure 4 ft. 9 in. in circumference; one 4 ft. 3 in., and the other 5 ft. in circumference. The tree and limbs cover an area of 55 square feet. The seed was planted in 1819 by S. Hinckley, grandfather of the Captain.

—Mrs. Edward Wright of Saugerties attempted to elope on Thursday of last week with a young man whose name is unknown, but just as the young runaway pair were getting on the POLICE COURT.

[Before Mr. Charles James, J.P.]

SATURDAY, April 12.—Geo. Perry, fisherman, had several young men arraigned for disturbing his nets, but the case was settled. Immediately afterwards, Henry Shuman preferred a charge against the same parties, but this case also was settled.

TUESDAY, April 15.—Thos. Cummings, an Italian, was arraigned on a charge of larceny. The evidence showed that last summer the prisoner and a man named Samuel Rooney boarded last fall at Mr. Jas. Maguire's, Napanee Mills. In the winter Rooney went to work in the woods for the Paper Co., and left his trunk behind at Mr. Maguire's. When he returned on 15th March he found that several articles of clothing had been taken out. He afterwards learned that the Italian had been wearing some of the articles and he came to Napanee and had his valise searched. The missing articles were found therein. After hearing the evidence the magistrate committed Cummings for trial.

—Thos. Cummings was yesterday arraigned before His Honour Judge Wilkison. He being unable to speak English could not plead and was therefore remanded to gaol for trial at the General Sessions in June.

Queen's Birthday Celebration.

A mass meeting of the citizens was held in the Town Hall on Wednesday evening to complete arrangements for the celebration on the 26th of May. Mr. T. G. Davis, Chairman, called the meeting to order and the minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. Mr. W. C. Scott, Sec., moved that Mr. A. H. Allison be appointed Assistant Secy.—Carried. The Committee on Subscriptions reported:—A. H. Rose, for East Ward, $36; Hugh Milling, West Ward, $50; A. H. Allison, Centre Ward, $180. On motion, the meeting proceeded to appoint standing committees for the carrying out of the celebration. On motion of J. H. Downey four committees were appointed as follows:—Finance and Printing, Trades Procession, Sports, Fireworks. The following persons were selected for the Committees:

On Finance and Printing, W. M. O'Beirne, T. S. Henry, W. A. Rose, J. H. Downey and W. K. Pruyn; Trades Procession, T. H. Waller, Irvine Vanalstine, C. F. Henderson, John Paisley and Hugh Milling; Sports, E. S. Lapum, A. H. Allison, Dr. Leonard, Chief Allen and J. F. McAlister; Fireworks, Dr. Ruttan, John Bowey, J. A. Reid, N. Paisley and Dr. Wray. On motion Mr. Wm. Miller and Mr. H. Wagar were put on the general committee.

On motion Dr. J. A. Reid, Chief Allen and Wm. Miller were appointed a special committee to look after the ground.

Messrs. Drewry and McCutcheon, a deputation from the Lacrosse Club, were heard asking the committee for a grant of $20 to assist them in getting up a match between some foreign team and the home club on celebration day. The matter was referred to the committee on sports to report to the general committee.

On motion the secretary was instructed to

Mrs. Hubbell—Black velvet court train, crimson satin front, white lace and scarlet flowers.

Miss Flora Hubbell—White and satin, brocaded with silver; natural flowers; ornaments, silver.

Miss Strachan—Cream silk, lace trimmings; flowers; ornaments, diamonds.

Cured Free.

Any reader troubled with Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Headache, Liver Complaint, &c., should call at T. A. Huffman's and A. W. Grange's drug stores and secure a free bottle of McGregor's Speedy Cure at once which will convince you of the merits of the medicine. It cures permanently where all other medicines have failed. As a blood purifier it has no equal. Remember it costs nothing to try it. Regular size, fifty cents and one dollar.

It is Natural.

It is natural for some people to be bilious, being often a result of peculiar bilious temperament, which with high living, too greasy food, indigestion from inactive liver, is the frequent cause. The remedy, above all others, is Burdock Blood Bitters. It is highly curative for all biliary complaints, and far better than physic for inactive conditions of the bowels.

A Bad Case of Starvation.

To starve the lungs by a lack of vital food contained in pure air. If the lungs are obstructed by colds, remove the accumulated phlegm with that safe and pleasant throat and lung remedy, Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam.

—One of the largest of Manitoba's grain elevators was burned last Thursday.

—On Wednesday night, 2nd inst., Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Moorhead, Durham Co., were awakened by the noise of fire, and on arising found that their dwelling was burning. They rushed out of doors in their night clothes, but thinking there was ample time to accomplish her object safely, Mrs. Moorhead returned to secure some of their wearing apparel. She entered with this object in view, but on gaining access the fire so surrounded her as to cut off all retreat, and she died a horrible death.

The Best For Butter.

There is but one best color for butter, and that that is Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Improved Butter Color, no candid investigator doubts. It is the best butter color in the world : is free from sediment or impurity, always ready for instant use, and it imparts to butter that rich dandelion yellow, without a tinge of red, which is the acme of desirability in any butter color.

asking the committee for a grant of $20 to assist them in getting up a match between some foreign team and the home club on celebration day. The matter was referred to the committee on sports to report to the general committee.

On motion the secretary was instructed to correspond with the leaders of bands between Toronto and Prescott to state the best terms for a band competition.

The committee on trades procession was instructed to make up a list of prizes on each industry and report at the next meeting.

The meeting then adjourned to meet at the Council Chamber next Wednesday evening.

Vestry Meeting.

The annual vestry meeting of St. Mary Magdalene's Church was held on Monday evening last. Ven. Archdeacon Bedford-Jones, rector, occupied the chair. Mr. R. A. Helliwell, vestry clerk, read the financial statement which showed the affairs of the church to be in a most flourishing condition, and the Venerable Archdeacon read a report showing remarkable spiritual progress during the year. Mr. J. B. McGurn was elected vestry clerk. Messrs. A. T. Harshaw and R. G. Wright, churchwardens, expressed a desire to be allowed to retire and the Archdeacon accordingly appointed Dr. H. L. Cook, while the people selected Mr. O. L. Herring. The following were elected sidesmen :—Judge Wilkison, Messrs. A. T. Harshaw, R. G. Wright and J. B. McGuin. The advisory board is constituted as follows :—Judge Wilkison, Dr. Ruttan, Dr. Bristol, Messrs. R. G. Wright, A. T. Harshaw and J. B. McGuin. Mr. A. T. Harshaw was re-elected representative to the synod. Votes of thanks were then tendered the retiring churchwardens, vestry clerk, choir, dramatic section of the Union and the Sunday School. A request from the Synod for a vote of $13.50 towards paying rent of See House was, after considerable discussion, ordered to be filed. The meeting was of a most harmonious character, the best of feeling being manifested between pastor and people.

Fine Display of Wall Paper.

We have made a personal examination of a very interesting subject to all housekeepers, and we cheerfully give the benefit of our discovery. For sometime past many persons have been wondering where they could buy the finest and cheapest wall paper, and in order to post our many readers we made a personal examination of Mr. W. D. Madden's large and handsome stock of wall papers and borders, and we have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Madden has the largest and handsomest stock of wall paper and decorations ever exhibited in Napanee.

We were astonished when our attention was called to the handsome patterns at 5c. 6c. 7c. 8c. and 10c. per roll, and we could not help asking how it was possible to sell a roll of the widest and longest wall paper made for 5c We were informed that the same was bought for cash, and not having an expensive or unprofitable establishment to keep up the customer got the benefit of from 15 to 20 per cent. We were also shown fine satins at 20c and some of the finest American golds from 40c. per roll up. But it is not necessary to enumerate the great bargains to be had. A call is all that is necessary to satisfy you that Mr. Madden can give you better value for your money in wall paper as well as everything else in his line than you can get elsewhere. Mr. Madden has telephone connection with all leading wholesale houses and you can depend on dispatch if you should require anything that may not be in stock. We would advise our readers to call and see Mr. Madden's bookstore. Even though they may not require anything they will be treated well and the mysteries of the telephone explained to them.

NOTICE TO THE

Farmers of Lennox & Addington.

The Directors of the Co-operative Warehousing Co. of Napanee,

Having chosen me as their Manager, I would say to all whom it may concern, that the storage of grain can be obtained on as favorable terms as heretofore, or there will be a purchaser of grain, Mr. A. N. Diamond, who has formerly proved himself one of the most liberal and satisfactory buyers that we have ever had dealings with (or other buyers if they wish to avail themselves of the opportunity.) Having obtained the services of Mr. Diamond as an experienced salesman at a moderate commission, farmers can have their grain shipped and sold to the Company, any Bank or other responsible person whom they may choose whereby they can obtain the advantage of the prices of the best markets with the least possible cost of charges, and there will be no more moving of stored grain into neighboring storehouses, contrary to your expectations and wishes and contrary to any understanding ever made with the Company or the late Manager that I ever heard of. Of his determined motives and objects I leave yon to form your own opinion.

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

The Sugar Bush.

Maple syrup and maple sugar must continue to be a luxury. Vermont cannot supply the Atlantic States. Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin cannot supply the home demand. For these reasons a spurious article is kept constantly in the market, but as this can never compete with the real sweet, the demand for the latter will constantly increase. It pays well to make only the very best article. Such a course will soon give a reputation that will bring a quick market for syrup at $1.50 a gallon, as the years go. This will make each tree bring about 75 cents annually. Again, by taking proper pains, it will not be simply the first run that will give the finest syrup, but such will be made till the buds start, after which other farm work should take our attention. The utmost cleanliness should be practised, and the reduction of sap into syrup should be done in the least possible time.

It will pay to take a cask of hot water and rinse out the buckets—especially if of wood—after each run. The buckets should all be covered. This keeps out all rain-water, dust and leaves. The cover may be a square board just large enough to cover the bucket, and made of half-inch pine or basswood. For convenience, it pays to paint the cover red on one side and white on the other. If the wind troubles, by blowing off the covers, nail across the grain of this board an inch strip three inches wide, and just long enough to go into the bucket. The cover is nailed to the edge of this strip. This prevents the board cover from warping and will hold it to the bucket even when there are high winds. If we use the Post spout, this cover may be entire, as the spout holds the bucket — which must be of tin—by passing through a hole just under the edge. Such spouts and tin buckets are by far the best.

I had 200 wooden buckets when I got my place, which I—perhaps foolishly—continue to use. These are hung to the tree by an iron claw. Just above is the sheet-iron spout. A rectangular strip, an inch wide and a little longer than the spout, is cut from the centre of the cover on one side, so that the sap goes into the bucket. The tin buckets are cleaner and do not get to leaking, as the wooden buckets are apt to do, especially when hung up to the trunk of the tree. But even the tin buckets should be rinsed after each run, with warm water. Let it be remembered that it is filth, sour sap, not later sap, that makes inferior syrup. The gathering-cask should also be always sweet and clean. The arch should be closed with a door so that no ash dust can get into the syrup. The wood rooms should also be closely partitioned off from the boiling room. No pains are unnecessary or foolish which add to the neatness.

To secure quick reduction of the sap, we should have the evaporator, the heater, dry wood, and a good grate under the fire-box. The evaporator saves storage, and by quick evaporation makes superior syrup or sugar. One man can boil away with a good evaporator as fast as two can gather. An evaporator also saves night work. The heater is a deep, nar-age, and by quick evaporation makes superior syrup or sugar. One man can boil away with a good evaporator as fast as two can gather. An evaporator also saves night work. The heater is a deep, narrow pan, which rests just back of the evaporator. It is made with flues, so that a large surface is exposed to the fire. Into this the cold sap runs, where it is heated, before it passes to the evaporator. This not only saves time, but secures a finer article of syrup. Even those who use the old style of pan should have two pans, one to heat the sap. Few branches of farming pay anywhere near the profit of a good, well-managed sugar-bush. It is just as true that most sugar-bushes might be made to pay a much higher profit.

How the "Best" Butter is Made.

A Berkshire Country, Mass., farmer writes: "My object has always been to make the best butter—not the most profitable, necessarily, but the best. Having this object in view, I have been compelled to discard oil meal, and thus reduce the quantity of my butter and the value of the manure. I have been obliged to take the cows out of all basement cellars, and have consequently received less butter for a given amount of food. I have been forced instead of dropping the manure into a convenient cellar below the cows, to give up this cellar and wheel the manure into a shed. I have been obliged to discard deep setting, and to content myself with the open, shallow method, which is more expensive, and requires more attention, and returns less butter. I have been obliged to reject all feeds except corn, wheat, hay, beets, and carrots. I have been obliged to give up using the milk of cows that have calved too recently or too remotely. I have, for a dozen years, carefully and faithfully tried to make butter as good as it can be made; this has been the first consideration, profitableness has always been secondary. The result has been that for many years this butter has brought a higher price than any butter in the county of Berkshire, where much good butter is made, and it has taken the first prize over the county. It has been in such constant demand at 65 cents, the year through, that when making 100 pounds a week there have been unfilled orders for 25 to 50 pounds more.

The Importance of Fewer Acres.

"If ten acres of land cost $100 dollars, and if they produce $10 worth of crops, they are paying ten per cent on the investment just as much as if $100 had been loaned at the rate of ten per cent. interest. Now, there is no man who would think of living on the interest of $100 loaned at even this high rate, but instances are not rare of men making a good living for themselves and their families from the careful cultivation of ten acres of land. We mention this fact to prove that the too frequent expression that 'farming does not pay' is not in accordance with fact, There is no other business in which a man would attempt with $100 to support a family. Yet still there is truth in the remark, so far as it is applicable to farming as it is carried on in some sections of the country. If a man invests $1,000 in 100 acres of land and makes only ten of them, or $100 worth, available, he can not expect to derive a profit from the other ninety acres, any more than he could expect an interest upon $1,000 when he had only $100 of it invested. Our position is that land actually cultivated pays a better interest on the money invested than any other venture. The farmer can not expect idle acres to yield him a revenue any more than he can idle dollars. Unfortunately, the farmer of the North-West has, as a general thing, nine acres of idle land where he has one productive one, and the one productive one is expected to pay the interest on the price of the whole ten. Extraordinary management would be necessary to make this kind of farming pay."

Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada.

The annual meeting of this company was held on the 13th. of March. The statements there submitted and the report of the proceedings cannot but be very gratifying to all the friends of the company. The Sun was incorporated in 1865, but only issued its first policy in May, 1871. Its progress since then, both in size and solidity, has been steady and satisfactory; on the list of the ten Canadian Life Companies it now stands third. In 1871 it received life applications for $400 000: In 1874 for $600,000; In 1878 for $1 600 000; and in 1883 for over $2 300,000. In 1871 the amount of life assurance in force was $400 000; in 1874 $1 700 000; in 1878 $3 300 000; and in 1883 nearly $7,000,000. Its annual income is now nearly $300 000, or nearly $1,000 for every working day in the year. Its resources amount to nearly $1,200,000. As was pointed out at the annual meeting, if the same rate of progress is kept up during the next ten years as has prevailed in the past the income will then amount to from one and a quarter to one and a half millions and the assets to about four millions. This prospect is by no means a visionary one. The Company has reached the stage at which it can hardly fail to make rapid progress. There is a grand future opening out before it, and the officers can hope to see the day when it will rank as one of the largest and most powerful financial institutions in the country. A perusal of the accounts will show how strong and prosperous its condition is. It will be seen that the amount of new life business, the amount of new accident business, the assurances in force, both life and accident, the income and the assets, are all larger than in any preceding year in the Company's history.—Insurance Society, Montreal.

The electric locomotive headlight is reported to be successful to a very satisfactory degree. It has run over 5,000 miles on the locomotive, and will, it is said, be adopted by one of the roads leading out of Indianapolis. It is claimed that objects on the track are rendered plainly visible by it at a distance of over 1,200 feet.

Important to Ruptured Persons.

The Excelsior Rupture treatment was introduced to the American people several years ago in such a manner as to completely secure the confidence of the whole nation. The mode of introduction was by furnishing the remedy to those afflicted with Hernia in any of its various forms and collecting no pay until a permanent cure was effected. In this way the treatment gained a world-wide reputation on its own merits, never failing to cure any reducible Hernia. The Company has at the solicitation of thousands placed the remedy on sale by all druggists, both wholesale and retail, in the United States, Canada and England. In this way bringing it within the reach of all classes at a trifling cost compared with the benefits which are derived from the use of the treatment. Ask your druggist for a free book on rupture, or send 6 cents for one to the Excelsior Rupture Cure M'f'g Co., Ogdensburg, N. Y.

Flax-Seed.

The evidence produced to establish the superior claims of FLAX-SEED EMULSION COMPOUND as a remedy for Nervous exhaustion and all its symptons is unquestionable. The large and increasing demand is almost entirely due to its own merits. We do not place it in competition with patent medicines or secret remedies, as we furnish the formula and can show that it consists of a superior combination of phosphorus, with the fat-producing properties of the Flax-Seed. During the past six months over FOUR THOUSAND BOTTLES have been dispensed in the city of Ogdensburg, N. Y., and county of St. Lawrence, where it is manufactured, and the universal verdict is that it is the best NERVE TONIC, BLOOD ENRICHER, and PURIFIER ever produced. We solicit investigation as to the reputation of the remedy where ever it has been used.

See advertisement in another column, and ask your Druggist for circulars containing remarkable cures.

The above remedies sold only in Napanee by W. S. Detlor, Druggist.

Catarrh Cured.

Gentlemen,—I am forty years of age, and have been afflicted for the past ten years with Catarrh. I was recommended to try your Fountain of Health, which I am still using, and, although not perfectly cured, I am so much improved that I heartily recommend it any one suffering from the same disease. While taking it for the above disease, a severe pain, which I had in my side, has entirely left me.

Kidney Disease.

Dear Sirs,—I take pleasure in testifying to the benefis I have received from the use of your Fountain of Health. For over nine years I have suffered from disease of the Kidneys, having a severe pain in the back a great deal of the time and a tenderness of the eye balls. No remedies that I have ever tried, and I have used no end of them, gave me relief, except your Fountain of Health, which has made me feel good. I have used two of your dollar bottles.

Yours sincerely,
WILLIAM GRAHAM, 6 Lisgar St., Toronto.

A PEEP AT THE PAST.

A Perusal of Ancient Documents at the London Record Office—The "Doomsday Book."

In dingy, muddy, dirty Fetter lane, that narrow crooked thoroughfare connecting Fleet street with Holborn, stands a building wherein is stored a wealth and variety of historic documents, forming a collection which is probably unrivalled by that of any other country. The average Londoner knows little about the record office, and cares less, and yet the slate shelves in the iron cages of the severe-looking edifice are heavily laden with state documents dating as far back as William the Conqueror. I was fortunate enough on Saturday last to be the companion of a gentleman who had received an invitation to accompany Sir Baliol Brett, the master of the rolls and custos rotulorum, on his first official examination of the record office.

Of course, this first inspection was naturally of a cursory nature, but the polite and efficient attendants laid before Sir Baliol and his party—which, by the by included several of the foreign ambassadors—document after document, volume after volume, which could not but gladden the hearts of those who love to peruse these records of the gone past. There was the "Doomsday Book," in which may be seen the survey of England made in the time of William the Conqueror. It is in an excellent state of preservation, and the vellum leaves are as clean, the writing as legible, and the ink as dark and distinct as though the compilation had been executed in the last century, instead of eight hundred years ago.

We were shown, too, the records of the Court of Chancery, which are full and complete from the time of King John down to the last decisions rendered by the present Lord Chancellor, and a complete series of the ledger books, showing the national expenditure from the time of Henry II. down to the present day, perfectly arranged and in excellent condition. Among the most interesting documents that were displayed I made a note of a treaty between Henry I. and Robert, earl of Flanders, the privilege granted by Pope Adrian to Henry II., giving him full permission to conquer Ireland, the treaties made with Robert Bruce, and mirabile dictu, the treaty of the Field of the Cloth of Gold, artistically illuminated with the portrait of Francis I., and bearing an impression of the seal chased by Benvenuto Cellini.

The thousands of volumes of state papers which lie on the shelves of the record office are at present being calendered and indexed by the clerks, but among other interesting historic documents that were shown was the confession of Guy Fawkes as to the details of the gunpowder plot, extorted from him by the rack, to which the poor wretch's signature, faint and nearly illegible, is affixed. There, too, was the piteous, yet withal, dignified letters of Elizabeth, written to her sister Mary, from the tower, pleading for her release from durance vile, and among other letters of interest were several short notes to foreign envoys of the bloody queen, prepared in anticipation of

SCIENTIFIC.

A London steam boiler company lights up the interior of boilers in such a way that the little cascades, currents, and whirlpools in the water in the course of steam formation may be all observed.

The Building News, speaking of the results of the researches of Schliemann, says that the Greek story of Hion accords with the discoveries at Hissarliks and the conclusion is inevitable that the Homeric Troy could have been on no other site.

Dr. C. H. Yelvington asserts that the copperhead never bites when coiled up, but will throw the middle of his body into long, almost rectanguiar, curves, and with his head and an inch or so of the neck slightly elevated above the ground is ready to defend itself.

As an inducement to the greater utilization of buttermilk in bread making, it is stated that it contains four to five per cent. of sugar, and ½ per cent. of mineral salts, and that after settling for cheese making it also contains one per cent. of nitrogeneous matter and nearly as much of butter fat.

At the last meeting of the Paris Academy of Sciences it was stated that a person who for the past two years has been experimenting near Nice with sulpho-carbonates and sulphur, as a remedy against the phylloxera, states that in five hectares of infected wines it is no longer possible to find any phylloxera.

In an article on the protection of iron from rust Van Nostrand's Magazine says that iron to be burried in damp earth may be coated with a mixture of 100 parts of resin, (colophony), 20 parts of gutta percha, and 50 parts of parraffine, to which 20 parts of magnesia and some mineral oil have been added.

M. Renard, of the Royal Academy of Brussels, has made a minute examination of the ashes of the great eruption of Krakatoo, which fell at Batavia on the 27th of last August. writer of mathematical bent, says the Scientific American, finds from the census returns that there are about 17,000 dentists in the United States, who, he estimates, packs into the teeth of the American people a ton of pure gold annually. Continuing his speculations, he predicts that in the twenty-first century all the gold will be buried in the graveyards.

From a large number of experiments with the antennæ of insects, Mr. C. J. A. Porter is led to conclude (1) that the antennæ are not the organ of any one or of any combination of what we call the five senses—hearing, seeing, smelling, touching and tasting; (2) that the power of direction does not lie in the antennæ, and (3) that the antennæ are the organ of some sense not possessed by us.

JENNY LIND'S HOME.

The Swedish Nightingale's Retreat at "Wind's Point," England—A Famous Singer's Old Age.

Since Jenny Lind-Goldschmdit left Wimbledon she has resided more or less at Milvern, and in the summer of last year she bought the house at Burstner's Cross which was erected a few years ago by a captain Johnston who blasted away the rocks which he hurled down the great guly which forms the great southeastern defense of the great camp of the Herefordshire Beacon. The house is built in this rocky quarry. Fine shrubs grow around it. There are pleasant walks, sheltered from the black north and south winds which here, some thousand feet above the sea level, swirl and rave at will. Frum the house can be heard at times the innocent revely at Pete's Pocket's humble hostelry so well known to tourists. The climbers over the old ramparts can look down on the pleasant house with its green verandas. The students of the earth's crust, the incipient Murchisons, Sedgwicks, and Lyells look wistfully at the rude pillar of dark stone left by the quarrymen in the grounds; for it is the corse of the hills—a specimen of Laurentian gneiss, a relic of the primeval land, the oldest stratified rock which had been upheaved by the eruption which formed the Plutonic ridge which forms the Malvern chain of hills. It was consummate taste that led our nightingale to this nest. There is no place in England where such scenery, such surroundings, and such associations can be found blended in one harmonious whole. The weald of Kent might vie with the eastern view; but you have to go further afield to match the western slopes. From the Forest of Dean to the Black mountains, from Robin Hood's butts to the far-off Salopian hills, is the orchard land of England—billows of land, washed and escarped by ancient seas. As you gaze on the scene from the almost Cyclopean ramparts, you are reminded that at your feet a golden crown was found, lost in some combat for the possession of these heights. On the slopes in the mid-distance Prince Edward Longshanks escaped from his captors after the battle of Lewes. You can see the site of Wigmore, where Mortimer, earl of March, awaited him. You can see the line of his march to circumvent the great earl of Leicester, as well as the green hills of Fevesham, where the father of English parliaments lost his life. On these hills lurked Owen Glendower in the latter years of his life. Through this pass in the hills marched Edward of York to fulfill his vow on yon victorious field at Mortimer's Cross. The little church peeping through the trees has yet some of the relics of that vow. That church, too, has a history; and in the house adjacent are preserved the traveling trunk and some of the garments of Catherine of Arragon. It seems strange that they should have found a home here, for only a few miles further Wolsey himself was a chaplain to the Nanfans, and he fell under the "curse of the shadow of the Raggedstone hill." At the reformation the little priory below was given to the Russel who had attended Catherine at Kimbolton, as a reward for his services; and the queen gave him, as a token of remembrance, her coverlet, her trunk, and her "wig-box." Had this latter article anything to do with the release from durance vile, and among other letters of interest were several short notes to foreign envoys of the bloody queen, prepared in anticipation of the birth of a child, that never took place, blanks being left for the date and sex. The letter of Monteagle in which he gave full information beforehand of the intended gunpowder plot, and numerous epistles written by James I., Mary Queen of Scots, Catharine de Medicis, Charles I. and II., and many others from kings and queens who succeeded after the reformation, and from statesmen and nobles who played so great a part in the past in elevating England to the high position she occupied among the nations of the world.

The patent rolls, too, are here, and also run consecutively from the thirteenth century up to the present day. In these are recorded the accounts of the sieges of castles, the creating of titles, the granting of safe conducts, the bestowal of land on begging clergy, and the negotiations with foreigners. We glanced, too, at the parliamentary rolls; the church rolls, in which are to be found particulars of all grants of privileges to the religious houses; the financial rolls, running from the time of King John to Charles I., in which we have a complete record of the money which English kings received in payment for licenses they granted to alienate lands, for knights' services, for pardons, and various other convenient schemes and dodges by which the monarchs in the good old times were wont to replenish their exchequers.

The oblata rolls, too, are full of interest to those who are curious to know how in the brave days of old great men were wont to secure the loyal protection or favor, for therein are set out particulars of all gifts presented to royality by subjects having an ax to grind. We were shown the black and red books of the exchequer, in which it is explained how the land was held in old times; the golden bull of Clement VII., by which Henry VII., of infamous memory, was constituted defender of the faith.

Beyond the papers and documents I have mentioned there are miles and miles of parchment piled up in the record office filled with matters pregnant with interest not only to the English people, but to every student of historic lore, and an American in London on his summer vacation may while away an afternoon with pleasure and profit in glancing over some of the famous documents of the bare existence of which, I firmly believe, nine-tenths of the inhabitants of London are profoundly ignorant.—London Correspondence.

Mr. de Lesseps finds, according to his paper read before the Academy of Sciences, Paris, on Nov. 26, that the great earthquake wave caused by the recent disturbances at Java would appear to have made its way across the Indian and Atlantic Oceans, round the Cape of Good Hope, to the east coast of Central America in about thirty hours.

"Science," says the editor of the American Naturalist, "is becoming widely popularized in the present generation, and the fruits will be seen in the next. But in a country like ours, the Government alone need not undertake the task of creating a body of scientists; that work should be done by the people and for the people. The time is coming when our people will be less materialistic, and when those who are well-off already will cease trying to accumulate more wealth, but turn their attention to 'rolling up' the intellectual and scientific capital of our domain.'"

"If," says W. Mattieu Williams, "I were living in the midst of London, Birmingham, Manchester, or any other large city, I would recklessly disfigure my premises by removing a pane of glass from the window of every room, or knocking a hole through the outer wall, and placing in the opening there created a frame of serim gauze, with a glass door for closing, or partially closing, it in extremely cold weather, and I believe that all the inmates would thereby escape some of the special ills to which residents in large owns are liable."

To make plastic carbons for batteries the following receipt is recommended by M. Max Nitsche-Niesky:—Good coke is ground and mixed with coal tar to a stiff dough and pressed into moulds made of iron and brass. After drying for a few days in a closed place it is heated in a furnace, where it is protected from the direct flames and burned feebly at first, then strongly, the fire being gradually raised to a white heat, which is maintained for six or eight hours. The fire is then permitted to slowly go down, and being perfectly cold the carbon is taken out of the furnace.

The report on the sanitary condition of Montreal for 1882 has just been made public. The population is estimated at 144,000; the death rate was equal to 77.1 per 1,000, against 31.8 in the ten preceding years. In these years the lowest rate was 25.9 in 1880, and the highest 37.4 in 1872. The French Canadians constitute more than one-half the population; with them the death in 1882 was 32.5, while it was 23.5 among the Roman Catholics, and 18.2 among the Protestants. Of the total deaths among the French Canadians 61.7 per cent. were children. Nearly 24 per cent. of all the deaths were from zymotic or preventable diseases. The municipality is showing much energy in promoting the passage of an adequate health bill.

One of the novelties in London is the literary bracelet. It is made of twelve tiny books (silver or gold), attached to each other by a double chain. Each little book bears the enamelled name of a favorite poet or novelist. There are also musical bracelets of the same model, only they of course have the names of operas or composers.

What a broad expanse greets the eye of Jenny Lind as she glances over this old-red-tiled church-tower! She can see the scene of another queen's misfortunes, for the "bloody meadow" of Tewkesbury, and Tewkesbury itself, are conspicuously visible, where Margaret of Anjou met the crowning sorrow of her life. Beyond are Gloucester and Cheltenham, with the whole range of the Cotswolds with their outlying politic islands of Bredon and Meon. By these Shakspeare's Avon meanders, and we get a glimpse of the Warwickshire vale. Even the beacon-tower that gave forth the lurid light to tell the anxious parliament in London that Charles had not been victorious in the fight at Edgehill is seen at fitful moments from hence. It was the first battle of the civil wars—the last was fought, within sight, at Worcester—and that fatal 3rd of September a belt of fire burst forth from a woody ridge which fringes the "faithful city," and the Second Charles fled with a few companions to the old forest of Brewood, to return disguised as a groom by that Meon hill we can see, with Lady Jane riding behind him.

Burst of melody comes through the trees from the nightingale's nest. We are at once removed from the past to the present; yet one conjures up as many memories as the other. OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

LONDON CHIMNEY-SWEEPERS

Looking out of my window in London, last May-Day I saw that a crowd had collected in front of one of the shops near by. The groups shifted presently, and then I could see what was the attraction of the moment.

A sort of floral bower was erected, around which three or four gayly-dressed young people were dancing, accompanying themselves by clapping their hands and singing in a monotonous though cheerful tone of voice. Near by stood two boys, dressed most grotesquely and performing the most remarkable music on a drum and tambourine.

Round and round the bower went the dancers, with a peculiar shuffling gait. There were two girls and three boys, or young men, and their costumes looked like those of stage gypsies or Bohemians.

The dance ended; they left their bower standing and passed among the crowd a sort of bag, in which nearly every one dropped a piece of money. They called at the shop-doors, where they were most good-naturedly received and finally departed for a new scene carrying their bower with them.

I was much interested to learn that these were of the famous craft of London chimney sweeps. May-Day is their peculiar festival, and on that day they dance and sing in small bands, just as I had seen them from my window.

Few trades in London have so much that is romatic and entertaining in their history as has that of the chimney-sweeps, or "climbing-boys."

In the last century they were much more generally employed than they are now. There were then no machines for chimney-cleaning, and the little boys, who began at a very tender age to serve as apprentices, were most cruelly treated.

These children were completely in the hands of their masters, who employed older boys to superintend them, to drive them up and down the chimneys, to flog them if they refused to go, or even to starve them into submission.

Among the lower classes, boys between the ages of four and ten years were frequently sold by their miserable parents to master-sweeps; and as the work given them was very difficult and terrifying, the cruellest means of forcing them were devised.

One of the instruments used for this purpose, well-known to have been employed during George the Third's reign, was a kind of spiked pole, which was pushed up or down the chimney after the poor little boy who was sent in, and which pricked him cruelly every time he slipped or fell.

Chimney-sweeps were then in such demand in England, that new boys were always sought for. In the last century a great many young children were kidnapped by wicked people, who sold them to master sweeps as their own.

Many romantic stories are told of these cases, some which are recorded with all the details, and are known to be true. One of the most interesting has just been given to me on the very best authority. In August, 1804, chimney-sweeps were sent for to go to a house in Turlington, in Yorkshire. An elder boy came with a child of about four years, who was forced little chimney-sweeps, thinking it a hardship that they never had a genuine holiday treat. So on May-Day every year she gave them a picnic tea-party in her fine garden, and presented each boy with a shilling as he bade her good-by.

It was for some time supposed that Mrs. Montagu's own little boy had once been lost, and returned to her as a little sweep two years later, but this story has been denied by several persons who knew the clever philanthropist.

Mrs. Montagu's name is still beloved and respected by the poor London sweeps, who know nothing of her fame as a "Bas-bleu."

Soon after Sir George Boynton's advertisements about his protege, the societies which interested themselves in the "climbing boys" thoroughly investigated the subject of their cruel treatment, and gave the result of their inquiries to the public. Many poor little fellows were found with bruises and burns, and wounds from the long pins thrust into their feet by older boys to force them to ascend the dreaded chimneys. But still worse were the discoveries of their shocking immorality.

The word of God was unknown to them; they had been so long among low associates, that thieving and lying had become second nature to them, and the climbing boys of London were declared to be developing into criminals, whose end must be the gallows.

After some years of fruitless effort in their behalf, Parliament at last took up the subject, and in 1832 an act was passed forbidding the use of climbing boys in chimneys. This act has, however, been constantly disregarded, though at present nearly all sweeps use a long brush-machine for cleansing the chimneys.

About once in six weeks the sweeps come around to every London chimney. We are always awakened by them at day-break, and the noise in the walls and chimneys is as though the roof were tumbling down!

They perform their work much better since the machines came into use, and are said to be greatly improved in character; but at best the life must be a hard one, and the boys apprenticed to it are sorely to be pitied.

Before their annual holiday the younger sweeps call at various houses to beg for old ribbons and flowers and tinsel. I was spending the day recently with an old lady in the quaint neighborhood of Kensington, and she showed me a great lot of gay finery, in which feathers and ribbons, and flowers once worn by a very pretty young lady at Her Majesty's drawing-room," were included.

"Those are all for my chimney-sweeps," she said in explanation. "For years they have come to me for their finery, and on May-Day, at four o'clock, I give a tea-party to twenty-five of them."

So you see Mrs. Montagu's good example has not been forgotten.

Curiosities of Divorce.

The great increase of divorce cases that has been discernible of late, says a writer in the Pall Mall Gazette, is not a peculiarity of our own insular society; nor does it seem to be due only to the fact that the people of all classes are beginning to find

The Amber and Meerschaum Industry of Austria

Within the last thirty years, the amber and meerschaum industry of Austria, has grown from a very small beginning to an independent and special branch, which is at present capable of producing excellent results, so that goods of great beauty and excellent quality are sold at comparatively low prices.

The manufacture of articles from amber and meerschum, is chiefly concentrated in Vienna, although very respectable representatives of this branch can be pointed to in other large cities in that Empire.

It is scarcely crediable how wonderfully these two substances can be wrought, and what a variety of different articles can be made from them, simple or complex in form, and all in excellent taste, and elegantly made. It is only necessary to cast a glance into the show cases of the large Vienna amber and meerschaum firms, in order to obtain an idea of the numerous and artistic articles of magnificent workmenship that catch the eye of the passer-by and involuntarily invite purchase.

First of all in elegance and variety is the immense collection of neat and elegant cigar-holders, of the simplest, as well the most fantastic shapes. While in former years the magnificent pipes ruled the day, at present, when cigars and cigarettes are used by nearly all civilized people, they are almost entirely superseded by cigar and cigarette holders. In addition to a variety of plainer figures, there are veiled Venuses, sleeping Cupids, Indians with amber lances, jockeys with their horses, etc., also heads of women, of Zouaves, and of Bedouins, and we are astonished at the thousands of methods of combining these substances, amber and meerschaum, and no less at the artistic design and execution of the articles.

Equally varied in the collection of meerschaum pipes, that must enchant every passionate smoker. We see there the Dublin pipe of amber and meerschaum, the Albert the Rigolbouche, the Irish, and the Belgian pipes, also the curved London and French pipes and the Suez Canal pipes mounted in silver, meerschaum hand-pipes with eggs, serpents, etc., all neatly and tastefully cut in meerschaum. Then there are the celebrated Turkish pipes, both flat and pointed, and a legion of pipes ornamented with character heads and other carvings. Then the never-failing artistic objects with which large pipes are ornamented, carved in large dimensions. Cigar holders ornamented with initials, monograms, or whole names, sell well.

We must also state, that, like meerschaum, amber is used alone, or both together are used for smokers' articles.

For many years past a new mass called artificial meerschaum has been made from the chips and turnings of genuine meerschaum, and at present it is largely employed. Besides this, different kinds of artificial amber are produced, and used to imitate these various articles.

Amber is distinguished for its remarkably fine color, and like meerschaum it is turned on the lathe, filed, cut and sawed, and from this expensive material magnificent ornaments are made, such as necklaces, earrings, pins, brooches, and bracelets; also smokers' articles, especially mouth-pieces and cigar holders, and also coral, cups, saucers, wreaths, etc.

One of the most interesting has just been given to me on the very best authority. In August, 1804, chimney-sweeps were sent for to go to a house in Turlington, in Yorkshire. An elder boy came with a child of about four years, who was forced up the chimney.

The poor little fellow was overcome with fright on finding himself left in the chimney, and, losing his balance, fell down upon the grate, where his legs were badly bruised.

In this condition the people of the house found him. On bathing the child's begrimed face and hands, they discovered that he was fair and delicate in appearance; evidently a gentleman's son.

Sir George Strickland, of Boynton, who lived near, came over to see the child, and was persuaded that he had been stolen. The master-sweep being sent for, declared he, had procured him from a beggar woman who seemed glad to get rid of him; beyond that he knew nothing of the child.

Sir George took the child home to Boynton with him. On having his dinner brought to him, the little fellow took up a silver fork and exclaimed,—

"Papa has forks like these!"

When Sir George's housekeeper showed him her silver watch, he said, "Papa's watch is gold," and pressing the handle, added, "Papa's watch rings; why does not yours?"

At night he desired to say his prayers, and repeated the Lord's Prayer perfectly. In vain Sir George and his daughters and all the servants questioned the little fellow about his home; he could remember only a little about it.

But he invariably asserted that he was gathering flowers in his mamma's garden, when a woman came up and offered to give him a ride on a horse. He remembered being put on the horse, then going off in a ship; after that his recollections were all confused.

At Boynton he showed at once that he was accustomed to a fine style of living, and accepted al lthe attentions and services of the servants as a matter of course. When he heard Sir George called by name for the first time, he exclaimed. "I had an uncle, George" and then spoke of his aunt.

Later, he told Sir George that his aunt was called Mrs. Flamborough.

Sir George at once advertised the story; but in spite of the various evidences that the child had been lost or stolen, no answers ever came.

It was supposed by many that the little boy was heir to some property which designing relatives wished to keep for themselves. Sir George adopted the boy but he died before he grew to manhood, and the mystery of his origin was never solved.

Some good, however, came of the curious incident which brought him to Boynton. A great many people began to interest themselves in the sad condition of the little "climbing boys."

Among the most good-natured was Mrs. Montagu, the famous hostess of the "Blue Stocking" Society in London. You may see her fine house and gardens on Portman Square, to-day, very much as they looked in the reign of George III.

Not only was she a celebrated literary character and queen of society, but she became well-known for her efforts to benefit the poor of London.

She was strongly interested in the poor has been discernible of late, says a writer in the Pall Mall Gazette, is not a peculiarity of our own insular society; nor does it seem to be due only to the fact that the people of all classes are beginning to find out how easy it is to get rid of an unfaithful consort. Conjugal fidelity is not one of the blessings which is increased by the advance of civilization, and a similar want of harmony between husbands and wives of the period is noted in all countries. M. Bertillon, the editor of the Annals of Demography, has been giving a lecture in which he sets forth this fact, and a number of others which are certainly amusing and perhaps also instructive. For instance, he finds that the households in which divorces are most common are those where the consorts are most nearly of the same age. Where there is a great disparity of age it is necessary to make a complete distinction between cases where the elder party is the husband and where he is not. Old husbands, from some reason or other, seem to be even better able to retain the affections of their wives, or at any rate to maintain legal possession of their better-halves, than young ones; for as the man is older in proportion to the woman, so is he less frequently divorced from her. With women it is alto gether different; for the older they are in proportion to their husbands the more likely they are to part or be parted from them. In making these comparisons, judicial separations—in countries where divorce is not permitted—are counted as divorces. But M. Bertillen finds that in countries where divorce is prohibited suicides from "domestic trouble," and poisonings, are much more frequent than elsewhere. And he naturally draws this moral: that it is better to let people get divorced than to drive them into putting an end to one another or themselves.

Cremation in England.

Dr. Price, the "Druid," has not lived wholly in vain. At least he has been the means of eliciting high judicial opinion as to the legality of cremation. So far as the law is concerned, every man may dispose of his dead by burning if it seems fit to him. Nor need he now journey in company with a coffin to Berlin or Milan in order that his deceased relative may be reduced to ashes if not to dust. A cremation society has been formed in England, which has got its stoves and furnaces in working order, its staff of "operators," and its medical officers all complete, and wants for nothing, it appears but business. No doubt it will soon get it, now that neither law nor religion seems to be necessarily opposed to the new process. There is one matter, however, on which the society will require to give good guarantees to the public. They have announced that careful precautions will be taken to ascertain in all cases the cause of death before the body is given to the flames. People are not often poisoned, perhaps; but such cases do happen, and no poisoner could wish for anything more than the complete and immediate destruction of his victim's remains. And facilities of concealment naturally increase the temptation to crime.

What class of people is that whom it is never necessary to urge to take more interest in their business?—Pawnbrokers.

magnificent ornaments are made, such as necklaces, earrings, pins, brooches, and bracelets; also smokers' articles, especially mouth-pieces and cigar holders, and also coral, cups, saucers, wreaths, etc.

Austria imports both of these raw materials—amber and meerschaum—in very large quantities, the former from Dantzig, the latter chiefly from Russia, in Asia Minor. The quantity of raw material imported, as well as of finished goods exported, is simply enormous.—Deutsche Industrie Zeitung.

Holding the Fort.

At the last Stafford, Eng., assizes an action for an assault was brought by two women of Birmingham, named Ormond, of prepossessing appearance, in connection with proceedings instituted to obtain their ejection from their house, on the ground of immoral conduct. They obtained a verdict for nominal damages; but they failed to pay the costs, and some extraordinary proceedings have just taken place at the house. A distress warrant was issued to recover the costs, but the defendants barred the doors te prevent an entrance. The bailiffs have been watching for an opportunity to act for the last two days, and the inmates have been practically imprisoned. Last night a desperate attempt was made by a male friend to send them provisions. He managed to evade the constable who guarded the rear of the premises, and threw a rope attached to a bag of provisions to the girls, who were at the bedroom window. They were about to haul it up when the bailiffs seized the bag. He was swung off his feet, and would have had to let go his hold, but another bailiff went to his assistance and dragged the rope from the girls' hands. The male friend thereupon opened the bag and commenced to throw bread and other provisions to them through the window, but he only succeeded in supplying them with one loaf when the bailiffs summarily ejected him from the premises. About 11 o'clock last night the door was opened, and the bailiffs were admitted and took possession of the premises. The value of the furniture was said to be forty shillings. The costs for which the distress was levied amounted to £160.

The Regulation of Dreaming.

A French investigator, M. Delauny, finds from experiments upon himself that the character of his dreaming may be controled by stimulating various portions of the brain by means of heat. By covering his forehead with a layer of wadding he gets sane, intelligent dreams. He also experimented on modes of lying, which favor the flow of blood to particular parts, increasing their nutrition and functional activity. He has observed that the dreams he has while lying on his back are sensorial, variegated, luxurious. Those experienced when on the right side are mobile, full of exaggeration, absurd, and refer to old matters; but those produced when on the left side are intelligent and reasonable, and relate to recent matters; in these dreams one often speaks.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, APRIL 18, 1884.

—Of the total grant of $9,126,400 to railways by the Dominion Government, Quebec will receive $4,899,200; the Maritime Provinces, $3,590,000, and Ontario only $636,800.

—Sir Richard Cartwright has been invited by the Reform association of Toronto to give an address in that city on the work of the session now closing. If the invitation is accepted the address will be given in about two weeks.

—The towering passion which Senator McPherson worked himself into over a reference, a few days ago in the Senate, to his connection with the Toronto conspiracy is strong evidence of his guilt. As an independent journal remarks, "An innocent man would hardly storm and rage and tear a passion to tatters in exonerating himself."

—What's the matter with the Beaver? It last week had not a word of abuse for Mr. Parks nor the tiniest bit of a puff for Mr. Wilson. Was it knocked out in the first round on the "subsidy" question and wants time to recover wind, or was it the correspondence of Mr. Machar that did the flooring? Probably it was both.

—The London Advertiser comes to hand this week in a handsome new dress and printed on a perfecting press from stereotyped plates. The Advertiser has long been the favorite western journal of THE EXPRESS and this evidence of its prosperity is to us most gratifying. It is one of the best edited, brightest and newsiest dailies on the continent. May it continue to prosper.

—Financial difficulties have compelled the Toronto World to cease publication, It was a bright, newsy sheet, and we regret to lose it from our table. There were two many dailies in Toronto, and the World being the weaker, financially, had to succumb. Mr. McLean made a plucky fight from the outset against heavy odds and will have the cumstances from his place in the House and let Parliament deal with it. Mr. Cunningham did so. What was the consequence? The member for Marquette was immediately proclaimed a liar by every Tory organ in the country. His statement, unsupported by direct evidence although believed by all, lacked collateral proof and the man who attempted to bribe a member of Parliament escaped punishment,

And so it would be again.

THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK.

[Toronto Morning News.]

The Tory party of the Dominion is apparently on the eve of breaking up. There is no coherence among the different sections of which it is composed on the ground of principle. They have for many years been kept from drifting apart by the policy of wholesale bribery, as exemplified in the railway subsidy resolutions, and that policy has about run the length of its tether, together with its originator. Sir John Macdonald is the only man who, by his personal influence could have united the Ontario Tories in support of a system under which their province is systematically despoiled to conciliate the other members of the union. He is the sole remaining link which holds together the soundering elements. All the hopes and prospects of Toryism, as parties are at present constituted, hang upon his continued political existence. After him the deluge.

Who is there in the ranks of the party who can be named as a possible immediate successor to the chieftain, without exciting a smile of incredulity? Not Tupper, whose schemes and plots to secure the revision of premiership have all resulted in failure. He is a disgraced and discredited man, and Sir John drove the last nail into the coffin of his political aspirations, laughing in his sleeve no doubt the while, by the whitewashing act. Ontario will have none of him and the Bleus detest him. His political term of existence is likely to run out before that of the jaunty premier.

Nobody seriously supposes that Sir Tilley's respectable mediocrity would be equal to the burden which has taxed to the utmost the exceptional astuteness of Sir John. Probably he sufficiently realizes his own limitations to refrain from aspiring to the honor.

Sir Langevin is out of the race, were it only on the ground of his nationality, for Ontario is in no mood at present to accept a Bleu premier. Moreover, he has not sufficient strength in his own province to make him a possible successor to Sir John.

Never in the history of the country was the ruling party so utterly destitute of men possessed of the capacity for leadership.

When, as must inevitably happen in the course of a very few years, the party is left without Sir John's hand at the helm, it will inevitably go to pieces for want, in the first place, of a common bond of union, and in the second of a leader able in any measure to fill the chieftain's shoes.

And then the Grits, by the mere force of circumstances, will get their innings.

If they are inferior to the Tories in numbers, they are at present superior to them in homogeneity and compactness.

With Toryism resolved into a number of sectional fragments, each rallying round second-rate local leaders, and unable to agree either as to a general policy or a parliamentary chief, the country must of necessity look to the Grits to carry on the work of administration.

The premiership will drop into Edward Blake's hands like a ripe pear, and all he has to do to get it is to stand and wait. As to his keeping it any length of time that is another question.

LAWSUIT BREEDS LAWSUIT.

Two Hundred Thousand Dollars Claimed by Mr. Cadwell from Mr. McLaren.

Montreal, April 15.—Now that the Privy Council has decided that Mr. Cadwell has a right to float his logs down the little Mississippi, without paying anything to Mr. McLaren for having made floating logs a possibility, the former claims from the latter all the loss sustained by his being prevented from exercising his legal rights. While the great law suit has been pending Mr. Cadwell's logs, to the value of about $100,000, have been lying useless in the upper part of the stream, contracts have been lost, the mills closed down, and men have been thrown out of work. An action is accordingly being taken, in the Toronto Assize Court, for $200,000 damages. Mr. Cadwell's costs in the suit ended amount to about $60,000, which Mr. McLaren will have to pay.

Obituary.

We deeply regret to learn of the death of Robert John Joyce, a fourteen year old son of Mr. Wm. Joyce of Adolphustown, which took place on the 15th inst. He was carried off after an illness of only five days of scarlet fever. He was a very fine boy and was much loved by his parents and neighbours. Following the example of his parents he at an early day gave his heart to God and died in the hope of a blissful future. The parents have the sympathy of a large circle of friends in their great bereavement.

France and China.

The French are pressing upon China their demands for an indemnity, and the Chinese government is greatly alarmed. While anxious to resist French aggressions, the government feared sedition within the empire, as many of the people were prepared for insurrection when opportunity offered. The French successes in Tonquin are not bettering the position of the government, and in order to turn the popular resentment in another direction they are beheading officers and officials in Tonquin by the wholesale. A little while ago war between France and China appeared to be inevitable, but now France seems to be having it all her own way.

it from our table. There were two many dailies in Toronto, and the World being the weaker, financially, had to succumb. Mr. McLean made a plucky fight from the outset against heavy odds and will have the sympathy of newspaper men generally in his misfortune.

—There is a crisis in Manitoba politics just now over the refusal by the Dominion Government for "better terms" for that province. It is rumoured that Mr. Norquay contemplates resigning, and it is said that Attorney-General Miller is intriguing to form a Tory Government. A later report says that Messrs. Norquay and Miller will go to England to present the case of the province to the Imperial authorities.

—Mr. Dalton McCarthy's pocket organ in writing of the McLaren-Caldwell decision says that "the Privy Council is a corrupt and effete institution whose decisions should be disallowed." That is always the way with the average Tory. He is very loud-mouthed in support of British institutions until his path is crossed, then he is a rebel, annexationist and anything else that is anti-British.

—When the Napanee Town Council votes a paltry hundred dollars to an object from which every ratepayer will derive a substantial advantage, the local Tory organ cries out against the "extravagance," but when the Dominion Government give $30,000,000 of the people's money to an enterprise from which the great mass of the taxpayers will receive little or no advantage it has nothing but words of commendation. What beautiful consistency!

—The Standard has added a new feature in the way of a column devoted to record of "what people are saying." The feature is not what might be called original, but it is nevertheless an improvement. The writer evidently knows something of what the people are saying, for in last week's issue we find the following paragraphs:

"That THE EXPRESS hit the Beaver squarely between the eyes on the 'subsidy' question.

That the word 'subsidy' will not be admitted to the Beaver for a whole year."

—Another week has passed and yet Mr. Wilson has not even attempted an explanation of the debenture deal. Probably the reason is that he knows he cannot do it successfully. But that need not deter him from making some sort of an explanation. The public are interested in another phase of the case apart from the loss of the $600. They want to know why it is that when the County Council delegates to him certain work he finds it necessary to transfer it to Mr. Roe. Is it because Mr. Wilson considers himself incapable of performing the work? If that is the case then Mr. Wilson should not seek municipal honours.

—The Toronto Week having expressed the belief that the prowling brood of bribers should have been informed upon before they had actually paid over money, the Ottawa Free Press retorts:

"When, in the season of 1873, the fate of Sir Macdonald Ministry was trembling in the balance, an agent of the government approached the late Mr. Robert Cunningham, M. P. for Marquette, with the offer of a bribe to vote for Sir John Macdonald. Mr. Cunningham informed the Opposition leaders of the matter and asked advice. He was told that it was his duty to state the circumstances to the House and to get it is to stand and wait. As to his keeping it any length of time that is another question.

SPRING ASSIZES.

No Criminal Cases.—A Light Civil Docket.

[Before Mr. Justice Patterson.]

The Spring Assizes opened at the Court House on Monday last before Mr. Justice Patterson. There being no prisoners in gaol awaiting trial His Lordship was presented by the Sheriff with a pair of white gloves. Mr. A. L. Morden, C. C. A., appeared as Crown Counsel. The only members of the bar from a distance present were Mr. Jas. Bethune, Q.C., Toronto and Mr. B. M. Britton, Q.C., Kingston. The criminal docket was a blank and only four cases appeared on the civil docket. They were as follows:—Jury—Amey vs. G. T. R.; non-jury—McPherson vs. McPherson, Hooper vs. Herring and Switzer vs. Rathbun.

GRAND JURY.

The following gentleman composed the grand jury:—John Clark, foreman; Messrs. Henry Armstrong, W. C. Amey, Jacob Baker, Alex. Clancy, D. C. Forward, Robert Filson, Henry Ham, James Joyce, Leverett Lake, Jas. B. Miller, Chester Neville, Geo. A. Parrott, Miles Robertson, Jas. Russell, John Smith, J. D. Wagar, Charles Wagar, Stephen Wees, L. D. Williams.

His Lordship in addressing the Grand Jury congratulated the county on his having been the recipient of the emblematic white gloves, which signified that there were no prisoners in gaol awaiting trial. He was also pleased to be able to inform the jury that there were no criminal cases to come before them, and that the only duty devolving upon them would be to examine the gaol and make a report thereon, and to make any suggestions they might deem proper on matters effecting the welfare of the community.

The jury then retired. They brought in the following presentment Tuesday morning:

To His Lordship Mr. Justice Patterson:

The Grand Jury for the County of Lennox & Addington at the Spring Assizes beg leave to report that they have examined the county gaol and the prisoners confined therein, and beg to express their gratification at the cleanliness and good order everywhere apparent within the building.

The prisoners seem to be well and properly treated and to be as contented as such persons could be expected to be.

We made a careful examination of the gaol building and would recommend that some means be taken to prevent the use of the large hinges on the gate leading out of the gaol yard by prisoners in climbing upwards.

As now existing these hinges seem to afford a temporary and not very difficult means for scaling the prison walls.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed) JOHN CLARK,
Foreman.

Grand Jury Room, April 15th, 1884.

AMEY VS. GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.—This was an action for damages for the killing of plaintiff's husband at the Collinsby crossing. The case was tried at the fall assizes but the jury failed to agree, hence this trial. After hearing a goodly portion of the evidence for the plaintiff the case was settled by the company paying plaintiff $500 and all costs. Mr. B. M. Britton, Q. C., and Mr. E. H. Hooper for plaintiff; Mr. Jas. Bethune, Q. C., for the defendants.

MCPHERSON VS. MCPHERSON.—Action on promissory note. Verdict for plaintiff by default. Deroche & Madden for plaintiff.

The other cases were referred, that of Hooper vs. Herring to Mr. S. S. Lazier, and Switzer vs. Rathbun to Judge Price.

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in his admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

TABLE NO. 6 is spread with ends of Dress Goods, marked at a price to clear; whole pieces of Dress Goods to be cleared out at 15 cent a yard, worth from twice to three times that money; there is also a lot of "Last Setts" of Lace Curtains, Single Lambrequins, ends of Muslin and Lace marked at prices almost equivolent to giving them away.

TABLE NO. 7 is spread with a lot of Men's Hats, usual prices of which were from 75, 1.00, 1.25, 1.75, 2.00, to 3.00, "Your choice of this table for 50c.

Every Lady who has a husband and children to clothe should see these tables at once. We have everything exactly as announced above, and they are the biggest bargains ever seen in Napanee.

In order to make this Sale a great success we have decided to give to every purchaser of any other goods throughout our stock a discount of 10 per cent., except on Factory Cottons, Looms and Shirtings, Cotton Yarns, Carpet Warps and Cotton Bags, all of which will be sold at mill prices. This is an opportunity not to be missed by any person who values money. Our goods are all marked closely, and we claim that they are unusually good value at the regular prices, so that during this Sale there is a straight saving to every purchaser of 10 per cent. clear money. This will be given on Carpets, Lace Curtains, Dress Goods and Trimmings, Silks and Satins, Tweeds and Cloths, Prints, Ducks, Gloves, Hosiery, Corsets, Laces, Millinery, everything in the stock except the reservations made above. We need scarcely add, that this will be a bona fide, honestly conducted sale, and that all salesmen and saleswomen have instructions to deduct the discounts at the end of each bill.

THE TERMS are, all amounts under $20, CASH, over that amount approved notes at interest. The DISCOUNT will positively not be allowed unless on these terms.

Following is a sample of how bills will be made out, which will show in a clear manner the saving to be made.

A BURNING QUESTION.

St. George's Cathedral Vestry Meeting—An Exciting Scene.

KINGSTON, April 15.—The Easter vestry meetings held in the different city churches were of a very lively character. At St. Paul's Church Capt. Gaskin, in nominating Mr. J. Charles as a delegate to the Provincial Synod, desired him to state before his election what his views were in regard to the choice of a minister by the congregation. If Mr. Charles did not favor the selection of a minister by the people the people would not vote for him. Mr. Charles said he favored the choice of the people and was elected accordingly. At St. George's Cathedral the Wilson difficulty again came up, and the uproar during the discussion would have compared more favorably with that which usually takes place at a meeting of ward politicians. On a motion being made to pay the salary of the Rev. Dr. Wilson up to this Easter vestry meeting, after some discussion Dean Lyster arose and said that he had not been an opponent of Dr. Wilson's for seventeen years, that he had never differed with the Doctor until it occurred of the latter's own accord. He compared his late curate to a man who had given his horse too much rein and was thrown over his head. Abbie and the Salvation Army, he added, threw Dr. Wilson on his head. (Cries of "Shame, shame" and derisive cheers all over the hall.) Mr. Waldron said the Dean should cast no reflection on the Doctor. The Dean said he could not cast reflections upon a man who would sleep all night on the floor, referring to Dr. Wilson's prostration at the Salvation Army's barracks. (Cries of "Order, order," cheers and applause.) The Dean concluded by alluding to the condition upon which he offered to reinstate Dr. Wilson as his curate. After some further speaking, the following motion was put:—Moved by C. F. Gildersleeve, seconded by R. J. Carson, that as the rector has seen fit to dismiss the late curate, the Rev. H. Wilson, D.D., to whose salary the vestry contributed, and was ignored in such dismissal, and as such dismissal was without adequate cause and most unjust, after Dr. Wilson's long and successful ministration in the parish, this vestry refuses to contribute to the salary of a curate or curates. Mr. Walkem suggested the rejection of the motion. It was only a torch of discord. (Continued cheers and applause.) Mr. Gildersleeve (above the cries of many voices) charged the Dean with having been cruel, unjust and tyrannous in his dismissal of Dr. Wilson. [Voices—"Yes, yes," and "no, no," and tremendous uproar.] This motion was withdrawn, and the following one substituted:—Moved by R. T. Walkem, seconded by J. Muckleston, that this vestry desires to place on record their appreciation of the long and faithful services of Dr. Wilson, for seventeen years curate of this parish, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to him.—Carried.

The Dean fully, entirely and perfectly endorsed the resolution—"I deeply regret," he added, "that Dr. Wilson parted from me, not I from him."

More Rioting.

According to a St. John, Newfoundland, despatch of Tuesday, the people of Carbonear are again in arms against one another, and if there is no outside interference the Protestants and Catholics will probably cut each other to pieces before long. Riots such as these are very harmful to Christianity, but real Christians have nothing to do with them. Men who will shoot and bayonet each other in petty bigotry neither have reason in their minds nor charity in their hearts.

MACPHERSON VERY MAD.

He Makes a Wild Speech in the Senate.

[Toronto Morning News.]

OTTAWA, April 10.—The usual senatorial calm was to-day ruffled by a little breeze which has created much excitement among the old ladies. While in committee on Senator Macpherson's bill to provide for the appointment of registrars in the Northwest.

Senator Power remarked, that in view of recent disclosures at Toronto he hoped the Minister of Interior would be less reckless in future in giving people appointment, or authority to make appointments, to Northwest registrarships.

Senator Almon, an incoherent gentleman from Nova Scotia, who is the possessor of a very red face and a husky voice, jerked out an objection to Senator Power making any such allusion.

Senator Macpherson then rose in a tremendous rage, almost literally frothing at the mouth, and made the most violent harangue that was probably ever heard within the walls of the dignified and stately Senate Chamber.

He denied all complicity in the bribery plot, and said that Wilkinson's appointment was not intended to be transferable. He then fiercely denounced Mowat, Hardy, Pardee, McKim, and Balfour, applied to them such epithets as "liars," "law schemers" "base conspirators," "mean cowardly hounds," "a pack of knavish plotters," "contemptible tricksters," and many other pet names of similar import. He said that Mowat and his colleagues had entered into a conspiracy to ruin the characters of honest men and to endeavor to entrap into their snare a Dominion cabinet minister. He concluded by saying that Mowat had everlastingly disgraced himself by making improper reference to him (Macpherson) in connection with the bribery matter.

During the delivery of his harangue he was so inflamed with passion that he found it difficult to give utterance to his words, and at times it seemed as though he must choke or burst a blood vessel.

Owing to his excitement, the torrent of vituperation which poured fourth consisted of a series of incoherent sentences, uttered without any regard to their connection.

During its delivery shouts of "order" came from all parts of the chamber, and considerable confusion ensued, owing to the endeavors to make him regard the decencies of debate.

Senators Scott and Haythorne rose and objected that he was out of order, when Senator Plumb jumped up and contended that he was quite right and should go ahead.

They all stood together talking at the tops of their voices and gesticulating wildly; when in the middle of the confusion, McPherson finished his screed and sat down.

Senator Macpherson's conduct is condemned by the majority of the senators on both sides. They are shocked to think that one of their number should have used no better language than an ordinary member of parliament might be expected to use, and it is understood that the official reporter has been instructed to suppress the episode altogether in his report.

each other in petty bigotry neither have reason in their minds nor charity in their hearts.

Cuban Filibustering.

The filibustering expedition to Cuba, insignificant at first, has assumed serious proportions, and the authorities at Madrid and on the island are justly alarmed. Aguero is at best but a bandit, and his original followers little better, but he is gaining many adherants, and is likely to be the author of much destruction and disorder. The people of Cuba are greatly incensed at the exacting treatment they have received at the hands of the Spanish government, which bleeds the island almost to exhaustion annually, and are apparently ready to hail any change with satisfaction. At present it appears as if Aguero will carry everything before him.

A New Officer for the Salvation Army.

A new Salvation Army major has been appointed for Canada in place of Major Moore, who will in future confine his labors to the United States. The new man is an Englishman named Coombs. Many of the army are said to be exhibiting a know-nothing spirit, and asking why a Canadian wasn't appointed to the position. From a Salvation Army standpoint even the United States is a dependency of England, as the appointment of Major is made by General Booth. In its plan of having one head to which all branches of the church may look for orders, the Salvation Army resembles the Roman Catholic church. General Booth is the pope of the Salvation Army.

Fine Warerooms.

Messrs. Birrell & Phelan, the enterprising east end implement dealers, have this week moved into their new premises—the eastern store of the new Cartwright block. The shop has been fitted up especially for their accommodation and is one of the largest and neatest implement warerooms in the district. On the left of the entrance the office is located which is neatly furnished, and in the rear are a counter and shelving, where all the various sections of the machines the firm sells are kept to meet the requirements of customers in the event of any machine getting broken. The remainder of the store is occupied by various machines set up and in perfect working order, while the commodious basement contains machines carefully stowed away in parts awaiting orders for delivery. The firm are special agents for the various machines of the Massey Manufacturing Company of Toronto, probably the largest implement manufactory in the Dominion, and each implement is warranted the best of its kind. The manufactures of this Company include the Massey Harvester, the Toronto Mower, the Massey Mower and the Sharp Horse Rake. In addition to these they sell the Champion Seed Drill, the Wisner Seeder, Spring Tooth Wheel Cultivator, the Wilkinson Plough, the new McCloskey Separator and the celebrated Waterous "Champion" engine. They have also on sale a new hay elevator called "Birrell's Triple Purchase Hay Elevator," invented by the senior member of the firm and and patented. It is vastly superior to any other elevator in the market and should meet with a ready sale. Farmers should call and see it before purchasing any other. The entire display and the premises are indicative of the firm's push and enterprise. We wish them a very successful season.

CUPIDITY AND CRIME.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Two great facts haunted Christine Singleton's thought all through the long sleepless night that followed Benjuda's proposal. She was engaged to the richest man she knew, happiness, as she understood it, was at last within her grasp, and, in the very moment that made her safe, Vance had returned to lay her hopes in the dust and fill her with vague uncertainty and dread.

That her brother never had forgiven—never would forgive—her treachery to Nora she knew; far easier would it have been to win pardon from the dead girl than from the man who had so bitterly resented her wrongs.

Even Mrs. Bruce did not know how wide the breach between her children was, for she had not seen the brief savage epistle in which on the eve of quitting England, Vance had bidden his sister an eternal farewell.

"I will not reproach you; but I will not speak to you again. The stain of blood may be on Nora's hands, but it is on your soul, and you will always be the murderess in my thoughts. Some day even her punishment will find you out and reach you."

She shuddered as she realized the wild words that had hardly touched her at the time; the punishment seemed near at hand now, and it would be crushing if it took the shape she feared.

"I will not survive such a defeat," she said, looking, as she set her small white teeth together, very weird and wan in the gray morning light, very unlike the fair lily queen of the Baron's fancy. "I will never wither away in the dull country life that mother looks forward to so quietly. I, a poor desolate old maid? No, I will die first; this is my last chance! Vance must listen if I tell him this. If I marry Baron Benjuda, I will be a good woman; it is so easy for the rich to be good. If—if anything prevents the marriage——"

Cristine's face was very pale, her eyes had a resolute light. In her heart she was making an impious bargain with the heaven she had offended, and not with the brother whose forgiveness she almost despaired of winning. And yet, reckless as she was, there was something of truth and something of pathos in her resolve.

She did mean to be "good," if only she might be so on her own terms. She was was weary of the wickedness that had paid her so ill. The old passionate jealousy of Nora had necessarily died out for lack of fuel, the old love for Arthur Beaupre, the one genuine emotion of her life, was as dead. A wall had grown up between the old life and the new, and she felt it hard that the Cristine of these days, who wished ill to no one, and only well to her mother and herself, should be confounded with the fierce revengeful creature who had wrought such mischief in the days that were dead.

"Surely Vance must see things in this light," she thought, as she arrayed herself with considerable trepidation for the coming interview with her brother—for Vance, having been duly apprised of their whereabouts, had promised to call early in the day.

"At least we shall not meet in Benjuda's and his rapid professional success, which with a perfect belief in the truth of his words, he ascribed wholly and solely to his wife.

"But for her I should have been a penniless vagabond to-day, mother," he had said proudly. "I am a vagabond still, of course, but a vagabond with a balance at my bankers', and a respectable visiting list—which is a vagabond with a difference, as you know."

"I told him I did know," Mrs. Bruce finished, turning with perfect seriousness to her daughter. "I said Baron Benjuda—he knows all about the Baron, Crissie—told us that the world had quite changed its opinion since I was a girl, and actors were people of consideration now. He laughed, said the Baron was quite right, and again that he owed all this consideration to his wife."

"And when are we to see this paragon of perfection?" Cristine asked, unable to repress the habitual sneer, though she was honestly anxious for the answer.

Mrs. Bruce's face clouded a little.

"Well, not just at present; the baby is not four weeks old, and he does not think Nettie—that is, his wife—could bear the excitement yet."

Cristine Singleton pondered in some perplexity the words that were a mere disappointment, not to be questioned or examined, to her mother. Her acute intellect saw something strange in a prohibition that left the reconciliation incomplete, and she vainly sought to affix a reason to it.

There could hardly be danger to the most most nervous patient in the visit of avowedly friendly persons, and Vance must have seen that Mrs. Bruee was prepared to receive her new daughter-in-law with something approaching rapture. Was it designed to keep her at a distance, or was Vance's home-life not so altogether charming as he wished them to believe?

"Did he give you his address?" she asked abruptly; and Mrs. Bruce shook her head.

"No, my dear; I forgot to ask him for it. He said the first day Nettie could come out he would bring her here."

But it was hardly Nettie; her brother's conduct was surely prompted by some other motive than care for her, his delicate wife. In her restless suspicious frame of mind Cristine felt that she should know no peace until she had solved the mystery.

Long before conjecture had had time to exhaust itself on the subject, Baron Benjuda, more radiant, imposing-looking, and masterful than ever in his new character of accepted lover, had made his appearance and claimed all her attention and all her care. He was so large and important a personage, it seemed only natural to allow him a clear stage in one's thoughts, and even Mrs. Bruce allowed Vance to be forgotten while this comfortable wooer discoursed in his rich sonorous tones of love and money. He was the most solidly satisfactory of lovers, if to a more sentimental fancy he might have been held to fall short of ideal perfection. A few brief questions as to Cristine's position and prospects, which a shrewd guess at the Baron's character led Mrs. Bruce to answer with wise frankness, and then he turned to give the more agreeable side of the subject, and, lolling back very much at his ease in the big chair he had exactly suited him, he thought. Cophetua was surely the wisest of kings, a true epicure of feeling.

"Nothing to offer!" he said graciously, with lordly mocking smile, "Only the best gifts of Cophetua's queen, her love and innocence and beauty!"

The compliment was very prettily turned, or so he flattered himself; but Cristine did not smile as though it had banished her last modest fear. On the contrary, she looked, with a sort of wistful entreaty altogether out of keeping with her character as he knew it, into his face, and held one hand, as though she feared to release it.

"What is it, my lily queen?' he asked, half puzzled by the strangeness of her mood, half flattered by the thought that he had inspired a real affection where he had intended to make a splendid purchase.

"If—if anything should come between us now!" she said, with a look of such genuine terror as filled the Baron with supreme delight.

"Nothing shall." He threw one arm round the slim waist and drew her to him, till the fair hair rested on his broad shoulder. "You are mine now, Cristine; and I should like to see the man who would try to take what I call mine from me!"

The cheerful confidence of the strong unsentimental voice was like a tonic draught to Cristine. Why should she worry herself any more; her past was past; it should not overshadow her future. She raised her head; and, disengaging herself with a pretty little laugh, she gracefully glided from the subject.

"Vance was here this morning," she said, leaning back against the tall velvet-backed chair, well aware that her lover was noting the effective contrast it presented to the pale gold of her hair, the clear whiteness of her skin. "Vance was here; and he is married."

"As I could have told you," Benjuda said tranquilly. "I remember Miss Clare last year, a bright pretty little creature, full of talent and grace."

"But an actress," Miss Singleton said deprecatingly. "My connections will do you no great credit, I fear."

The Baron laughed with easy and magnificent scorn. Cristine still needed a lesson, he thought.

"My dear child, what can such things matter to me? As it happens, I shall consider myself most happy in the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Vance Singleton, who are very charming people; but, were one-half of your relatives hanged for murder, and the rest transported for swindling, it would alter my intentions no whit, were you all I thought you still. When you individually are guilty of an act that you need blush for, then I will give you up—but not till then. Do you agree to that Cristine?"

"Yes," said Cristine faintly—and her blood ran cold with fear.

"And when are you to see the new sister-in-law?"

"Oh"—Cristine looked up, inspired with a new idea—"mother and I intended to give her a surprise visit; but Vance is so stupid, he never left his address."

"Well, I can get you that," Benjuda said, smiling.

"Without asking him directly? For we want to surprise them both."

coming interview with her brother—for Vance, having been duly apprised of their whereabouts, had promised to call early in the day.

"At least we shall not meet in Benjuda's presence," Miss Singleton thought, with a nervous laugh, when a little before noon she heard her brother's clear voice in the hall, and a few seconds later her mother's glad welcoming cry.

"I will leave them a few moments together; it is but fair," she said, as she closed her bed-room door and walked back to the tall pier-glass that reflected a face so drawn and haggard that she could hardly believe it her own. She bit her lips till they nearly bled, and forced them to a ghastly parody of a smile, hating herself for the fear she showed. "It is conscience, I suppose—it cannot be that I am afraid of Vance—and yet, if my heart would only cease this sickening throbbing, I could go down and know the best and—the worst!"

But her heart beat only the more wildly, her throat and mouth grew parched, and, though Vance stayed more than an hour with his mother, it was not until she heard the door open and their voices echoing in the hall that she found resolution to descend the stairs and stand in her brother's presence. She looked like a ghost, as she stood white and trembling, unable to articulate a word, but raising eyes of hopeless entreaty to his. Even Vance, stern as his resentment was, and just as he felt it to be, was a little moved and softened; he had intended to raise his hat, as to a stranger, and pass on. Now to his mother's astonishment—"Why, Vance, it is Cristine!" he answered with cold gentleness, "How do you do, Cristine!"—and just touched her hand with his fingers at which she caught with a passionately grateful clutch.

It was the strangest meeting between brother and sister; but Cristine felt it was something gained; and, as the tall handsome young man passed out into the sunlet street, she drew a long breath of relief.

"What are you sighing about?" Mrs. Bruce asked almost indignantly, as she led the way back into the sitting-room and plumped contentedly down into the nearest seat. "If ever there was a happy day, this is one."

Cristine did not answer—hardly listened indeed—a fact which her mother was too brimful of delightful excitement to resent, or even notice.

"Fancy, Cristine! Vance is married, and making so much money, and, as Benjuda says, on the way to be a great man; and he has one sweet little girl called 'Nora,' and the best wife in the world."

But the fashion in which her mother's news was delivered was a little too much for Cristine. With one item tumbling over another, and all mixed pell-mell she could only gather that Vance was married—in itself a startling and significant fact that might naturally influence his attitude towards her.

"Try to tell me the story coherently, mother," she said more patiently than she usually spoke; "remember, I know nothing yet, and am eager to know all."

Her attention was now vividly awake; she drew her chair a little nearer, and listened with eager interest to the story Mrs. Bruce had to tell. It was briefly the story of Vance's wooing and wedding, at the Baron's character led Mrs. Bruce to answer with wise frankness, and then he turned to give the more agreeable side of the subject, and, lolling back very much at his ease in the big chair he had placed between them, spoke of what he meant to do for the wife and mother-in-law, who in future must learn to look wholly to him.

It was like a dream of Pactolus to the two women who had known the cruel pinch and grind of genteel pretentious poverty so long; they listened with eager eyes and lips apart while the full rich voice flowed evenly on in talk of settlements and pin-money and banking-accounts for present need. Lord de Gretton was a rich man, and had seemed to their then views lavishly liberal; but there was a touch of Eastern magnificence about the Baron's ideas which threw those of the dead man completely into the shade.

"You are too generous, Baron," Mrs. Bruce cried at last, tears of real gratitude rising in her eyes, a touch of true feeling making her uttterance husky and indistinct; while Cristine sat with clasped hands and down-bent head, wildly wondering if this were te be her punishment—f the gates of Paradise were to swing back before her, only to close inexorably in her face—if all the fairy-gold rained down in this glittering shower would change within her grasp to withered leaves.

"Tut, tut, my dear madam," the Baron said, with sovereign graciousness, well pleased alike with h mself and her—in truth, the sense of royal condescension on his part—"the thanks are due to me. It is my privilege to give your pearl a splendid setting."

The "pearl" thus apostrophised did her best to smile in grateful acceptance of the compliment, but the effort was hardly successful.

"Cristine must thank you," Mrs. Bruce murmured as she withdrew, thinking at the same time that she could have performed the duty much better than her daughter, who in this moment of her triumph had grown strangely listless, spiritless, and dull.

She looked up as the door closed, and saw Benjuda holding a diamond snake ring ready to slip upon her finger. Somehow the sight brought back that other ring that had been the seal of Nora Bruce's betrothal, the fiery serpent that had goaded that unhappy girl to madness and death, and worse than death. Did this hold such a sting for her, a justly retributive sting? She withdrew her hand, with a sharp impulsive cry, and a shudder that ran through her whole frame.

The Baron drew back with a very displeased look; he was slow to take offence, slow to believe that any one could mean to offend him; but her movement had been unmistakeable—he must needs resent it.

Before he could put his anger into words however, she caught his hands, and, looking him in the eyes, said, with a quick hysteric sob—

"You are too good to me—a real King Cophetua; and I, a true beggar-maid, have nothing to offer in return."

The ring slipped on easily after that, and the white hand on which it glittered was raised with gallant grace to the Baron's lips. This was the homage that he liked best; the role of King Cophetua so stupid, he never left his address."

"Well, I can get you that," Benjuda said, smiling.

"Without asking him directly? For we want to surprise them both."

"Certainly; I can get it at the theatre."

"Oh, if you will!" Cristine said, with a delighted look, from which the Baron drew the pleasant but erroneous conviction that she really cared for her brother, and was indeed more generally soft-hearted and affectionate than he had thought.

"By-the-way, Cristine," he said, as, after a sufficiently lengthy stay, he rose to go, "I should have told you that Lady Olivia Blake intends to call."

"Lady Olivia Blake!"

"Yes; I asked it as a personal favour, and, being an old friend of mine, she did not like to refuse, though of course, in the circumstances, the visit will be rather painful to her."

"Of course," said Cristine, constraining herself to speak as indifferently as he did, though she wondered, in an inner agony, whether Lady Olivia Blake had filled in the very meagre sketch she had given of her step-sister's tragic ending.

Benjuda tapped the pale cheek in a fondly patronising fashion.

"Do not look so scared, lily. She will not harrow your feelings with any allusions to the murder. She was too fond of that wretched scamp of a De Gretton, I think. At least, she seems never to have recovered from the shock of his death."

"I do not wonder," Cristine said, with a truthful shudder, and yet with a fear-sharpened quickness to take shelter behind his own words. "I cannot bear to think of that time.'

"And you shall not, lily," he cried, with a parting kiss; "henceforth you shall think only of me."

Cristine smiled till he was out of sight; then the smile faded in the old look of fear; to her conscience-stricken thoughts it seemed that all who knew or had guessed at her old treachery were rising up to bear witness against her now.

CHAPTER XXV.

"Could you tell me all that you remember of that night, Nora? It is for your own sake I ask it—no, for mine"—as she drew back into the shadow, hiding her face with both white hands—"I will not let you live this life in death any longer. All the world shall know, as I know, that you are innocent!"

Arthur Beaupre spoke with vehment passion; his handsome face was flushed and eager, his blue eyes were dark and dilated; he looked strangely unlike the listless world-weary invalid of a few days back.

The two were alone together in Mrs. Vance Singleton's pretty sitting-room, alone with their own memories for company; the evening shadows were falling softly around them, the stars were peeping here and there in the faint gray sky to which Nora's dark eyes turned with a wistful persistency, though her thoughts were centred on things personal.

"What would you have me to do?" she said, without turning her head, and speaking with a grave pathos that went to the young man's heart. "The world believed me guilty, and believes me dead. Would you have me give myself up to justice?"

"No, no!" Arthur grew white with horror at the picture her words called up. "But you are not guilty. My darling, you are a martyr, not a criminal!"

The fervour of his tone brought a faint rose-tint to the pale cheek and a grateful light to the dark eyes; but Nora said gently—

"You take my word for that, Arthur; I have no other evidence to offer—and the world——"

"Oh, the world!" Arthur rose and paced the room with rapid irregular steps, then paused, leaning both arms on the back of a tall chair, and looking down at silent Nora with all his loving aching heart in his blue eyes.

"Nora, the world was no crueller than I—than Vance—those who loved you most dearly. We thought you dead, and, reading in that death the confession of a crime, never paused to sift the evidence that may bear less hardly upon you than you think. Your disappearance gave perfect immunity to the real criminal—remember that."

Still Nora did not answer; but he saw that she was listening with earnest attention, and went on eagerly—

"I swear to prove your innocence, to find the real criminal! Nora, for our love's sake, do not refuse to help me! Think, my dearest—try to recall every incident of that night."

"I will"—the clear voice vibrated with a new earnest emotion, with something that sounded almost like the ring of hope, though the gray eyes darkened pathetically and the slight hands were nervously clasped—"I will try; but Arthur, you must give me time. I was mad, mad with fear and misery that night, and all my recollections are confused and dim."

"Take time, my darling."

The poor young fellow's own heart throbbed with suffocating quickness, his blood coursed madly through his veins, his brain grew dizzy with its thronging hopes and fears; yet, by a giant effort, he forced himself to speak with something like reassuring calm.

Everything now depended upon her clearness of memory, upon faculties that had been obscured so cruelly and so long. The length of time that had passed, the opportunities that had been let slip, the easy fashion in which enquiry into the crime had been allowed to degenerate into a search for the lost bride—all these things had rendered search for the real criminal almost hopeless, unless she, who alone knew the real story, could help him with some clue.

"Take time, Nora; little by little it will come back, and then——"

He could not finish the sentence, could only steady his trembling hands upon the tall chair-back and watch the young face, with its strange frame of silver hair, as though life and death hung—as indeed they did—upon the utterance of those pale perfect lips.

(TO BE CONTINUED).

A Simple Remedy.

There is no remedy of such general application, and none so easily attainable, as water: and yet nine persons in ten will pass by it in an emergency to seek for something of far less efficiency.

There are but few cases where water should not occupy the highest place as a

Oscar Wilde tells the few people who listen to his lectures on America that San Francisco was built by the Chinese.

Russia borrows money at six per cent. Greece at five per cent., while the United States pays but three per cent. per annum Enormous quantities of oranges are produced in Paraguay. They are sold at 50 cents a bushel, and fed to pigs and cattle, and are used for distillation.

Since the year 1860 sixteen baronetcies and thirty-four knighthoods have been conferred upon the physicians and surgeons of Great Britain and Ireland.

Investigations of the statistics of suicide show that hanging is the method most commonly chosen by self-murderers, drowning next and shooting and stabbing next.

The Great Pyramid contains 2,300,000 stones, weighing on an average two and a half tons each. The granite beams of the kings' chamber weigh between fifty and sixty tons.

The bread-fruit tree grows very slowly. The specimen at Kew is but a foot and a half high, although it is eighty years old. Some of those found in the tropics are forty feet high and thirty feet in diameter.

Aquatic birds outnumber the land birds, because their food never fails, not because they are more prolific. The fulmar-petrel lays but one egg, yet it is believed to be the most numerous bird in the world.

In the whole Russian Empire of nearly 100,000,000 persons there are only 775 journals and periodicals of all kinds. Eighty-two of these are Government gazettes and forty-four are organs of the official ecclesiastical authorities.

Lombard Street, London, was named for certain usurers who came to England in 1299 to lend money to convents, communities and private persons who were not able to pay their tenths, which were collected very carefully that year.

During the last seven years man has killed about 140,000 wild beasts in India, and the wild beasts have killed 28,000 men and 45,000 cattle. As the wild animals increase much faster than men the reference is unpleasantly obvious.

It has been found that cities are really much warmer than the open country near them, and that it is not altogether fashion nor the influence of imagination which sends persons into the country in the summer and calls them back to town in the Autumn.

Recent experiments in German schools have shown that the difficulty of reading black letters on a white ground compared to that of reading white on a black ground is as 421 to 496, and, therefore, the slate and the blackboard will probably fall into disuse in the empire.

The Necobar Islanders have such a passion for tall, white hats with a black band that traders who visit with them carry specimens of this headgear instead of the trinkets usually dear to the noble savage. The price of a tall hat is from fifty-fve to sixty-five cocoanuts.

Murder and Suicide in Italy.

Ulysses Salini, a carbineer, native of the Abruzzi, was stationed at Florenzuola, and Elvira Ferrari, his sweetheart, who belonged to a well-to-do family, lived in Fontana-Fredda. Four kilometers separated them, but there is no distance for hearts that comprehend each other, and the young carbineer every day, to the neglect of his military duties, ran those four kilometers with the rapidity of lightning. His superiors repeatedly reproved him for his irregularities, but in vain; love was stronger than duty, and they came finally to the decision to change his station. The unfortunate lover received orders to report himself at Placenza. The emotion with which he received such an order can not be expressed. He wished to see his Elvira for the last time, and very early, at 5 the next morning, betook himself to Fontana to give her the last adieu.

The two lovers were seen wandering in the fields in animated conversation, like persons who had important, last communications to make. An explosion was heard. Poor Elvira was no more; a ball had severed the carotid, killing her instantly; and the love, who had shot her, attempted to kill himself; but the aim being uncertain in the emotion of this terrible moment, he only shattered his jaw, and the revolver dropping from his hand he, instead of picking it up to renew the attempt, flew across the country to the barracks, where, entering into the guard-room, he caught up another revolver from the table, and pointing it under his chin, blew out his brains.

Premature Burials.

It is rather startling to be told by "Ignotus," of the Paris Figaro, that the chances which a person runs of being buried alive are hardly less than those incurred by the sailor of being drowned at sea. The writer of a paper recently read before the French Academy of medicine expresses the opinion that one in every five thousand persons is buried alive, while the official statistics show that the mortality among sailors from shipwreck average one in four thousand. The question has of late been much discussed by the medical body just mentioned, and it seems to be settled that none of the accepted indications of death, with the single exception of the unmistakable decomposition of the body, are to be regarded as perfectly conclusive. It is certain that the possibility of such a frightful death weighs on the mind of many of the French; as, according to a recent declaration of the president of the chamber of notaries, express instructions are given in one will out of every ten to have the testator's heart pierced by a qualified surgeon before the lid of the coffin is screwed down.

Bartholomew Binns.

Another execution has taken place with the disgraceful and disgusting bungling on the part of the executioner which now seems to be the rule. The wretched victim's heart went on beating, it is said, for some minutes after the "drop;" and as the evidence on that point is doubtful, it is certain that death was not instantaneous. In the interest of decency and hupass by it in an emergency to seek for something of far less efficiency.

There are but few cases where water should not occupy the highest place as a remedial agent.

A strip of flannel or napkin folded lengthwise, and dipped in hot water and wrung out, and then applied around the neck of a child that has croup, will usually bring relief in ten minutes.

A towel folded several times, and dipped in hot water and quickly wrung and applied over the seat of the pain in toothache or neuralgia, will generally afford prompt relief. This treatment in colic works almost like magic. I have seen cases that have resisted other treatment for hours yield to this in ten minutes. There is nothing that will so promptly cut short a congestion of the lungs, sore throat, or rheumatism, as hot water when applied promptly and thoroughly.

Pieces of cotton batting dipped in hot water, and kept applied to old sores or new cuts, bruises or sprains, is the treatment now generally adopted in hospitals, I have seen a sprained ankle cured in an hour by showering it with hot water, poured from a height of three feet.

Tepid water acts promptly as an emetic; and hot water taken freely half an hour before bed time is the best of cathartics in cases of constipation, while it has a most soothing effect on the stomach and bowels. This treatment continued for a few months, with proper attention to the diet, will cure any curable case of dyspepsia.

Headache almost always yields to the simultaneous application of hot water to the feet and back of the neck.

It is an excellent plan to record facts like these in a note book, which should be always at hand when wanted. In the anxiety caused by accidents or sudden illness in the family, one becomes confused and is not apt to remember quickly what should be done; hence there may be prolonged and unnecessary suffering before proper remedies are applied.—Hall's Journal of Health.

At Werden (Westphalia) an aged prisoner was at his urgent request granted permission to be taken to the railway station in order to see a locomotive and train for the first time.

While Samuel McDaniels was trudging along behind his plough on his farm at Island Shoals, Ga., last Friday, he turned up a jug which had evidently been buried a great many years. He pried the stopple out, and found some rare old brandy. An hour later Samuel lay on his back on the ploughed field, with the jug in one hand, his hat in the other, and a serene smile upon his face. Not a drop of brandy remained in the jug. His mother, observing that the horses had stood in one place for a long while, went out into the field and gazed with anger at her son. Then, in a rage, she seized a huge stone which lay hard by, and with it shattered the jug. It proved to be a double-decked jug. The upper half had held some of the brandy for which the lamented grandfather of Samuel had been famed, and the lower half was packed solid with rows of musty $5 gold pieces. It had been buried by the grandfather. He was killed suddenly by an accident, and no one knew of the buried treasure.

There is a Jewish penman in Vienna who writes 400 Hebrew letters on one grain of wheat. In order to furnish the Emperor with satisfactory evidence of his extraordinary skill, he has written the Jewish prayer for the imperial family on the narrow edge of an ordinary visiting card.

Although the existence of kerosene oil in several provinces of Japan is said to have been known for 1,200 years, the Japanese did not know how to refine it until about ten years ago. At present, however, refining establishments are springing up rapidly, and its manufacture is becoming an important industry.

The Government in France is not afraid of the clerk class, and is afraid of the workmen class; consequently the new income tax will be hardest on the former. The laborer at 8 francs or 10 francs a day will not be taxed, but the railroad or Government employee, on a salary amounting to half that sum per day, will have to pay 2½ per cent. out of it. A large proportion such persons already find the most painful difficulty in making both ends meet.

In 1881 Mr. Frank Berry, of Easley, S. C., picked and packed a bale of cotton at his gin and placed a note inside the bale, requesting the man who manufactured the cotton to inform him what he made of it, etc. Recently, Mr. Berry received a letter from France in which he was informed that his note had been found and that the cotton had been made into twist. The manufacturer requested Mr. Berry to write and inform him how much he received for the cotton here, and whether it was of the first or second picking.

The Berlin correspondent of the Belgian Echo du Parlement discredits the statement widely made of late that a reduction in German armaments is probable. "Were Germany to reduce her forces she would be depriving herself of that which gives her a sort of political supremacy on the Continent." He adds that when a subject of a partial disarmament is mentioned before Von Moltke he is in the habit of getting up and going away, not to waste time in useless talk. Russia's renewed good understanding with Germany may, however, enable the former to withdraw some troops from the German frontier, and any saving is a consideration for Russia.

An English Judge, having received an intimation that a man he had sentenced to death wished particularly to see him, went to his cell, when the man said: "I stole your watch years ago. You were looking into a print shop in the street." "Yes," said the Judge; "but I always wondered how the thing was done, because I particularly valued the seals which were hanging from the fob, and kept my hand on them." "You did, save for an instant, when I tickled you with a straw behind the ear." He went on to explain that the watch was such a peculiar one, the name being embossed on it, that they had been afrid to sell it, and said, "If you get me ink and paper I can give you a letter which will enable you to recover it." And the Judge did recover it.

tim's heart went on beating, it is said, for some minutes after the "drop;" and as the evidence on that point is doubtful, it is certain that death was not instantaneous. In the interest of decency and humanity it is greatly to be desired that medical men and mechanicians would give their minds to the perfecting of the apparatus and methods used to carry out the last painful operation of the law, so that the executioner might have something to guide him beside his own rule of thumb. Also it may be doubted whether the elaborate examination instituted by the home office has resulted in the selection of the best possible successor to the late Mr. Marwood. A person who vapors about public houses with the tackle of his horrible trade, and who is in a condition of questionable sobriety when he proceeds on a business so serious as that of taking a life, is hardly the right man in the place which Binns hold.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Water as a Soothing Syrup.

Sir Joseph Fayrer, president of the Medical Society, and the first authority in the world about snake poison, has come forward in a new capacity, with an infallible receipt for soothing fretful children to sleep. In nearly every Himalayan village the native baby is placed in a trough, into which there trickles a constant stream of water. This falling upon the vertex of the cranium induces sleep. Children lie in their troughs for hours while their mothers go about their work. We fear Sir Joseph's plan would be only too successful in this country. After a day or two's exposure in the water-trough the child would probably sleep the sleep that knows no waking. The system may work in India, but it can not be garanteed as safe for home application.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Mountains of difficulties sink into plains before Christ.

"It's a great comfort to be left alone," said an Irish lover, "especially when your sweetheart is wid ye."

T. R. Peck states that there are important differences in the composition of the hot springs of Iceland and of New Zealand. The hot mud wells of Iceland contain so much copper that several companies have been formed to work them commercially, while the New Zealand mud springs are so full of infusoria that in times of famine the natives sustain life on a diet consisting chiefly of mud.

The Paris police are endeavoring to suppress a strange traffic in dead bodies which they have discovered to exist on the River Seine in and near Paris. It appears that a reward of fifteen francs is given in the Department of the Seine for any bodies found in the river and delivered up to the authorities. In the neighboring departments, if only a few miles away—as for instance, in the Seine-et-Oise—no such reward is offered. The consequence is that boatmen finding bodies outside the stipulated boundary, instead of giving them up to the police of their own district, sell them to men employed higher up the river, who obtain the reward for them, realizing a profit by the transaction. This custom has become so prevalent that there is a recognized tariff of five francs for bodies purchased in this way.

MANORIAL MYTHS.

Some Ancient Customs Which Survive in London.

Allowing that the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds is neither more or less than a convenient subterfuge, at least it serves a useful object; and that is more than can be truly said for some immemorial make-believes, as, for example those two manorial myths to which the corporation of the city of London cling with the tenacity of a mussel to a low-water rock. There are the Chitern Hills, and the hundreds of Stoke, of Desborough, and of Bodenham, and anyone so inclined may go and look at them. But whese are the "Forge" in the county of Middlesex, and the "Moors" in Shropshire, which estates the city holds of the crown at a quit rent of six horse-shoes, sixty-one nails, and two knives? Regularly every year the corporation pay their quit rent with solemnly farcical formality. They pay it to the queen's remembrancer, in a room of the high court of justice, notwithstanding that everyone in the world, the menemonic official included, is profoundly ignorant of the whereabouts of the property. All the same, on rent day, the queen's remembrancer—assisted by his clerk, who gets a reward of

for the job—stands at a little table, upon which are spread a neat little billet of twigs that would do credit to a West-end toy shop—laid lengthwise upon a little chopping-board flanked with six horse-shoes—very old and large and flat—shoes of some ancient knightly charger, perhaps those of the beast which bore Sir William Walworth when, as Froissart has it, he "drew a kind of scimetar" and felled Wat Tyler to the ground—and sixty-one nails and two knives. It is the duty of the city solicitor, acting on behalf of his clients the corporation, to chop the twigs and count up the horse-shoes, nails, and knives, and of some other official persons to offer to render up the accounts of the estate. The chopping and counting are always duly performed; but, of course, the accounts are not presented, because, we believe, there are no estates to account for. Some ancient, long-since-retired common council man vaguely remembers having, heard when he was a boy, of an extremely old man, whose grandfather kept a shoeing forge at the bottom of Milford lane, in the Strand; that the forge had been in the family and that there was something wrong with the title. He supposes this may be the property for which the city does service to the crown, and he thinks it a pity, therefore, that all trace of the forge has passed away, and all knowledge of its site clean forgotten. Again, at some remote period, the city may have let or rather underlet, the "Moors" to someone; but no rent has been paid for that messuage for the past three hundred years. The Shropshire landlords are, and ever have been, and ever will be ready to go to law on the slightest provocation in support of theis titles, and the city does not claim of them a square inch of soil, any more than the crown claims of the city, beyond the quit rent of the two knives, which the old title-deed explains, may be one good and the other bad. Thus it follows that, even if the quit rent were not paid, all the

FOR MORE THAN A CENTURY,

THE CHILTERN HUNDREDS.

The Stewardship and the Purpose It Serves in England.

What is meant by the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds, lately conferred on Mr. Bradlaugh and Mr. Marriott? It is a nominal office, in the gift of the chancellor of the exchequer, enabling a member of the House of Commons, by a constitutional fiction, to resign his seat. Membership of the third estate of the realm, once obtained, is assumed to run an uninterrupted course from the date of the return of the general election next ensuing, and a member, not in any other manner disqualified, can only give up his trust in one way, and that is by accepting an employment of profit under the crown, in which case he ceases to be a member until the constituency from which he derived his representative position are pleased to re-elect him. It sometimes happens, as in the instances cited, that members are anxious to withdraw, though only temporarily, in order to obtain a fresh mandate from their constituents; or it may be that some elect of a county or borough desires to retire altogether from the parliamentary arena. The modus operandi is always the same. A formal application to the Minister for the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds of Stoke, Desborough, and Bodenham, in Buckinghamshire, or of the manors of Poynings, East Hundred, and Northstead, or the escheatorship of Munster, all assumed to be offices of emolument; and, if the Minister see no reason to the contrary,

THE APPLICATION IS FORTHWITH GRANTED.

As a matter of fact, these stewardships are not places of profit, but sinecures without salary, and the persons to whom they are given hold them by what may be called a tenure of grace. Bohn's "Cyclopædia of Political, Constitutional, Statistical, and Forensic Knowledge," says that as soon as the stewardship (of the Chiltern Hundreds) "is obtained, it is resigned, that it may serve the same purpose again. Certain specified government appointments, frequently held by members of Parliament—being conferred by heads of departments, and not directly by the crown—are exempt from the category of employments which demand resignation with a view to re-election; such are the under secretaries of state and the surveyor general of the ordnance. Since the year 1867 a member already in office, accepting another post, does not thereby vacate his seat. Some writers doubt the strict legality of the form, on the ground that the stewardship fails to embrace the full meaning of a "place of honor and profit under the crown," and strictly speaking that is so; but, like Mercutio's wound, "'twill serve." The practice dates back about 130 years, at which period the original object for which the post was created had long ceased to exist. Chiltern is a ridge or series of chalky hills extending across the country of Bucks, not far south of the centre, reaching from Tring in Hertfordshire to Henley in Oxford, a district anciently covered with dense beechen wood, the resort of

TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.

A Man Shoots his Bride's Two Brothers in Her Presence.

Jacob Shelley shot and killed two brothers named Morrill in Zonestown, Pa., recently. The shooting grew out of the marriage of Ida Morrill, a sister of the brothers, to Shelley. For nearly two years Ida, who is a handsome, well educated woman, 22 years old, the daughter of Levi C. Morrill, a well-know citizen, has been receiving the attentions of Shelley contrary to the wishes of her parents. She moved in the best society of the place. Shelley came to Zonestown about five years ago, and during that time has acquired a notorious reputation, figuring in all the rows in the town. He met Miss Morrill about a year ago and a warm attachment sprang up between them. As soon as the fact became a matter of gossip Miss Morrill's parents commanded her to cease encouraging Shelley's attentions.

Not long ago James Morrill met Shelley on the village street and asked him if he had said he could marry his sister whenever he wished to? Shelley laughed, and said he thought he could. Hot words and a rough and tumble fight ensued, in which young Morrill was badly beaten. This occurrence heightened the feeling against Shelley among the Morrils, and James threatened to shoot Shelley. A perpetual watch was kept on Miss Morrill's movements, and she never had a chance to meet her lover except in the dresence of a third party. Recently she was found to be missing, and, after waiting in vain for her appearance, her father set out for the village in search for her. He found that his daughter and Shelley had been married by a justice of the peace, and Ida had accompanied Shelley to his home, a short distance outside of town.

Returning home the distracted father informed his family of his daughter's act, and the two sons, James and Joseph, determined to go to Shelley's house and see Ida. The father and mother tried to dissuade them, but they persisted in their determination. They went to Shelley's house, and found Ida in company with Shelley and his mother. Without addressing their sister, both boys began to abuse Shelley violently, and finally James lost all control over his temper and struck Shelley a severe blow in the face with his clenched fist. Shelley grappled with him, and both fell locked in each other's arms. Joseph sprang to his brother's aid, and both began beating and kicking Shelley unmercifully.

Shelley finally managed to break away from their grasp, and, drawing a revolver, ordered the two to leave the house. They refused, and also drew revolvers. Shelley immediately fired, the ball striking James Morrill in the left side, perforating the left lung. Upon seeing his brother fall to the floor, Joseph Morrill fired, shattering Shelley's left arm. Shelley quickly returned the fire, this time striking Joseph in the head. He fell to the floor senseless.

The noise of the shot was heard by the neighbors, and soon a crowd came rushing in and found Shelley quarrelling with his wife over the prostrate bodies of her brothers. Shelley at once explained what he had done, and said he wished to surquit rent of the two knives, which the old title-deed explains, may be one good and the other bad. Thus it follows that, even if the quit rent were not paid, all the queen's men, including the royal remembrancer himself—whose memory does not extend to universally-forgotten items of typography—could not call the bailiffs in. It would be as easy to distrain on a sunset, or put up a rainbow to auction by order of the sheriff.

VANDERBILT'S BARBER-SHOP.

With Something About a Man Known as the Best Barber in New York.

Most of the socialists in New York are Germans. The socialists believe in the assassination of monarchs. Our American monarchs are millionaires. William H. Vanderbilt is despotic by two hundred millions. Still, he lets a German draw a keen blade over his throat every day. There is a quaint and jolly old German, with a huge red nose, a perfectly bald head, and an immense mustache waxed at the ends, who may be seen any morning of the year going down Fifth avenue with the march of a dissipated Prussian grenadier and the smile of a happy infant. He is gentleness itself. Everybody who knows him calls him Jakey, but he owns the full name of Jacob Aber. Every morning about 9 o'clock he stops at the magnificent residence of William H. Vanderbilt, greets the servant who opens the door blandly, and goes at once to Mr. Vanderbilt's barber-shop.

So much has been written about this house that it seems hardly as though anything new could be told, but many changes take place, and in the south wing, adjoining Mr. Vanderbilt's dressing-room, there has been fitted up a barber-shop. It is small, and in the middle of it is a barber's chair, made of dark mahogany and inlaid with mother-of-pearl. The base-board of the room, the cornices, and the door and window frames are of the same shade of mahogany, and mother-of-pearl decorations are identical with those on the chair. The chair is of the regulation barber-shop pattern. Old Jakey shaves the two-hundred millionaire, and then drifts down the avenue, nodding gracefully to stage-drivers, and giving the occasional policeman whom he meets the 5th avenue salute. He shaves several other wealthy men on his way down, and finally ends with Commodore Garrison, on Park avenue. Then he goes back to his humble home in the lower Bowery and smokes a strong German pipe and plays penuckle with his wife until 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Then he andrews up-town again and visits one or two old gentlemen who prefer to be shaved before dinner rather than in the morning. He returns again to the Bowery, goes to a favorite lager-beer saloon in Roosevelt street, and sits in one particular chair and at one particular table every night until 11 o'clock. Then he stalks off to bed. He is close to 60 years of age, and is said te be the best barber in New York. He gets his own prices for his work, and probably has older customers than any other barber in the world. He shaved Fernando Wood thirty years.

DARING AND DESPERATE ROBBERS, bold outlaws of the Robin Hood type, who led a more or less merry life "under the greenwood tree," at the expense of the peaceable farmers and villagers of the uplands. Inasmuch as it became necessary to clear the country of these banditti by bring them to the rough-and-ready justice of those far-off days, the crown appointed an officer call the steward of the Chiltern Hundreds, whose duty was to pursue and arrest the brigands, and provide them with a shrift and convenient halter. In the course of time Chiltern became as free from footpads as the precincts of the royal palaces, so that the active duties of the stewardship fell into desuetude, and the salary ceased to be paid. Yet the honorific office remained, as hell minus a kernel, and some time about 1750 a minister of state applied it to its present purpose.

Cheerful Facts for Smokers.

A gentleman describing himself as "one of the people fond of a good cigar," assures the New York Times that a prominent physician told him lately that from the practice of cigar-makers wetting the rapper with their saliva, and biting the end of the cigar into shape, a loathsome disease was spreading, and that he knew of several cases.

"Somewhat alarmed," he continues, "I managed to visit a number of factories, Two-thirds of the cigar-makers, I found, daub the whole end of the cigar with their saliva. Thinking that Cuban workmen might not do it, I visited places whore they were employed, and found that not only did they use their saliva to make the wrapper stick, bnt that most of them, before wrapping, bite the end of the cigar into shape with their teeth. As the physician informs me that many of the cigar-makers have sore mouths from disease, it is a very dangerous, as well as a beastly habit."

This is horrible, if true, and we fear it is true to some extent. From personal observation, we know that cigar-makers in Cuba do manipulate their work with a touch of saliva. Not many of them do it, we should judge, but some do, and these nasty workmen are probably the very fellows whose mouths are the most likely to communicate disease. Those cigars, moreover, which look the neatest at their smoking end, and are most admired by young smokers, probably owe their attractive symmetry to this disgusting manipulation. Yet it is a fact that the most inveterate smokers are found among men who must be aware of the prevalence of this filthy practice. Almost all of those who manufactured cigars, or who deal in cigars, also smoke cigars. We don't buite see how they can do it, but they do.—Buffalo Express.

Dr. Bjornstrom, superintendant of a lunatic asylum at Stockholm, introduced a printing press and some type into the establishment for the benefit of an insane compositor. The other patients became intererested in printing, and the Doctor soon gave them a more extensive apparatus. The result is the recent publication of the Doctor's book on "Diseases of the Mind," which was set up, printed and bound by the patients, and is pronounced a very good piece of work in every respect. It contains 202 pages.

in and found Shelley quarrelling with his wife over the prostrate bodies of her brothers. Shelley at once explained what he had done, and said he wished to surrender, as he did the shooting in self-defence. He was held to await the result of the injurles received by the Morrills.

His bride has become partially insane over the terrible occurrence. What little information could be gleaned from her corroborates Shelley's story—that he did the shooting in self-defence.

MURDER IN AN INSANE ASYLUM.

A Patient in the Toronto Asylum Kills Her Companion.

Valoria McKinley, aged about 32, of Toronto, and Rachael Stephens, aged over 60, of Guelph, patients at the protincial asylum in Toronto, occupied vhe same room one night recently. They were classed as what is known as melancholic patients, the principal danger in this class to be guarded against being suicide. When the female attendant opened their room early in the morning she discovered old Mrs. Stephens dead with her brains battered out. The dead woman's companion explained the situation with the remark that "She killed Mrs. Stephens because the latter would not kill her." McKinley was greatly excited, and suffered intensely from nervousness. Coroner Duncan opened an inquest and elicited the facts of the affaid. Drs. Clarke and Buchan and half a dozen other attaches of the asylum were examined, and testified as to the manner of treating patients.

The jury returned a verdict to the effect that Rachael Stephens came to her death by being beaten on the head with a wooden bucket in the hands of Valoria McKinley, but as the latter was of unsound mind they could not attach any malice aforethought to the act.

The woman McKinley was unable to be examined at the inquest. She was prostrated all day, and the jury visited her apartment before returning their verdict. She died the next morning from the shock and nervous prostration.

President Lincoln once listened patiently while a friend read a long manuscript to him, and who then asked, "What do you think of it? How will it take?" The President reflected a little while, and then answered, "Well, for people who like that kind of thing, I think that is just about the kind of thing they'd like."

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA.

The following is a brief synopsis of the statements presented at the annual meeting of this Company lately held in Montreal. From even this brief summary the sound and prosperous condition of the business will at once be seen.

The life applications received during the year were 1 411 for $2 328 990, while the accident were 1 551 for $2,919,600, making in all 2 962 for $5 248,590 The assurances in force are :—Life, 4 007 for $6,779,565, and Accident, 1,875 for $3 367,050, in all, 5,882 for $10,147,615. The applications for the year, both life and accident, and the assurances in force, both life and accident, were larger than ever before in the history of the Company. The fact that nearly 3,000 persons applied for new assurance is the best possible evidence of the high position the "Sun" occupies in public confidence.

The progress made in the life department during the last ten years is well shown in the following statement :—

than in any previous year. It was pointed out that if the same rate of progress is kept up for the next ten years as in the past the income will then be nearly one and a half millions and the assets four millions.

The interest on mortgages due before the 31st December, and still unpaid, has been reduced to about $300 or about one one-tenth of one per cent, on the current mortgages. Even this small amount is expected to be shortly paid. This speaks volumes for the sound nature of the investments.

The report is one which cannot fail to be ex remely gratifying to all friends of the company, and we commend it to their attention.

As we have already given an account of the proceedings at the annual meeting it is unnecessary for us to refer to these again. It will be remembered that they were very harmonious and satisfactory.—Toronto Globe

Dr. M. Souvielle's Spirometer Given Free.

Encouraged by the fact that during the pas five years, thousands of patients who have used my Spirometer have been cured of Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Catarrhal-Deafness, Consumption or Weak Lungs, and finding that many who could be cured are financially unable to procure the instrument, I will give the Spirometer Free to any one suffering from any of the above ailments who will call at 173 Church Street Toronto, and consult the Surgeons of the International Throat and Lung Institute, the medicine above to be paid for. If unable to call, write for particulars and treatment, which can be sent by express to any address. Dr. M. SOUVIELLE, Ex-aide Surgeon, French Army,

"There was drought in the land, and the most pious men wept and prayed for rain, but none came. An insignificant looking person at length prayed to Him that caused the wind to blow and the rain to fall, and instantly the Heavens covered themselves and the rain fell. 'Who art thou,' they cried, 'that thy prayers alone have prevailed?" And he answered, 'I am a teacher of little children.'" —Plants. A nice selection of vegetable and house plants just arrived at Perry & Co.'s, cheap for cash. Call and see them.

—Work has been commenced on the Leonard block, corner Dundas and John-sts. It will be three stories and of fine design.

—The Napanee Lodge I.O.G.T. has leased a lodge room in the new Cartwright block, and purpose fitting it up in first-class style.

—Chief Allen informs us that he is only waiting for the mud on Dundas street to thicken to give the street a thorough cleaning.

—Remember R. P. Lahey is giving a stem-winding watch and gold-plated chain with every suit of clothes from $8.00 up.

—Mr. Thos. O'Hare will give a juggling and slack wire performance in the Town Hall this (Friday) evening. After the entertainment a "hop" will be given in the same hall.

—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, general dealer, who assigned in trust to Mr. A. T. Harshaw last week, was held on Wednesday but no compromise was effected. Tenders will be asked for the stock.

—Madden's gold paper from 40c. per roll up cannot be surpassed.

—Rapid progress is now being made on the N., T. & Q. Railway. Tracklaying has been completed within three-quarters of a mile of Enterprise, while ballasting is also progressing, a ballast train having been put on last Monday.

—Messrs. Potter & Williams purchased for Mr. N. H. Hawkins of Rome, N.Y., on Wednesday 25 head of cattle and on Thursday 16 horses, which were driven to Kingston and shipped on per boat to their destination.

—The ladies of Bath give a leap year calico ball in the town hall in that village, this Friday evening. The committee is composed of Mesdames McKenty, Rowse and Ferren, and Misses Howard, Dennee, McPherson, L. Armstrong, M. Davy and Armstrong. A number from Napanee will attend.

—The Best judges say that Madden has by far the finest and cheapest wall paper in Napanee.

—Messrs. Abner Dewitta and Edwin Brooks of Picton, cornet players, are in town this week and played with the Napanee band Wednesday evening. They are both good musicians and it is likely they will become permanent residents of Napanee. The band is in better form now than it has ever been before.

—R. P. Lahey's. See the new Fedora Hat just arrived, and big stock of all the latest English and American Hats. Prices down, down.

—R. G. Wright is the sole agent in Napanee for the Ontario Steel Barb Fence Company's Wire, the best barb wire in the mar

A Leading Theatrical Event.

The leading attraction next week at the Opera House will be the first appearance here on Wednesday evening next of the brilliant little comedienne, Lizzie Evans, in C. E. Callahan's burlesque comedy drama, "Fogg's Ferry." The piece will be presented here with the same elegant scenery and effects used in the original production at the Park Theatre, New York, and in Chicago, Cincinnati, and all the leading cities. The company is playing this week in Toronto to large houses and have won golden opinions from the press and public. Reserved seats at J. J. Perry's drug store.

Where is the Fishery Inspector?

People are anxiously enquiring as to the whereabouts of the fishery inspector. Every day large quantities of pickerel are offered for sale in the streets contrary to law and nobody seems to think it his duty to put a stop to the wholesale destruction of the fish and spawn. We understand that the fish are caught in the river by parties with large nets near the falls. If this sort of thing continues there will in a couple of years be no pickerel in these waters. Will the fishery inspector, whoever he is, have the law properly enforced.

The Saved Army.

The Peterborough Examiner says the Saved Army campaign is still being pushed vigorously in that town where it has met with great success. Scarcely a night passes, when their meetings are held, that some half dozen or half score of sinners does not capitulate. On Thursday night of last week Mrs. Willis appeared on the parade for the last time. She appeared on furlough, being detailed to take a short rest at her home, Kingston. This lively little lady has had a prominent part in contributing to the success of the Army here. She has been very popular and leaves many warm friends behind her. Their converts are now claimed to number 325.

Scott Act Movement.

A largely attended and representative meeting of temperance workers was held in the Town Hall Saturday afternoon to discuss the advisability of submitting the Scott Act in this county. Mr. Spence, editor of the Citizen, Toronto, was present, and advocated the submission of the measure. He gave many valuable hints as to the manner of conducting the campaign. Prominent temperance advocates from all parts of the county spoke and the meeting seemed strongly of the opinion that the Act would be carried, and favored submission. A provisional committee was formed with Rev. M. L. Pearson as chairman, and Dr. Meacham, of Odessa, as secretary, to make preliminary arrangements for obtaining the submission of the Act to the people.

Napanee Lacrosse Club.

At a meeting of the Napanee Lacrosse Club held at the Huffman House on Tuesday evening the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—D. W. Allison, M.P., Hon. President; J. C. Drewry, President; S. McCutcheon, 1st Vice President; R. P. Lahey, 2nd Vice President; J. F. McAlister, Treasurer; W. G. L. Coulter, Secretary; J. T. Hosey, Assistant Secretary; J. H. Gallagher, Captain; D. Low, Assistant Captain; Committee of Management, President, Secretary, Messrs. W. J. Doller, A. Spellman, T. Hosey, R. McNeill and W. Normoile. The club is now prepared to receive challenges of surrounding cities, towns and villages. The next meeting will be held at the Huffman House on Friday evening, 25th inst., at 7.30 o'clock.

H. H. Ragan's Illuminated Tours.

able to be around again and can attend to business.

—Mr. A. A. Bartlett, jeweller, received through the mails in a small box the other day a live California toad, which is now on exhibition in his store window.

—R. P. Lahey's suits with the celebrated watches and chains are going off by the dozen.

—R. G. Wright, Esq., has been appointed member of the Board of License Commissioners in the place of Hon. John Stevenson, deceased.

—Mr. Nelson Sharp, of Violet, has Italian and Black Bees for sale. 23-3.

—Messrs. Perry & Galt shut down their lime works a few days last week for repairs. The works have since been re-opened and are now in a better condition than ever for turning out lime of the very best quality. Their lime being burned with wood they claim for it excellence over coal burned lime.

—We Have now in stock the finest assortment of hosiery ever imported into town. See them before you buy. C. F. Henderson.

—Miss Allen, dress maker, requests us to say that she is not connected with Hinch Bros., as stated erroneously in our opening notes last week, but is in business for herself in the rooms over Bowen's store, next door to the Dominion Hotel.

—The Best and cheapest painted wire cloths for window and door screens at R. G. Wright's.

—After two months' illness Mrs. Daniel I. Woodward, Centre-st., died on Friday afternoon last. The funeral on Sunday was attended by the Oddfellows of the town, of which order Mr. Woodward is an old member. The services were conducted by the Rev. M. L. Pearson and the remains were interred in the Napanee cemetery.

—Our Parasols are extra good value this season. An inspection will satisfy every one. C. F. Henderson.

—We dropped into the People's Boot and Shoe store last Saturday and were amazed at the number of customers buying boots. Why, he is doing an immense trade and his stock is the finest we have ever seen in Napanee. Ladies, you certainly should see his elegant boots and shoes before you buy. He beats the city stores for fine goods.

—Grind loads of wheat and feed same day at Close's Mills.

—The bachelors of Kingston gave a charming ball in the City Hall Wednesday evening. A number of ladies and gentlemen of Napanee were honored with invitations, but Mr. F. F. Miller was the only representative present. Fred. is, however, a host in himself. He says that the Kingston bachelors more than excelled themselves on the occasion.

—Go to R. G. Wright's and get a soapstone griddle and have good, wholesome griddle cakes without grease or smoke.

—Farmers and others in quest of reliable seed potatoes and oats will do well to read the advertisement of the Bay View Farm in another column. This Farm imported a lot of new potatoes last year to enable them to benefit by not only change of seed but also by new, improved and more profitable varieties. There is nothing connected with farming or gardening so profitable as judicious changing of seeds.

—R. P. Lahey's stock is complete in all lines of men's furnishing goods. Don't forget to call and see the watches and chains.

—The improvements in the Dominion Bank, commenced about a month ago, are now about completed. The ceiling and walls have been handsomely frescoed by Mr. Frank Hamilton, while the woodwork has, under Mr. Carscallen's brush, been greatly improved in appearance. When the work is completed, which will be in the course of a few days, the office will be one of the neatest in the district, and creditable to the good taste of the obliging and gentlemanly manager, Mr. R. A. Helliwell, under whose direction the improvements have been made.

ing and evening. Meetings every evening next week at 7.30 o'clock.

—R. G. Wright is the sole agent in Napanee for the Ontario Steel Barb Fence Company's Wire, the best barb wire in the market. Thirty tons of this wire have been bought by the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company for use on their railway. Call and see it and get one of our Barb Wire Almanacs which contains valuable information for every farmer.

—Perry & Co.'s is the cheapest place in town for all kinds of drugs, patent medicines, dye stuffs, groceries, etc. Baking soda and Epsom salts only 5c. per lb., other goods in proportion.

—Mr. W. D. Madden is showing this season a remarkably fine stock of wall papers. The fine gold papers are perfect works of art and surpass the productions of former years. The stock embraces every class of paper from the finest to the common grades, and from the most expensive to the cheapest. Householders can satisfy themselves as to price and quality. Call and see the stock before making your purchases.

—The Latest Puzzle. How can W. D. Madden sell wall paper from 15 to 20 per cent below all competitors.

—The Dowling property was sold at Centreville on Wednesday by Mr. S. S. Lazier, Master in Chancery. Fifty acres off lot 5, 6th con. Camden, were sold to Mr. James Byrnes for $1,400. The south half of lot 25, 4th con. Camden, 100 acres, was purchased by Mr. Michael Dowling for $1,500. Parcel No. 3, consisting of the centre part of lot 25, 5th con. Camden, about 50 acres, was sold to Mr. Chas. Whelan for $1,700.

—The Best Barbed Wire is to be had at H. W. Perry's. The Napanee and Tamworth Railway bought this wire because they believed it to be the best, and if you don't believe they are using it call up to the station and see the brand on the bundles, "Canada Wire Co., R. Ives, President." Rossic Iron Ore Paint for outside buildings the best thing out, also the cheapest.

—A fine folder has been issued this week from THE EXPRESS job department for the Herring Agricultural Works. It gives interesting information in regard to the numerous excellent machines turned out at this manufactory. Farmers should get one and act upon the advice contained therein. The long list of testimonials of prominent local farmers is convincing evidence of the excellence of the machines.

—Perry & Co. are sole agents for the genuine Rock Crystal Specks. Best in use, so every one says that has them. Every pair guaranteed to fit or money refunded. Just half the price of other specks. Try them.

—A new house and barn is being erected by Coun. Stevens on his propetty, south of the academy. The dwelling house will be two stories high and will be of brick. The barn will be 32x40 and the stone work is being done by Messrs. Wm. Gray, of Odessa, and Matthew Scott, of Napanee. The stone walls of the barn will be 9 feet high. The barn is to be raised on Saturday, 26th inst. Mr. Stevens invites his friends to give him a hand in its erection.

—Give Perry & Co. a call for your timothy, clover, flax seed, vetches, oil cake, paints, oils, glass, putty, etc., as they sell cheap for cash and make it an object for any one to patronize them. Try them once and be convinced, as they are doing a large business and selling their goods for cash.

—Mr. J. S. Hulett has just completed fine group photograph of the fire brigade, in water colors. An excellent view of the steamer is in the middle and is incircled by cabinet sized photographs of the officers and men. The whole is incased in an elaborate gilt and ebony frame. The work is highly creditable to Mr. Hulett's artistic skill. The picture is to be placed in the Firemen's hall, but will be on exhibition in Mr. Hulett's gallery for a few days. Mr. Hulett has also on exhibition a fine life-sized photograph in water colors of John R. Scott, Esq. This branch of Mr. Hulett's business is rapidly increasing in merit and popularity.

towns and villages. The next meeting will be held at the Huffman House on Friday evening, 25th inst., at 7.30 o'clock.

H. H. Ragan's Illuminated Tours.

It was a small but thoroughly appreciative audience that greeted Mr. H. H. Ragan at the Opera House on Wednesday evening, and to say that they went away delighted but fairly describes their feelings. The subject was "London," and we did not know which most to admire, the large, clear and life-like views or the fine descriptive powers of the lecturer. Both combined to make a highly interesting and instructive entertainment. We regret that our townspeople did not manifest their appreciation of a high-class entertainment by a larger turn out on the opening night, but they partially redeemed themselves last night, when a much larger audience witnessed the tour through Scotland. We hope Mr. Ragan will pay Napanee another visit at an early day and give us his continental tour.

Easter Services.

The Easter services in St. Mary Magdalene's Church on Sunday last were of a most interesting character. There were choral services both morning and evening accompanied by sermons appropriate to the day by the Venerable Archdeacon. The church was beautifully decorated with plants and cut flowers by a committee of ladies under the direction of Mrs. Wilkison. Some of the cut plants were purchased in Belleville and Kingston, but the choicest of the collection were contributions from the conservatory of E. W. Rathbun, Esq., Deseronto, who has for several years made similar kind and liberal donations. An elegant cross of white lilies adorned the communion table while the pulpit was encircled by ivy with bright flowers peeping through the rich green foliage. The chancel rail was also suitably decorated while the batpistry was transformed into a grotto of the most beautiful flowers. The general effect of the decorations was very pretty and reflected the highest credit on the good taste of the ladies who did the work. It is a most appropriate way of ushering in the season of joy which follows that of sorrow and penitence, and in other years even more effective displays of the beautiful works of the Almighty may be expected in this church.

A Fine Stud of Stallions.

Messrs. Potter & Williams, the enterprising livery men and stock importers of Napanee, have now in their stables as fine a stud of stallions as is to be found in this section of the province. They are all well known to farmers and stock fanciers, so that it will not be necessary for us to go into the merits of each in detail. For the information of our readers we give their routes for this season which will be as follows:—

"Prince Royal," Clyde and Suffolk Punch, a fine draft horse will stand at his own stable only.

"Glenelg," coach and general purpose horse, will travel through Ernesttown, Camden, and a portion of Portland, remaining at his own stables on Saturdays.

"War Cry," the old favorite thoroughbred race horse, will travel between Napanee and Kingston, also remaining at his own stable on Saturdays.

Horse Notes.

—Mr. M. O'Dea of Enterprise will this season travel his fine young Glenelg stallion, "Forest Ranger," in Fredericksburgh, Adolphustown and Ernesttown, with a stand in Napanee. See posters for pedigree, &c.

Mr. John Ward has this year changed the route for "Rattler." He will travel through Camden, with stands at Clark's Mills, Centreville, Enterprise and other points, making his headquarters, as heretofore, at the Tichbourne House, Napanee.

A Cure for Cuts, Sores, Etc.

The finest healing compound under the sun is McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. There is no sore but will succumb to its wonderful healing properties. It is an invaluable dressing for scalds, fes'ers, etc. Price twenty-five cents at T. A. Huffman's and A. W. Grange's drug stores.

Don't be Giddy.

Many people are troubled with giddiness or dizziness, which is generally a sign of disordered digestion or unequal circulation. Burdock Blood Bitters restores the digestive powers, promotes a healthy circulation of the vital fluids, allays nervous irritation, thus curing headache and giddiness.

A Handy Surgeon.

As a dressing for all manner of flesh wounds there is nothing better than Hagyard's Yellow Oil. It cleanses, allays pain, subdues inflammation and heals without a scar or stiffness of the parts injured. It is equally valuable as a pain remedy for internal use.

Giving Away Dozens of Watches Daily

There is no humbug in our offer. Every watch is warranted for one year and every buyer of a ready-made suit gets one. Do not be induced to accept an inferior article which is being offered. Don't take our word for it but ask any jeweller the difference between a genuine Swiss Watch and the American imitation known as the Waterbury. We venture to say that the latter are not warranted for one day and you will have to hire a boy to keep it going even that length of time. In this case we lead where our competitors dare not follow. The article we offer the public is no fraud.

SEED

POTATOES AND OATS FOR 1884.

The Bay View Farm, Deseronto,

offer an excellent stock of Seed Potatoes at very much below the catalogue rates of reliable seedsmen. The varieties were imported last season not only to procure change of seed but also to procure desirable new sorts. We offer Jumbo White Elephant, White Star Early Beauty of Hebron, St. Patrick Brownell's Best, Burbank's Seedling Early Ohio, and an extra quality of Early Rose. All varieties are warranted true to name and thoroughly matured. They are all free from disease and other defects. We also offer White Russian Oats of fine quality. This is without doubt the best White Seed Oat grown, being an immense cropper and large bright grain. Our seed will weigh from 40 lbs. to 43 lbs. to the struck bushel, and this weight is an average of the oats grown on all sorts of soil. Call on or address,

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in his admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

COUNTY NEWS.

Sillsville.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Farmers are hoping the present fine weather will continue. Seeding commenced on Tuesday.

—Our Sunday school will be reorganized on Sunday next after the evening service.

—The by-laws of the Hay Bay Shooting Co. are pretty generally observed, and ducks are accordingly more plentiful than they were a few years ago. An example should be made of those who persist in violating the Company's rules.

—The "Sentinels" met for practice the first time this season on Saturday evening last. At a previous meeting the captain of last year, Mr. E. Wagar, was re-elected and Mr. S. J. Mellow was appointed Sec-Treas.

—Some of our young ladies, actuated by that spirit of contrariness peculiar to the sex, are organizing a series of croquet parties on the nights appointed by the Sentinels for practice, with the avowed object of dooming the base ball club to oblivion. Think twice, girls, before sweeping away so useful an institution.

—Sillsville at present stands in need of an enterprising man with some capital to start a good general store. There is an excellent opening and it is to be hoped that before long this want will be supplied.

Tamworth.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Wild geese in large quantities are winging their way northward, and the voices of the feebee, grassbird and robin are heard in the land.

—Mr. N. Lloyd has purchased J. M. Smith's photo plant, built a new gallery on Main-st., and is now prepared to do all kinds of work in his line. He says that he can dish 'em up nice.

—Mr. Wm. Mace, of Sydenham, who has lately purchased the Tamworth Mills, has moved with his family to Tamworth. Glad you've come, William.

—The temperance people of this vicinity are organizing for the purpose of assisting to their utmost in the Scott Act movement. May victory perch upon their banner.

—Mr. J. M. Smith, agent for the Royal Ins. Co., has been appointed agent for the Glasgow & London Ins. Co.

ILL.—Mr. D. E. Rose is suffering from a very severe attack of pleurisy.....Our old and respected townsman, P. J. Forshee, Esq., is in a very feeble state of health.

A CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.—Mr. R. Perry broke his leg on the 12th inst.....Mrs. Wm. Murphy also fell and broke her leg last week... Mr. Chas. Jones is just recovering from the effects of a broken leg, and is able to go to work again.

A SAD AFFLICTION.—The grim monster entered the residence of the beloved pastor of the M. E. Church, Rev. J. Faul, on Monday, 21st inst., and claimed as its prey Laura, his betoved daughter, aged 4 years, and on the following Wednesday his infant daughter aged 3 months passed away. Another member of the family, a son about 7 years old, is lying at death's door. The rev. gentleman and his estimable wife have the prayers and sympathy of the community at large. The funeral of Laura took place Wednesday, Rev. M. J. Bates conducting the services. The infant was buried Thursday.

—Mrs. Jos. Lockridge, aged 86 years, was buried in the English church cemetery, and Mrs. J. Gonu in the Methodist cemetery on the 23rd inst., making three funerals in one day—a very rare occurrence in Tamworth.

—I hope to be able to report something more cheering in my next. ANON.

[We trust that we will in future hear more regularly from this esteemed correspondent. Our readers highly appreciate his contributions. —Ed. THE EXPRESS.]

—Farmers busy ploughing.

—The snow is all gone, but the cold continues. Keen frost Monday night.

—Mr. John Emberly sowed a field of spring wheat last week.

—Miss Minnie Scott is visiting Mr. Thomas Scott, Newburgh.

—Miss Cambridge is on a visit at Mr. Patterson's, Moscow.

—On Sunday Mr. A. VanLuven had a pet dog killed by being run over by a hand car on the railway, while some young men were sporting with it. There will be some serious mischief done if the road authorities do not stop this Sabbath desecration.

—Mr. Alpheus VanLuven had twenty-two choice apple trees destroyed during the winter by mice gnawing away the bark.

—Mr. E. W. Benjamin has purchased the residence of Mr. W. Gordon for his son Felix, who will now become a resident of the village.

—Messrs. Connolly & Son have purchased the Ruttan property. They have caused the unsightly buildings to be removed, which has greatly improved the appearance of the street.

—Mr. Henry Ruttan and family and Mr. Jos. Lindsay and wife have removed to Desert Lake, where they will engage in fishing in company with Mr. A. Denison. They expect soon to be able to supply fish to the people here.

Odessa.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—We have had very bad roads here for some time, but they are beginning to dry up again.

—Friday evening, April 11th, we had a temperance meeting in the C. M. Church, which Mr. Spence was expected to attend, but as he did not get here, Rev. J. J. Leach, Dr. Meacham and Mr. S. D. Clark spoke in support of the Scott Act. Tuesday evening, 22nd inst., we will have another temperance meeting, which the public are invited to attend.

—The I. O. G. T. Lodge is prospering slowly. We regret to say we have not many young ladies in our Lodge. Our W. I. G., Miss Minnie Jones, has not been with us very much—she has only attended once. We are sorry she does not attend the Lodge oftener.

—Friday evening we had one of the best concerts of the season. The programme consisted of thirty-three pieces, but only sixteen were given, with the lecture from Mr. Burrows. The programme was as follows:—Chorus by the Glee Club; chorus by Gertie Hogle, Lillie Jones, Edith Wycott, Rosie Booth and Minnie Meacham, accompanied by Miss Jones; solo, Delia Wycott; reading, Mr. P. A. Mabee; duet, Edith Wycott and Harry Benjamin; recitation, Flo. Walker; chorus by the Glee Club, accompanied by Mrs. Leach; solo, Addie Hicks; reading, Maud Hillier; recitation, George Lucas; reading, Rossie Booth; solo, Mr. Frink; chorus by the Glee Club; recitation, George Lucas; duet, Miss Jones and Miss Benjamin, which was splendidly sung; address by Mr. Burrows, which was well received. The programme was so long that it was impossible to get through in an evening. The committee consisted of Misses Minnie Jones, Annie Day and Frank Hicks. These young ladies always do their part well.

—The C. M. Church ought to be proud of their choir, it has improved so much. The members are Misses Smith, Jones, Benjamin, Schermahorn and Watts, and Messrs. C. Timmerman, Henry Smith, J. Timmerman, A. Timmerman and George Watts. Mr. J. Timmerman plays the cornet in the choir, which makes a great improvement in the music.

—On Sunday evening last Rev. Mr. Leach preached a sermon to the young men. The church was well filled.

PERSONAL.—Miss J. Jones is now visiting at Mr. Tom Caton's and friends in the country..... Miss Lena Watts is visiting friends in Odessa.

TOWN COUNCIL.

The regular meeting of the Town Council was

Round About Us.

—The electric light is to be introduced into Belleville.

—Kingston foot-ballers will play against the Royal Military College cadets on Saturday.

—Mr. Richard Tandy, a Kingstonian, has distinguished himself as a vocalist in Cleveland.

—There has been a K. & P. RR. quoit club formed. They are ready to play any club in Canada.

—The steamer Hero commenced her regular trips between Belleville and Kingston Monday last.

—Mr. Twigg of Picton was sworn into office on Friday last as Deputy Registrar in Chancery before Judge Jellett, who will be the local Master hereafter.

—Messrs. Hawkins and Drummond shipped at Kingston on Friday last per steamer Pierrepont 76 head of cattle and 35 horses for different parts of New York State.

—Mr. A. Hoppins, for Rathbun & Co., has purchased all of Thompson and Avery's lumber on the K. & P. RR. The purchase comprises 500,000 feet of hemlock.

—Several stores and hotels in Frankford have been burglarized. The spoil has been chiefly of liquors, hardware, about $50 in cash and a gold watch.

—In Amherst [illegible] Colebrook on Friday one Boyce stabbed [illegible]an named Radford with a knife. The [illegible] is reported to be in a dangerous state. But —A boss[illegible] a day visited the police cells in Kingston one d[illegible] last week. He wanted a man to carry the [illegible], and made offers to eight stalwart and robust tramps. No one knew how to "carry the hod." They knew well enough but were too lazy to earn a living.

—Some person attempted to fire the house occupied by Mr. J. H. McFarlane, on the corner of Union-st. and Alwington Avenue, Kingston. It was discovered and extinguished before much damage was done.

—Mr. George C. Curry, Police Magistrate of Picton, was struck by a fender which broke loose from the steamer Hero, lying at the dock there, on Monday. He was picked up insensible, but his injuries were found to be slight.

—The barn of Mr. Jacob Sills, 2nd concession of Thurlow, was destroyed by fire on Tuesday morning last. A number of his cattle were burned. The contents were valued at $700; insured in the L. L. & Globe for what they were worth. The barn was worth $2,500; insured in the above company for $1,500.

—A Garden Islander wooed a fair damsel, but her father was opposed to her marriage. Not to be vanquished, however, the couple took a trip to Cape Vincent on Monday, where they were made one. On Tuesday the groom was in Kingston, serene and happy. He is not particularly anxious to see the old gentleman for a while.

—At the assizes in Belleville the case of Mrs. Hannah Cochrane against Messrs. Gilmour & Co., of Trenton, was settled. In the case of Mary Gulliver against Wm. A. Gordon for assault, damages were assessed at $25. Michael O'Brien, arraigned on the charge of larceny and obtaining money under false pretences, pleaded guilty to both charges and offered as an excuse, "I was drunk, and I had a felon on my finger."

—The Saved Army in Picton is meeting with much annoyance from rowdies.

—At the Assizes in Belleville on Wednesday the only case tried was one on a mortgage, in which Patrick Clark of that city was defendant. He cannot write, and it was alleged he had executed the mortgage by touching a pen over his mark. The solicitor who assisted him, however, could not be produced as a witness. The defendant after a searching examination finally swore that he had touched the pen. His solicitor then threw up the defence and judgment was entered for the plaintiff. Mr. Burdett for plaintiff.

—Three days satisfied Mr. P. S. Carscallen, of Tamworth, as dominie in section 6 public school, Anglesea.

—After about two years absence in the North-West Mr. James Irvine has returned and is about to resume farming north of this place on the Snow Road. His accounts of Manitoba, Dakota and the North-West are in general favorable. The resources of Manitoba and the North-West are many and valuable, generally a fine and fruitful country, with unbounded natural wealth.

—The wife of Mr. Wm. Thompson presented him with an olive branch one day last week.

—Mr. Amos Spencer has opened an excellent store in the eastern division and is selling goods at reduced rates. He has a splendid assortment of staple and fancy goods to select from.

—One day last week Mr. D. A. Spencer obtained a beautiful gray roadster from Mr. John Cornwall. Value, $150.

—There is a great competition between the several lumbering agents engaging hands for the "drive." Wages are looking up.

—After three or four sittings the municipal council of Barrie disposed of and amicably arranged the disputed road allowance of "Joe" Morgan, he being satisfied with $5.

—The former indulgences of some three or four are no more. They have nobly and perseveringly resolved to overcome the god Bacchus and become without any other influence than their own consciences total abstainers. All honour to men of that stamp! They are what may be called the good and true.

—There is a remarkable mathamatician whose powers of analysis of common and intricate commercial problems astonish the natives living adjacent to this place.

—The last of the winter lumber camps are about broke up. Mr. Wellington Cummings after a fair winter's work on Upper Loon Lake, broke up the encampment on Thursday, 17th inst.

—The wife of Mr. C. McGregor introduced a stranger to the family circle on the 17th inst.

—Hughy and John good-naturedly made a wager as to their staying powers when imbibing "bumpers," both being pretty constant in their devotion to Bacchus. Physical and muscular strength, as well as a more experienced training, enabled John to win the wager, though he was severely punished in turn by his vanquished competitor, who was able to maintain his equilibrium vigorously. After a contest of some hours, during which time it was difficult to assert positively on which side victory perched, Hughy succumbed and was immediately in the arms of Morpheus, followed shortly after by the gallant, Quixotic John. Though it was high noon at the time, they had not aroused when the evening shades came on.

TOWN COUNCIL.

The regular meeting of the Town Council was held on Monday evening last. Present—Reeve Wilson, Dep.-Reeve Carscallen, and Couns. Lapum, Gibbard, Lane, Perry, Stevens, Henwood, Wallace, Carson and Rose.

In the absence of the Mayor, Reeve Wilson presided. The minutes of the last meeting were confirmed, after which the following petitions were read:—

From the Napanee Brush Co., asking that the by-law passed in 1880 exempting the brush works from taxation, be amended so as to apply to their new premises.

Upon motion Mr. A. F. Holmes was heard in favor of the petition, urging its claims and explaining the state of the company at present.—The petition was referred to the Finance Committee to report.

From Chas. James, Esq., and ninety-nine others, asking the Council to take into consideration the propriety of repealing a by-law respecting the licensing and regulating of persons keeping billiard, bagatelle or pool tables.

Upon motion Revs. Pearson and Card were heard in reference to the matter. They spoke of the demoralizing influence of the billiard and pool rooms upon the youth of the town. The object of the petition was to have the billiard rooms closed. An animated discussion followed, in which reference was made to the police not doing their duty in enforcing the by-law, which provides that no billiard room shall be kept open after a certain hour, and that no minors shall be allowed in said rooms. Chief Allen explained that at these parlors there was kept a watch, and when the police did enter, the place was immediately cleared of minors. He spoke of a shooting gallery over which he has no power. The matter was referred to a committee composed of Reeve Wilson and Couns. Lane and Perry to report on Friday night.

A petition from E. K. Bowen and others on behalf of the Saved Army, praying for the use of the town hall on Tuesday, Saturday and Sunday evenings, was granted.

Reeve WILSON brought in the petition of Mr. W. H. Snider, asking that a part of his income tax be remitted.—No action.

A communication was read from Mr. John Downey, holding the corporation liable for damages caused by swing bridge in delaying vessels passing up and down the river.—Ordered to be filed.

From Mr. Alfred Page with his note at three months for taxes on A. F. McCay's place in West Ward.—Ordered to be received.

The Streets and Improvement Committee reported that $6.65 had been expended and that the cash in the hand of the Committee was 5c. They recommended no action on the memorial of Ven. Archdeacon Bedford-Jones and others as to the building of wire fences on Newburgh road and planting trees to cemetery; that the prayer of the petition of Wm. Saul and others, as to the widening of Thomas-st. from the railway crossing to Newburgh road, be granted; that David Abrams and Wm. Peterson be employed repairing sidewalks at $1 and $1.25 per day, and that E. Perry be sprinkler of streets at $2.50 per day.—Adopted.

The Committee on Fire, Water & Gas reported having examined the account of the Gas Company, and recommended that $12 be deducted.—Adopted.

The Town Property Committee reported the cleaning of the town hall at a cost of $5.95, and that the Saved Army had been requested to vacate the premises.—Adopted.

Coun. CARSON presented the report of the Committee on Printing, recommending that the license fee for Mr. Symington's Opera House for one year, from Jan. 1st, 1884, be $25, and stating that Templeton & Beeman's account of $75 had been paid after $10 had been deducted.—Adopted.

The Poor and Sanitary Committee reported an expenditure of $21,25 with $7.62 on hand.—Adopted.

On motion the collector's time was extended until next meeting.

A motion that pension be discontinued to Mrs. Wood was lost.

The Treasurer requested vouchers for $163,95.—Received.

The following accounts were ordered to be paid:—J. Storms, bread for tramps, &c.; J. Vanalstine, $1.25; Levi Kelly, impounding cattle, $2; C. Peterson, painting, $4.80; G. L. Mair, hose, etc., $32.90; J. H. Rook, lighting lamp, $4.00; J. Degroff, shovelling snow, $3; C. Peterson, 41 days work, $14.50; Lewis Shannon, advertising, $5; Intelligence officer, do., $4.68.

The Council then adjourned till Friday night.

NOTICE TO THE

Farmers of Lennox & Addington.

The Directors of the Co-operative Warehousing Co. of Napanee,

Having chosen me as their Manager, I would say to all whom it may concern, that the storage of grain can be obtained on as favorable terms as heretofore, or there will be a purchaser of grain, Mr. A. N. Diamond, who has formerly proved himself one of the most liberal and satisfactory buyers that we have ever had dealings with (or other buyers if they wish to avail themselves of the opportunity.) Having obtained the services of Mr. Diamond as an experienced salesman at a moderate commission, farmers can have their grain shipped and sold to the Company, any Bank or other responsible person whom they may choose whereby they can obtain the advantage of the prices of the best markets with the least possible cost of charges, and there will be no more moving of stored grain into neighboring storehouses, contrary to your expectations and wishes and contrary to any understanding ever made with the Company or the late Manager that I ever heard of. Of his determined motives and objects I leave you to form your own opinion.

MONTREAL INUNDATED.

Floods Caused by the Sudden Break-Up of the Ice—Great Destruction of Property.

MONTREAL, April 16.—The drenching rain-storm of the past eighteen hours and a strong breeze from the north-west have had the effect of suddenly breaking up the ice on Lake St. Louis above Lachine, and bringing vast quantities from that wide expanse of the St. Lawrence rushing down through the rapids and lodging some distance below the harbour, blocking up the current and inundating an extensive area of the city contiguous to the river. It has come unexpectedly, as residents were felicitating themselves that all danger of a flood was over.

All along the river front the great warehouses are flooded up to the first flats and often above that, and Griffintown, which is principally inhabited by working people, is in many places unapproachable unless by canoes and boats, which are in constant use.

The depth of water over an area of three miles long and half or three-quarters of a mile broad, is nearly as great as in the ruinous flood in 1861. Point St. Charles, where the operatives at the Grand Trunk works reside, is impassable for pedestrians, the streets and sidewalks being covered with water. In the suburbs outside of Point St. Charles acres of ground as well as the roads are covered as by a sea. At the junction of Bonaventure street and Richmond Square the water is three feet deep, and if it continues to rise will be over the Grand Trunk track in the morning. Not far from the depot a boatman was ferrying passengers across Bonaventure street this afternoon at two cents a piece, and got a lot of patronage.

All the cellars along Bonaventure are flooded to a depth of three to five feet. The goods stored in the cellars of houses in a large number of streets are destroyed, and the loss to the dealers, most of whom cannot bear it, will be very great. Many of the villages along the river, as far up as Lapraire, are reported to be submerged.

FORTY YEARS AGO.

Coffins were very plain and burial caskets were unknown.

Tombstones had larger epitaphs and more verbosity engraved upon them.

Eggs were a shilling a dozen, and butter was considered high at eighteen cents per pound.

Much of the silver currency, flips, levies, and dollars was of Mexican and Spanish coinage.

The country retail trade was much better, as people could not so easily run to the city by rail.

Business letters were more voluminous and formal, and were written in a precise, round hand.

There was New York currency, eight shillings to the dollar, and New England currency, six shillings to the dollar.

The diet was more subcharged with grease, the winter breakfast usually being made of salted ham and hot cakes

Address inclosing 3c. stamp, Ben Vandelf Barclay street, New York.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser having been permanently cured of that dreaded disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge) with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure Cure for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, etc.

Parties wishing the prescription, will please address Rev. E. A. WILSON, 164 Penn st., Williamsburgh, N.Y.

grease, the winter breakfast usually being made of salted ham and hot cakes.

Dinner was simply a hasty lunch at noon, and little importance was attached to the necessity for good digestion or a period of rest after eating.

Bread was home made. Coffee was freely ground every morning, and the grinding of the family coffee-mill was a familiar sound hours before the children arose.

Negro minstrelsy was just cropping out in the travelling circus. There were generally but two performers, who assumed male and female characters. The popular melody was "Jump Jim Crow."

People did not live as long as they now do, nor was the average health as good as it is at present. They ate more meat, more grease, more hot bread, and more heavy dishes, and drank more at meals.

At funerals the undertaker cried with the mourners, the flow of tears being proportionate to the expense of the funeral. Young couples considered it a privilege to sit up all night with the corpse before burial.

THINGS USEFUL.

Sand-paper will whiten ivory knife-handles that have become yellow with use or age.

Any iron or copper wire, or copper-coated iron-wire, will answer for telephone wire—the larger the better.

The density of the new standard pound weight of platinum made by order of the Board of Trade is 21·3857, the air being at a mean temperarure of 12·77 ° C., and the water in which it was weighed 10·81 °.

For cementing rubber or gutta-percha to metal Mr. Moritz Grossman giver the following recipe—Pulverised shellac, dissolved in ten times its weight of pure ammonia. In three days the mixture will of the required consistency. The ammonia penetrates the rubber, and enables the shellac to take a firm hold; but, as it evaporates in time, the rubber is immovably fastened to the metal, and neither gas nor water will remove it.

Stones for grinding cutlery vary in diameter from four inches to two feet. The faces of some, as of those for grinding razors, are convex. Those for dry grinding, an operation very detremental to health, have a flux above, through which the small particles of stone and metal are driven by an air-blast. The angles formed by the faces of the cutting tools increase in proportion to the hardness of the material to be operated upon. Thus the razor has an angle of from 17 ° to 20 °; wood-cutting tools 25 ° to 45 °; tools for iron and steel, 60 ° to 70 °.

A despatch to the Times from Khartoum, April 7th, says: "The people are heartsick of hoping for English relief. The town is now in the centre of an enormous rebel camp. Our Krupp munition is rather short, and the situation is critical. The rebels have frustrated an attempt to send a steamer to Berber. Gordon will probably be driven to retreat by Central Africa; a retreat to Berber is impossible."

For Bronchitis and Catarrh.

A correspondent of the Rural New Yorker gives the following, which may be taken for what it is worth. It looks like a medley compound:

One-half pint of rum, one-half pint of honey, one ounce oil of tar, one-and-one-half ounce of tincture gum myrrh, one ounce fluid extract sarasparilla, one-fourth ounce of oil of wintergreen. Shake the mixture well each time before taking. Dose for an adult, one teaspoonful at night on retiring and before breakfast, gradually increase to one tablespoonful. For a violent inflammatory catarrhal cold, or anything of the kind, give the above remedy, and rub the chest and back with lard and kerosene. Have the room very warm when applied. I have known this to cure inflammation of the lungs. One great benefit of using the kerosine is that one will not take cold after using it.

Certain thoughts are prayers. There are moments when, whatever be the attitude of the body, the soul is on it knees.

Oscar Wilde tells the few people who listen to his lectures on America that San Francisco was built by the Chinese.

The alliances among the rebel tribes on the Blue Nile and White Nile are breaking up. The tribes that surrounded Saleh Pasha have quarrelled and dispersed. Marauding bands continue to interrupt the communications between Khartoum and Berber, but there is no unity in their operations. It is believed that Gordon has received a message from the Government urging him to withdraw from Khartoum, but he ignores the advice.

Flax-Seed.

The evidence produced to establish the superior claims of FLAX-SEED EMULSION COMPOUND as a remedy for Nervous exhaustion and all its symptons is unquestionable. The large and increasing demand is almost entirely due to its own merits. We do not place it in competition with patent medicines or secret remedies, as we furnish the formula and can show that it consists of a superior combination of phosphorus, with the fat-producing properties of the Flax-Seed. During the past six months over FOUR THOUSAND BOTTLES have been dispensed in the city of Ogdensburg, N. Y., and county of St. Lawrence, where it is manufactured, and the universal verdict is that it is the best NERVE TONIC, BLOOD ENRICHER, and PURIFIER ever produced. We solicit investigation as to the reputation of the remedy where ever it has been used.

See advertisement in another column, and ask your Druggist for circulars containing remarkable cures.

The above remedies sold only in Napanee by W. S. Detlor, Druggist.

Dear Sirs,—I take pleasure in testifying to the benefis I have received from the use of your Fountain of Health. For over nine years I have suffered from disease of the Kidneys, having a severe pain in the back a great deal of the time and a tenderness of the eye balls. No remedies that I have ever tried, and I have used no end of them, gave me relief, except your Fountain of Health, which has made me feel good. I have used two of your dollar bottles.

Yours sincerely,

Mischief Done By Good-Natured People.

No doubt there is a vast amount of misery in the world occasioned by deliberate unkindness; revenge for real or fancied injuries, or the terrible pleasure some evil natures feel in the exercise of arbitrary power. Still more suffering is probably occasioned by that callous indifferentism to the feelings of others which we call thoughtlessness, but which is really very nearly allied to selfishness. Yet possibly we should find were we able to make the reckoning, that as much harm is done by the unwise concessions of what are called "good-natured people," as by either of the other classes.

It is often said of a good-natured man that he is no one's enemy but his own; but families and friends are so linked together in this world, that it is exceedingly difficult for any one to injure himself without hurt to another. Far be it from us to limit philanthropy or any sort of generosity. He who goes through life conferring benefits is the noblest of mortals; but unless on occasion he is able to say "No" to eager entreaties, he will never be able to carry out his best intentions.

One of the most mischievous forms of what is called good-nature is recommending an incompetent person to some responsible situation. Not that patronage, properly considered, is anything but a good and lawful thing; only we may be very sure that the just, enlightened, and really powerful patron is by no means what is understood by "a good-natured man." We imagine him to have legitimate influence, which he would very soon lose were he to abuse it.

We once knew an authoress, now no more, who beside having a great deal of talent as well as good-nature, had one of the kindest hearts in the world. His successful books had secured her a certain literary position; and had she used sparingly and discreetly the influence which naturally resulted from it, she might have been of immense use to young aspirants of genius. Perhaps her own vivid imagination lent a charm to the manuscripts she was asked to forward for unknown authors to eminent publishers, for it is a fact that men and women of real genius are often the most lenient of critics to inferior writers. But however this may have been, her good-nature was so often imposed on, she so often sent poor compositions with words of recommendation to her frendly publishers, that at last they smiled, or sighed, at her importunities, and though willing enough to take anything from her own practised pen, ceased to regard her good word as of any weight, when applied to the production of another. In fact, it came to pass that it was rather an injury than otherwise to be introduced by Mrs. E——. She sacrificed what might have been a very useful and powerful influence to her good-nature. If Dr. Johnson had thus sacrificed his great influence by offering poor novels, to the booksellers, he would have been little likely to have been able to promptly dispose of the immortal Vicar of Wakefield, and so aid poor Oliver Goldsmith in the hour of his sorest need.

Critics who, from a spurious good-nature unduly praise a work of art or literature, really do a cruel injury to deserving authors and artists, by bringing their does not exist is a mean sort of deception which must often be followed by humiliation.

A person out of what is called good nature becoming security for another, and suffering, or causing others to suffer in consequence, is so sad and frequent an event in real life, that it has become quite a common incident in novels, and need not be treated of here. Kindness of heart is a deeper and finer quality than the surface readiness to oblige which we have endeavoured to depict. Kindness of heart has always the capacity for real sympathy, and this great alleviator of suffering is generally too clear-seeing to always approve of 'Yes' when 'No' should be said. Real sympathy feels with, and assists, the friend in trouble. When actions prompted by thoughtless good-nature are most mischievous, they proceed from one who probably neither feels deep nor sees clearly the relations of cause and effect. That Justice—to a stranger no less than to our associates—is a rarer and more sublime virtue than generosity, is a truth that good-natured people are somewhat apt to forget—Chamber's Journal.

TRANSFUSION FOR CONSUMPTION.

The Experiment of a Young Surgeon in a Hopeless Case—Not Entirely New.

An enthusiastic young surgeon in New York has introduced a novel treatment for pulmonary consumption, or tuberculosis, for which a great future is predicted by his admirers. His first experiment was undertaken four months ago, in the case of a young man of 23, the only son of a wealthy dry-goods dealer, who was so far gone with the disease that medical consultation had pronounced recovery hopeless, and death only a question of a few weeks. The remedy consisted in the repeated transfusion from the arterial system of a healthy young man, who consented to act as donor, of from four to six ounces of fresh blood, according to the method styled arterio-venous. The patient was so exceedingly feeble when the first transfer was undertaken that only four ounces were transfused, in consequence of the disturbance of the action of the heart that immediately ensued. The recrudescence of the vital energies was, however, extraordinary. From the date, almost from the moment, of the experiment the patient began to improve. The tendency to emaciation disappeared, and the pulmonary symptoms were greatly reduced in severity. Relish for food returned, and the nervous prostration was greatly relieved.

Three weeks later the operation was repeated, with six ounces of blood, the method employed being that of Prof. Joseph W. Howe, the leading advocate of transfusion in the United States. The results of the second experiment were more encouraging than those of the first. Three transfusions have now been undertaken, and the young man is now improving so rapidly, both in general health and local symptoms, that the young surgeon is confident of success without another resort to the transfusion syringe.

"The idea is not a new one," he remarked, in response to a request for information. "Dr. Howe was the first to try transfusion in a desperate case of tubercular consumption with such success one man fatally wounded. A general turnout of armed Orangemen resulted, the streets being patrolled by them all night. A man-of-war has sailed from Halifax for the scene of the disturbance.

A good deal of excitement has been caused by the adventures of four youths from Emerson, Man., who set out for the west with the intention of rivalling the exploits of Jessie James. The eldest is thirteen years of age. At Northcote, Minn., they endeavoured to paint the town red, and created a sensation. They then proceeded westward, but were overtaken at Hallock.

Sir Vernon Harcourt, Secretary of State for the Home Department, in a speech at Derby this evening, said the Government will dissolve Parliament at its own time, not at the time of the Conservatives. The Government went to Egypt reluctantly, and would have retired but for events in the Soudan. England has no right to annex Egypt. England has quite empire enough. If we annex Egypt we are liable to perpetual embroilment with other countries.

A negro named Gibbs murdered the wife of L. P. Moore, a prominent farmer of Burelion county, on Saturday evening, because she would not allow him to sit at the supper table with the family. Moore was not at home, but returned shortly after. The community in the neighbourhood turned out Sunday afternoon and overtook Gibbs and captured him after a fight, in which the negro was wounded. He was taken back to Moore's place, where the citizens chained him to a post and burned him to death. Gibbs was an escaped convict.

Joseph Carrier, an operative in a boot and shoe manufactory in Montreal, proceeded to the river front Tuesday and deliberately committed suicide in the presence of crowds assembled on the shore by jumping into the river and refusing aid when offered to him. After the plunge deceased came to the surface with his arms folded and refusing to catch a plank that was thrown to him went down by his own motion, and was never seen again. Before his fatal leap he shook hards with several acquaintances he met at the spot, and his last salutation to them was "Good bye, boys; take my advice and never get married." Deceased leaves a widow and three children. The body has not been recovered.

A Paris despatch says:—Several English detectives have arrived for the purpose of tracing the dynamiters. In spite of Colonel Majendie's report, it is declared that the dynamite used at Victoria station was made at a factory between Amiens and Boulogne. It is rumoured that an attempt will shortly be made to blow up one of the public buildings in London. The activity of the dynamiters continues unabated. It is believed the English and French police are fully acquainted with their movements, and that every effort will be made to counteract their plots. There is great reason to believe that one of the most trusted dynamite leaders keeps the police fully informed. The dynamiters are receiving valuable aid from French socialists. They re waiting ord ers from New York to act.

The finest body linen is embroidered more or less, and made exquisite with Valenciennes or costly imitation laces.

Critics who, from a spurious good-nature unduly praise a work of art or literature, really do a cruel injury to deserving authors and artists, by bringing their merits into an unworthy comparison with inferior powers. Evil of this sort however, is apt to bring about its own penalty. Directly a professional writer is even suspected of unfairness, the spell of his influence is broken; and often enough, to be a warning to the ready writer, has it happened that one of the staff of a popular journal has lost his situation on account of his too "good-natured" reviews.

It is rather remarkable that what are called good-natured people rarely undertake unpleasant duties, if they can possibly avoid them. They do not like telling disagreeable truths, however urgent the necessity for so doing, but transfer the mission to a sterner friend with some such phrase as, "I should not like to say it," or, "I should not like to do it," just as if the habit of their lives was only to do what they "liked." Indeed, the good-natured people we are describing are rarely generous in a grand way; they are seldom capable of self-sacrifice. If they are rich, they give money rather than take trouble. If they are people of leisure, they probably give time, which perhaps is not very precious to them; but doing something they greatly dislike, in order to benefit another, is a virtue too rare to be found among them.

There is a form of deception, too often considered very venial, with which so-called good-natured people, if they are good letter-writers, are seldom associated. This is "drawing up" letters for their less gifted acquaintances to copy and send out as their own. A really good letter often makes a very favourable impression; but it is something like a false coin if it be not the composition of the signer. No doubt, there are cases when it is necessary some statement should be made in language more clear and precise than the person concerned can command; but in these instances, the ready penman should write in his own person for his friend. We are afraid many situations of trust and responsibility have been obtained on the strength of admirable letters dictated by another. But incompetence is sure to be discovered sooner or later, as is a deception which is less forgivable than want of ability. Long, long ago, we knew of a case far more sad than the engaging of an incompetent clerk or governess. A girl of good family and large fortune was won over to accept for a husband a young gentleman of small means and not much principle mainly by the eloquent, poetical, very charming letters he addressed to her; nearly if not quite all of which were composed by a clever brilliant friend who had never even seen her. When the marriage proved very far from a happy one—and the real scribe had a wife and children of his own—we have reason to believe that he deeply regretted the the part he had played in deluding a confidding girl.

Very much on a par with the laxity of principle which permits false letter-writing is the wearing of borrowed finery, especially jewellery, things which we have known good-natured women very willing to lend. Valuable jewellery is a sign of certain amount of wealth, which is generally on fit occasions displayed; but to exhibit the sign where the reality

"The idea is not a new one," he remarked, in response to a request for information. "Dr. Howe was the first to try transfusion in a desperate case of tubercular consumption with such success that the late Prof. Van Buren exhibited the patient to his class in a clinical lecture, at which I was present, and described the operation. I firmly believe that transfusion of blood is the true remedy for consumption and diseases allied to it, and if I ever have the opportunity I shall test it in leprosy."

Skobeleff.

He had a "delicate, handsome face," a fair beard, blue eyes, dark hair. He looked like an Apollo as he rode into battle "on a white horse, and dressed in a white coat," (a practice which won him among the Turks the title of Akh Pasha, or the "White-General,") "looking as though he had come dressed for a ball. 'Is not a battle the soldier's ball?' he asked some one. 'Now, at last, I feel happy.'" He was described as "fighting like an ensign." The answer given was, "Yes, but he does not hide himself like a General." He was always in the thickest of the rain of bullets and shrapnel, cheering on his men, and showing the way to the enemy's batteries. But though he was careless of himself, he was always careful of his men. His division was always the best provided with fur coats, with soup, tea, and "corn brandy." He refused to have anything to do with the Commissariat Department, and made each of his regiments do its own commissariat. Some one suggested that the commanding officers might embezzle. His answer was: "If my men get as much bread and meat and tea and brandy as they want, if there are no complaints lodged against my officers, if the inhabitants of the district are satisfied, let them embezzle; what do I care?" After the famous passage of the Balkans, in which Skobeleff and his division played the first part, when they passed in review before the Grand Duke "in splendid condition, while the other divisions looked pale and starved," the Grand Duke exclaimed: "What red-faced fellows! One can see they are well filled. Thank God that some at least do not look like corpses!" Flogging and cuffing appear to prevail still in the Russian army. Skobeleff would have none of it in his division. He told one of his favorite Colonels, who was beating a soldier, that if he found him doing it again he should dismiss him. After Plevna one of his men was ordered by his Colonel to be flogged. The man appealed to Skobeleff, confessed his crime, and asked for a court-martial. Skobeleff told him a court-martial would condemn him to death. His answer was: "We are all in God's hands. Every day of our lives we are under fire here. I don't mind being shot, but if I am to be disgraced, your Excellency, I shall commit suicide."

M. Eugene Turpin, a French chemist, has dicovered an explosive of tremendous power which he terms "Panclasite," and for which he claims a maximum of force with a minium of risk, the two materials of which it is composed being inocuous until mixed. M. Turpin recently made very satisfactory experiments at Chatham bafore the military authorities.

rrespondent writes to a London g newspaper: "A case which is at nt attracting much interest reminds that I recently saw at Nice in a shop indow a small scent bottle of glass, with silver-gilt mounts, in a shabby condition. It was exposed with the following announcement in English: 'This flacon formerly belonged to Mrs. Gras, the first woman who has thrown sulphuric acid upon her husband. Only £3. Proofs and vouchers within.' There was no notice in French, German, or Russian, so that evidently a buyer for this pleasing souvenir was looked for only among the English or American tourists."

On a recent occasion in experimental firing at Strensall, in England, Major-Gen. Cameron ordered the First Volunteer Battalion Fusileers to fire at a range of dummy soldiers with both eyes open and as rapidly as possible, not looking along the barrel of the rifle, but keeping their eyes fixed on the enemy, who was supposed to be making a rush on the position defended by the volunteers. Eight rounds were fired in 67 seconds, and 38 per cent. of the shots struck the dummy figures. Considering the rapidity of the fire, these results are very good. Drawn up in line against an enemy in the same formation, 1,000 men would thus deliver 7,000 shots in about a minute, with some 2,600 hits.

An invalid who went to Thomasville, Ga., writes that he found in a local newspaper, alongside the column which the editor's graceful pen makes eloquent with praise of the pine belt, and fierce with the denunciation of that horse thief and midnight assassin who upholds the superior climatic advantages of Aiken, S.C.—even there he saw a flaring advertisement, having for a vignette an engraved hearse, and further illuminated and illustrated with cuts of metallic coffins, all of latest cut and fashion, while further on in the text came a modest, but assured, statement from the advertisers as follows: "Our long experience in embalming and shipping bodies justifies us in saying that our work cannot be excelled. Certificates, testifying in the strongest terms to the safe and satisfactory transmission of bodies shipped by us, can be seen on application at our office."

A great work was completed recently in Paris. In all the chief streets and squares there were huge masts painted in scrolls of blue and white, with a board in the middle announcing the event; the advertising columns of every journal on the Boulevardes were full of it, and the Figaro had a four-page supplement describing in full detail the nature of the great work completed. The work in question was a gigantic Bon Marche establishment which a certain M. Jaluzot has erected close to the Western terminus. The establishment itself is not very different from many others both in Paris and in London, but in one respect M. Jaluzot's enterprise was unique. He had made arrangements with the Western railway Company for free excursion trains on the occasion of his opening ceremony, Execution of Criminals.

We think it to be demonstrable that so long as the sentence of death is retained—that is, so long as the nation retains its present creed, and feels for society more than for the individual—three conditions as to the method of inflicting it should be resolutely maintained. The mode of execution adopted should be sudden, it should visibly shatter the corpse as little as possible, and it should be one held by opinion to be in itself disgraceful, and no method except hanging fulfills all those conditions. Sudden death could, of course, be inflicted in a hundred ways, many of them more rapid even than the noose. Shooting, if the heart is pierced, or the brain, is probably as rapid as any; the guillotine is swifter than the hangman, despite some doubts as to the instantantaneous loss of the victim's consciousness, and it would be easily possible to employ agencies more rapid than either. There are poisons too rapid in their action for pain, and one of them could be administered, we believe, during sleep. Electricians can prove, we are told, that the electric fluid moves more rapidly than sensation does, and hold it, therefore, probable that an electric shock sufficient to kill instantly would never be felt by the criminal at all, death preceding sensation, a view borne out, so far as such views can be, by the usual testimony of those who have received and survived a stroke of lightning. Any of these methods, therefore, would be as satisfactory, so far as suddenness and the absence of any approach to torture is concerned, as hanging; but the first two diminish that respect for the body which the whole history of brutal assaults shows it so necessary to maintain, and which is, we think, the true objection to that ghastly but painless mode of exection, blowing from a cannon; and the third is liable to an objection of its own, that it is not wise to make death for crime more painless than natural death usually is. We should not make it painful, but we should not artificially reduce its terrors. The awe with which the punishment is regarded would be gravely diminished by the use of painless poison, such as the Athenians used, while a new doubt would be begotten among the ignorant as to the reality of its infliction. They would begin talking of strong sleeping draughts, and of drugs which could produce apparent death—that is, catalepsy—without actually killing. It is most important that no color should be given to such stories, and important, too, not to degrade science by making it an accomplice in the executioner's task, as it would be if the electric battery were employed. Men ought not to lose the sense that there is something rough and brutal about capital punishment, that it is essentially a last appeal to force in its most direct and savage form, when every other means appear from experience to have failed. We greatly doubt, moreover, whether the multitude would believe in the painlessness of death by electricity, and whether the lightning stroke would not evoke that shudder of sympathy with the condemned which so utterly "demoralizes the guillotine," and which the idea of torture, in this age at all events, never fails to elicit in England. There would be too much the air of a scientific experiment in every execution, and a single instance of failure would, till the rapid increase of murder

FUNNIGRAMS.

An old bachelor asserts that the best and quickest way to revive a lady when she faints is to begin to take down her hair. If it ain't her own she will grab it in a jiffy.

Social Inequality.—Wife of Radical millworker (to her little boy's playmate): —"Gang awa' wi' ye, Bobbie, and dinna play wi' oor Johnnie; your father's only a cairter, an' Johnnie's father's a geffer in a mill.

"No, sir," said the man, "you needn't tell me a woman ever had her dress pocket picked. I don't believe a thief could discover it. I know I've tried for two hours to find the pocket of one of my wife's dresses, and then had to give it up."

"When I have a cold in my head," said a gentleman in company, "I am always remarkably dull and stupid." "You are much to be pitied, then, sir," replied another, "for I don't remember ever to have seen you without a cold in your head."

A story is told of two Scotsmen, who travelled together three days in a stage-coach without a word ever passing between them. On the fourth day one of them at last ventured to remark that it was a fine morning—"And who said it wasn't?" was the reply.

The most absent-minded man in a certain section attended the Methodist Church on Sunday night, accompanied by his pet terrier. When he arrived in the church he raised his dog from the floor and seated him in a pew, and then went and tied himself to the fence.

"Oh, will he bite?" exclaimed one of Liverpool's sweetest girls, with a look of alarm, when she saw one of the dancing bears in the street the other day. "No," said her escort, "he cannot bite; he is muzzled. But he can hug." "Oh," she said, with a distracting smile, "I don't mind that!"

An American in the Far West having just "struck ile," bought from a pedler a copy of "As You Like It." He was so pleased with Touchstone that he wrote to the pedlar, "If that fellow Shakespeare ever writes anything more, be sure to get me one of the first copies—and darn the expense!"

Jamie C—— was a well-known character in Morayshire. His education had been sadly neglected, but when asked a question about anything he would give an answer whether right or wrong. On one occasion some of Jamie's shopmates were speaking about the common house fly, and, being annoyed by him putting in his oar; thought to shut him up by asking—"Jamie, whether is a fly a biped or a quadruped?" "I canna tell," says Jamie; "for a' that I ken it micht be a velociped."

The following conversation took place place between two labourers at the gate of a large shipbuilding-yard on the Clyde, rather famous for numerous and serious accidents:—"Whaur are ye workin' noo, Bob?" "Doon at Dalmuir." "That's a lang road awa'. What pay are they giein'?" "Oh, no sae bad. I've a pound a week. What are they giein' in here?" (nodding towards the gate) "Oh, no sae muckle's that. I've eighteen shillin's an' my chance." "Yer chance? What chance hae ye?" "The chance o' bein' kill't."

ent from many others both in Paris and in London, but in one respect M. Jaluzot's enterprise was unique. He had made arrangements with the Western railway Company for free excursion trains on the occasion of his opening ceremony, and all day long provincials from Havre and Rouen flocked in by thousands.

American artists are well represented in the approaching Paris Salon. Among the portraits which will be remarked for their excellence in the Salon is one of an American lady, painted by our countryman, Mr. Sargent. Mr. Alexander Harrison, an American, will have two important works. The larger of the two is a moonlight sea piece. Mr. Harrison's second picture is called "The Shipwrecked Crew of the Glenons." A young American, Mr. Robert Donoho, who has not exhibited in any previous Salon, sends a landscape of considerable merit. Mr. Heaton, another American, exhibits the portrait of Mlle. Nevada in her character of a Brazilian savage. Another American artist, Mr. Bacon, illustrates Etretat and its environs. He sends two pictures. One, a girl feeding pigs, is sure to be a success, and engraving and photography will make it popular. The other picture is that of an ideal fishing girl of that northern type we sometimes see in Normandy, and an ancient woman who is familiar to all who bathe on the French coast. The two pictures are his best.

The Transvaal delegates at Amsterdam are forming a syndicate of bankers to raise a new loan, which is to be exclusively devoted to the construction of railways. Not so very long ago the Boers would have looked with very scant favor on any proposal for constructing a railway through the Transvaal. An English administrator who visited that territory some years ago endeavored to convince a Boer, one of the oldest inhabitants and the largest farmer in the country, of the enormous advantages that would accrue from the construction of railways. "It would double the value of your land," said he. "Well," said the Boer, "so much the worse for that." "What," said the Englishman, "do you not think it would be good to have the value of your farm doubled?" "No," said the Boer, "no respectable Boer ever sells his land. What he has to do is to buy fresh farms for his younger sons; so that the more valuable the land is the more he has to pay for it, and the worse it is for him." "Then you would not even have a telegraph?" said the Englishman. "No," said the Boer, "what's the use of a telegraph? If the news is good it will keep; if it's bad, it had better not come at all, let alone coming in such a hurry."

Cooking Fish.

The Japanese eat more fish than any other people in the world. With them meat-eating is a foreign innovation, confined to the rich, or rather to those rich people who prefer it to the national diet. Clearly Mr. Okoshi is not one of these. He was enthusiastic about the excellence of his native fish dinners. He told us that the reason why fish is not more eaten in England is not because of its price or because of the difficulty of transport, but because we cook it so badly. "To boil it is simply to take away the best part of its flavor; with us there are as many varieties of fish cooking as there are different kinds of fish."

which so utterly demoralizes the guillotine," and which the idea of torture, in this age at all events, never fails to elicit in England. There would be too much the air of a scientific experiment in every execution, and a single instance of failure would, till the rapid increase of murder recalled the people to themselves, be fatal to the punishment of death.—The Spectator.

Sold Out Too Cheap

"I didn't used to believe nothin' in eddecashum," said he, as he heaved a sigh like the groan of a sick horse. "My Dan'l he got hold of books and things and branched out as a geologist. He got so he could talk of stratas, and formations, and belts, and dips, and indicashuns, and one day he said to me, sez he:

"'Dad, thar's a coal mine on our land.'

"'How d'ye know?'

"'I've prospected and found indicashuns. That hull hill is chuck full of coal.'

"'And that hull 'tater patch is full of weeds,' sez I.

"You see, I sold short on geology and went long on 'taters, and I missed it. One day a stranger with a squint to his eye cum along and offered me $800 fur my land, and away she went."

"And——"

"Waal, they've taken half a milyun dollars wuth of coal out o' that hill and hain't reached the middle yet. Dan'l was right and I was a fule."

"And now?"

"Waal, I'm drivin' a mule team fur a livin', and all the indicashuns Dan'l can find ar' to the effect that I orter be sent to a lunatic asylum."

The Safest Part of the Car.

A party of merchant travellers in a passenger coach were talking over their travelling experience and the danger of accidents, and finally the question arose as to the safest part of the car. Failing to settle the question among themselves they called up the conductor, and one of them said to him:

"Conductor, we have been discussing the matter of the safest part of the car and want to know your opinion."

"Want to know the safest part, eh?" replied the conductor.

"Yes, that's it."

"Well," continued the conductor, borrowing a chew of tobacco, and looking disappointed because he didn't get a cigar. "I've been on the road for fifteen years, and have been turned over embankments, busted up in tunnels, dumped off bridges, telescoped in collisions, blown off the track by cyclones, run into open switches, and had other pleasant incidental divertisments of kindred nature, and I should say, gentlemen, that the safest part of the car was that part which happened to be in the shop for repairs at the time of the accident."

A report has been communicated to the Academy of sciences, Paris, by the French Minister of the Postal and Telegraph Department on the thunder-storms which visited France during the first six months of last year. From the full and detailed tables it is learned that in all there were 9 persons and 78 animals killed and about 50 persons and 7 animals injured by lightning.

A High Churchman and a Scotch Presbyterian had been at the same church. The former asked the latter if he did not like the "introits." "I don't know what an introit is," was the reply. "But did you not enjoy the anthem?" said the Churchman. "No, I did not enjoy it at all." "I am very sorry," said the Churchman, "because it was used in the early Church; in fact it was originally sung by David." "Ah," said the Scotchman," then that explains the Scripture. I can understand why, if David sung it at that time, Saul threw his javelin at him."

Two poor men, on the death of a relative, came into possession of a large fortune. They didn't know very well what to do with it, but began to make an improvement in their personal appearance, and towards that end each resolved to have a gold watch, one going to Edinburgh for his, and the other to Glasgow. On coming home with their purchases they began to compare them, when the one says to the other, "What sort of a watch have you got, Jock? "I've got a pented laverock," replied Jock. Then said the other, "I've got a better yin than you, for I've got a horse's uncle." The one had got a patent lever, the other a horizontal.

Marriage.

When a young man wants to marry a girl he has already made up his mind that she is worthy of him; otherwise he would not wish to marry her. The next thing for him to do is to make a rigid examination and cross-examination of himself to see whether he is worthy of her. In this he should be unsparing of his own faults and shortcomings. If he comes to the conclusion that the girl is better than he is, let him at once and resolutely set himself to reform his own character and to eradicate its defects. If, on the other hand, he finds that he can conscientiously say that he deserves her hand, he may safely conclude that, if her affections are not preoccupied by another, he can win her by fair and honourable and open means, and without resort to clandestine plans or practices.

At a meeting of the Irish National League in Dublin to-day Parnell said the success of the League was evidenced by the flow of funds into the treasury and by the large number of its branches, and that the National League would hand down to history as bright a record as the Land League.

Never believe, much less propagate, an ill report of a neighbor without good evidence of its truth; never listen to an infamous story handed to you by a man who is inimical to the person defamed, or who is himself apt to defame his neighbors, or who is wont to sow discord among brethern and excite disturbance in society. Never utter the evil which you know or suspect of another till you have an opportunity to expostulate with him. Never speak evil of another while you are under the influence of anger, but wait till your spirits are cooled down, that you may the better judge whether to utter or suppress the matter.

The Napanee Express.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, APRIL 25, 1884.

—We this week send out a large number of subscription accounts. We trust those receiving them will remit without further notice.

—Sir Richard Cartwright, M.P., was in town this week on business in connection with his estate. He received the congratulation of many friends on his series of brilliant speeches delivered during the session.

—The date of the Toronto semi-centennial celebration has been changed to include the 1st of July. Preparations are being made on an extensive scale for the celebration. It promises to be the leading event of the year in the celebration line.

—The Toronto conspirators were yesterday arraigned before the grand jury, but up to the hour of going to press no report had been made. Chief Justice Hagarty, in charging the jury in the case, clearly stated that the offence, though without precedent in Canada or England, came within the range of the criminal law.

—The Standard is evidently setting itself up as an authority on American politics, but it is as far at sea there as it is in the politics of its own country. For instance, it last week mentioned James G. Blaine as a probable dark horse in the presidential race, and expressed the opinion that he will get "left." Now, every school boy knows that Blaine is one of the most prominent Republicans seeking the nomination and should he get it, he could not be called in any sense a "dark horse." This term is only applied to an unknown, or comparatively unknown, man who gets the nomination as a compromise between factions. And then as to Blaine getting "left"—well, we trust that James will never hear of it. He might become discouraged, you know.

—Parliament prorogued on Saturday. The session will long be remembered as one of unparalelled extravagance, jobbery and violation of parliamentary law in Canada. It would take columns to formulate a full indictment, but this brief commentary will be borne out by those who have read the proceedings carefully and whose minds are not warped by prejudice. The Opposition did noble service in exposing the wrong-doing, which, owing to their small numerical strength, they were powerless to prevent. They had a monopoly of the argument but they lacked the voting power. The day is not far distant, however, when Mr. Blake and his followers the House will have both, and then there will be inaugurated a regime of economy, honest expenditure and beneficial legislation.

—The amount of money that was voted away during the session of Parliament which has just closed was $83,271,000. This, the Ottawa Free Press points out, was at the rate of $1,281,092.23 for every day Parliament sat; $25,621 for every hour; $440 a minute and about $74 a second. It was the greatest fun imaginable for them to fling away the money at the rate of seventy-four dollars a second, to a rattling good accompaniment from jews-harps, mouth organs and penny whistles. It is a long time since the members have had such sport But having had their fun, it is only right that promoters of the present movement will confine their efforts to a strong and determined stand in favour of enforcing the by-law they will accomplish the end they are seeking—that of preventing young boys from frequenting the rooms—and receive the hearty support of the friends of the game as well as that of all right thinking men. Let there be a heavy fine provided for violation of the by-law and then let the officers of the law do their duty.

A Relic of the Rebellion of 1837.

The subjoined verses, written on the day of execution of the patriot, Samuel Lount, are in possession of a gentleman in town. The manuscript bears the stains and discolorations of half a century:—

SAMUEL LOUNT'S FAREWELL.

Who was executed at Toronto on Thursday, 12th April,

Anno Domini MDCCCXXVII.

To all my friends and kindreds dear,
Read o'er my sorrows with a tear.
Tho' foes my cause may strive to stain,
There is great honour on my name.

My soul from Heaven with love was blest,
My pains give way to peace and rest,
My God remov'd the load I bore,
I rest where Crowns can do no more.

My mortal life to man I gave,
Tho' thousands pray'd my life to save;
But prayers and groans and tears were vain
To save me from the tyrant's chain.

I trust my blood will satisfy
The thirst that some should bleed and die.
May all that sought my blood be bles't
As I am this day with God at rest.

But O! my blood cannot atone
For griefs unheard, unseen unknown.
Events like these from earth will rise
To powers that's far above the skies.

Farewell, fond wife and children dear.
Altho' we parted with a tear,
Still hope in God and still maintain
My blood that's spilt is not in vain.

May God look down with pitying eyes
And lend His ear to hear your cries,
And all your griefs may Jesus see.
That came from Heaven to comfort me.

Remember me when e'er you pray,
Altho' my spirit's gone away,
For in my God my soul did trust,
By whom this day my spirit's bles't.

Dear babes, sweet treasures in mine eyes,
May you on earth to honor rise;
In heaven may God record your names,
That bore away my griefs and pains.

Dear brother, how thou was't distress'd,
For day and night thou could'st not rest,
And when thou saw me near to death
Thou fainted and gave up thy breath.

May heaven reward thee for thy pains.
Thy brother's free from binding chains.
The nights I saw, the grief I bore,
Shall unto me return no more.

Farewell, dark prison in iron band,
And the sad cords that bound my hand,
I give my life by God's command,
Farewell, distress'd and troubled land.

A Black Letter Record.

[From the Globe.]

The Peterborough Review says:—

"The Globe, in accordance with its amiable custom, is black-lettering Ontario members who voted in the majority in favour of the Government railway policy, with majorities from the other provinces. Upon this list, however, we do not find the name of Mr. Allison of Lennox. Yet he voted the same way."

The Review is wrong in several particulars. The Globe did not black-letter those who voted for the railway aid resolutions, but those who were traitors to Ontario and voted against Mr. Blake's amendment pointing out the obvious fact that Ontario was being unjustly treated. Mr. Allison, of Lennox, voted in favor of Mr. Blake's amendment, as did every one of Mr. Blake's followers in this province.

dollars a second, to a rattling good accompaniment from jews-harps, mouth organs and penny whistles. It is a long time since the members have had such sport But having had their fun, it is only right that the electors of the country should have a little fun too: and when the proper time comes, which will not be far off, they will have grand sport in bouncing the mirth-loving Tory members with about as much rapidity as they chucked out the money.

—Premier Norquay has submitted by resolution in the Manitoba Legislature the following bill of rights which is to be placed before the Dominion Government by a committee composed of the Speaker and two members of the executive :—

1st.—The right of the province to control the management and sale of the public lands within the provincial limits, and the mines, minerals, wood and timber thereon, or the equivalent thereof, and to receive from the Dominion Government payment for lands already sold.

2nd.—The management of the school lands with a view to capitalize the sum realized from their sale. The interest to be used in aid of education.

3rd.—The adjustment of the capital account decennially according to the population, the same to be computed now at 150,000 souls, to be allowed until it corresponds to the amount allowed Ontario on that account.

4th.—The right of the province to charter lines of railway and their direction in the province.

5th.—And that the grant of 80 cents per ead be not limited to 400,000, but that the same be allowed the province until the maximum on which the said grant is allowed Ontario be reached.

6th.—The granting to the province of increased branch railway facilities.

7th.—To call attention to the prejudicial effect of the tariff on the province.

8th.—The extension of the boundaries.

—The effort being made to close the billiard rooms in town is, in the opinion of a great many respectable and law-abiding people, overstepping the mark. The game of billiards is in itself a pleasant, harmless pastime and located (as it is in Napanee) apart from hotels and bar-rooms, and kept within proper bounds, is productive of no more injury to the morals of the community than are cricket or croquet. There is, however, much truth in the contention that injury is done the youth of the town by their being permitted to frequent billiard-rooms at late hours of the night. Many heads of families have probably good reason for believing that their sons have been led astray in these places, through violation of the clause in the the existing by-law prohibiting minors frequenting or playing in such places. But as to whether this is a sufficient reason for closing up the rooms altogether and debaring men who enjoy the game and suffer no injury therefrom, from indulging in the recreation, is a matter that deserves careful consideration. Such an act would not only punish the keepers of the rooms, (who are entirely to blame for any violation of the by-law,) but many residents of the town and visitors who take pleasure in the pastime. Our opinion is that if the provisions of the by-law were strictly enforced there would be little cause for complaint. In many of the Mechanics' Institutes throughout the country the game is encouraged and tables are provided for the members. It is a game which in itself cannot be objected to, depending rather upon skill than chance, and is very rarely employed by gamblers in the prosecution of their nefarious trade. If the cision.

A correspondent from the Mississippi river writes :—Almost general joy is expressed by the residents in this section, irrespective of party, at the decision of the Privy Council on the final appeal in the suit of Caldwell and McLaren. However it may be viewed by parties at a distance there are few cognizant of and familiar with the facts here but are delighted at the success of Mr. Boyd Caldwell and rejoiced at his overthrow of monopoly and arbitrary power. Numbers of Conservatives who have lived in the immediate vicinity of the disputed stream or have been employees either as foremen or laborers for either lumber firm, and who know every lake and stream from the head waters to Carleton Place, are pleased with the verdict, and say it is not only just but that it is statesmanlike and truly patriotic. Wonder what your corpulent local member and the cadiverous local member of the Local House from Addington would say if they could only hear how unanimous the opinion is of those who know the circumstances in this case in favour of the present decision. The superabundant adipose might possibly prevent the auricles of the former conveying the disagreeable sensation to the brain, but the latter certainly would lose the power of utterance, dumb as he is.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Popular Science Monthly for May, being the first number of the twenty-fifth vol., comes early to hand laden with varied and most interesting reading. "The Sins of Legislators" is treated in an opening paper (to be continued) by Herbert Spencer, in that writer's profound and comprehensive style. "The Progress of the Working Classes in the Last Half Century," by Robert Giffin, LL.D., and "Christian Agnosticism," by the Rev. Canon Curteis, are also notable papers, the former especially. Dr. Giffin, who is President of the London Statistical Society, deals in this paper the most effective and crushing blow to Henry George's leading social theories, in "Progress and Poverty," that they have yet sustained. Canon Curteis, in reply to Herbert Spencer's recent paper on "Religious Retrospect and Prospect," is moderate and conciliatory in tone, and frankly admits that Mr. Spencer has "'purified' for us our idea of God" by "pruning away all sorts of anthropomorphic accretions." "Where Did Life Begin?" by G. H. Scribner, and "The Morality of Happiness," rank next, perhaps, in interest. Edward Johnson in "An Experiment in Prohibition," shows that the prohibitory law which has been in force in the State of Vermont for thirty years is a total failure, and "for all practical purposes a dead letter." He says "The cause of the failure of the law is not far to seek." It is not sustained by public sentiment, and the world, he trenchantly remarks, "cannot be dragooned into virtue." In the "Editor's Table," under "Spencer on Parliamentary Influence," is quoted Herbert Spencer's recent letter declining the invitation to run for Parliament. This letter is remarkable in its way and fully characteristic. It is a gem of its kind and ought to be read by every M.P.P., and indeed every elector the world over. The other papers in this number are "The Beaver and his Works," by Dr. G. A. Stockwell (illus.); "The Milk in the Cocoanut," by Grant Allen; "Longevity of Astronomers," by A. B. M. Lancaster; "The Chemistry of Cookery," by W. Mattieu Williams; "How Flies Hang On," by Dr. J. E. Rombouts (illus.); "The Beginnings of Metallurgy," by Dr. E. Reyer; "Our new Skin and Cancer Hospital," by W. J. Youmans, M.D.; "Was he an Idiot?" by Rev. W. A. Cram; Sketch of Mary Somerville (with portrait); Correspondence, etc. Published by D. Appleton & Co., New York.

From Death's Door.

M. M. Deverceaux, of Iona, Mich., was a sight to behold. He says:—"I had no action of the Kidneys and suffered terribly. My legs were as big as my body and my body as big as a barrel. The best doctors gave me up. Finally I tried Kidney-Wort. In four or five days a change came, in eight or ten days I was on my feet, and now I am completely cured. It was certainly a miracle." All druggists keep Kidney-Wort which is put up both in liquid and dry form.

STABBING AFFRAY AT COLEBROOK.

Assailant Committed for Trial, but Escapes from the Constables.

A correspondent at Colebrook writes: A drunken row occurred Friday night at Shields' hotel, in this place. In the fracas a young man named Boyce stabbed a man named Bradford, inflicting a painful wound. Boyce was at once arrested and brought before Mr. Elgin McDonough, J. P., who committed him for trial at Napanee. On the way to the county town, the constables, through negligence, allowed the prisoner to escape and then made no proper effort to re-capture him. It is suggested that the County Crown Attorney should investigate the matter.

Vestry Meeting.

At the vestry meeting of St. Paul's Church, Adolphustown, Mr. J. J. Watson was unanimously elected lay representative to the Synod. The late rector, Rev. R. Harding, was the recipient of an address. Subscriptions to the amount of $2,500 for the U. E. L. Memorial Church have been raised.

Salmon Fry for North Lakes.

Salmon trout fry have been deposited by Mr. Wilmot in the following places to the following amounts:—County of Addington —Loboro' lake, 50,000; Desert lake, 25,000; Knowlton lake, 25,000; Buck lake, 35,000; Gould lake, 25,000; Silver lake, 10,000; Rock lake, 10,000. Prince Edward County —Picton, 100,000. Frontenac County—Collin's lake, 50,000. White fish fry have been deposited in the counties of Addington and Frontenac at Collin's lake, Knowlton lake, Desert lake and Sydenham lake, 500,000 in each.

Lennox Agricultural Society.

A meeting of the directors of the Lennox Agricultural Society was held in the Council Chamber on Saturday last. It was decided to hold their fall show in Napanee on Monday and Tuesday, October 6th and 7th. A committee was appointed to wait on Sir Richard Cartwright in relation to the agricultural grounds. The committee met Sir Richard on Wednesday and laid their case before him. On Thursday morning he submitted an offer to sell the land for $2,500. This offer will be discussed by the directors at a meeting on Saturday and it is probable will be accepted. The directors of the Stock Company will also meet on Saturday to arrange for the transfer of the buildings to the Society.

Shorthand.

Last week Mr. Geo. W. Goodwin was the recipient of the subjoined testimonials from the members of his short-hand class. They show Mr. Goodwin to be a most competent instructor of the art—

NAPANEE, April 9, 1884.

We, the undersigned, take great pleasure in testifying to the satisfactory manner in which Mr. G. W. Goodwin has instructed us in phonography, and we would advise all who wish to master this desirable art to to take a course of lessons from him.

Fatal Accident at Ottawa.

On Wednesday, 16th inst., Mr. Hamilton Lewis, son of Bishop Lewis of Ottawa, while in company with some friends on the Grand river, met with an accident which cost him his life. When they were nearing Shore at Blythe Point they observed a large piece of foam and rowed into it. Mr. Lewis was standing in the bow of the skiff [illegible]

Lumbering on the Mississippi.

A correspondent writes:—The Messrs. McLaren, Caldwell and Gilmore are making extensive preparations for the "drives." The two former on the Mississippi waters—which according to the late decision of the Privy Council is free to all—and the latter on the Schoote, its lakes and tributaries. Owing to litigation a large quantity of logs, some cut over three years, belonging to Messrs. Caldwell have not been driven, and these logs, some 65,000, besides 12,000 belonging to Mr. Sutherland, taken over the tramway last summer by the Gilmore firm, will be floated down their respective streams, as well as the past winter's cut, amounting to from eighty to one hundred thousand belonging to the Gilmore firm. The Messrs. McLaren will have about the same, if not more than one hundred thousand, and there are some others, making even this low priced lumber season pretty brisk for driving.

Danger Signals.

Reader, if you are troubled with pain, weakness, weariness and a dragging feeling in the small of the back, with thick—high colored—slimy urine, then you have alarming signals of danger, and should resort to Burdock Blood Bitters, the grand kidney regulator and blood and liver cleansing tonic.

A Handy Surgeon.

As a dressing for all manner of flesh wounds there is nothing better than Hagyard's Yellow Oil. It cleanses, allays pain, subdues inflammation and heals without a scar or stiffness of the parts injured. It is equally valuable as a pain remedy for internal use.

Don't be Giddy.

Many people are troubled with giddiness or dizziness, which is generally a sign of disordered digestion or unequal circulation. Burdock Blood Bitters restores the digestive powers, promotes a healthy circulation of the vital fluids, allays nervous irritation, thus curing headache and giddiness.

Mr. Lewis was standing in the bow of the skiff and in endeavoring to strike at at what he thought to be a piece of solid ice was engulfed. His companions were so horror stricken that they for a few moments could not render him any assistance and in that time his body was drawn under by the current. Immediately upon hearing of the accident a large party went to the spot where it occurred and endeavored to recover the body, but it was not until Monday last that their efforts were rewaarded. The body was found about sixty yards from where the accident occurred. The family have the entire sympathy of the community in their deep affliction. On Sunday last in nearly all the churches in Ottawa condolence was publicly expressed.

In St. Mary Magdalene's Church on Sunday last prayers were offered for the bereaved family.

Licenses Granted.

At a meeting of the License Commissioners for Lennox, held on Tuesday, Mr. John Webster was elected chairman in the place of Hon. John Stevenson, deceased. The following applications were granted :—

ADOLPHUSTOWN.—Hotel, Wm. Pull.

AMHERST ISLAND.—Hotel, Wm. Dempster and Wm. McDonald.

BATH.—Hotel, Duncan Wemp & Son and Peter Amey; shop, E. G. Ferren and Daniel McBride.

ERNESTTOWN STATION.—Hotel, Isiah Beaubiah.

NAPANEE.—Hotel, Alex. Leslie, Charles Cornell, Robert McDonald, John Wheeler, Peter Huffman, John McKillop, N. B. Empey and Patrick McAlpin; shop, John Grant and M. W. Pruyn & Son.

ODESSA.—Hotel, Joseph Sproul, Fletcher Switzer, Abel A. Babcock and Henry Hunter.

On the application of Mrs. D. M. Davey for a hotel on Hog Island, decision was reserved.

Hotel licenses were refused James O'Brien and Andrew Donovan of Roblin, the Dunkin Bill being in force in that township.

POLICE COURT.

[Before Mr. Charles James, J.P.]

MONDAY, April 21.—Mrs. Elizabeth Lester lodged a complaint against Thos. Fox of this town for assault, said to have been committed on Saturday night last. The case was ventilated in the police court to-day, and after hearing the evidence the magistrate dismissed the case. It appears that Mrs. Lester, who is from Richmond, has many admirers of the sterner sex of whom Fox aspired to be a favored one, although she repelled his advances. Mr. W. G. Wilson appeared for the defendant..... Mr. Abram Sills, fishery inspector, had John Gilchrist summoned for drawing the seine in Big Creek without a license. Adjourned for one week.

TUESDAY, April 22. Constable Holmes ran Nelson Hartman into the station to-day for being drunk and very disorderly.

WEDNESDAY, April 23.—Nelson Hartman was fined $2 and costs, in all $6, for being drunk and disorderly yesterday. He thought he got off very easily.

CUPIDITY AND CRIME.

"He—Lord de Gretton—did not speak until we reached the cottage," Nora said, in a low frightened voice, as though the sound of her own words alarmed her; "and then—I cannot tell you; it was dreadful—it seemed as though some demon took possession of him. He pushed me into a chair, and stood over me, with his eyes,—he had such strange eyes Arthur!—sunk far back in his head, but very bright; and how they blazed as though a fire burned beneath his heavy lids. Oh, I see them so often in my dreams—I can see them now!"

She paused, with a strong shudder and a look of deadly terror. But the entreaty of Arthur's face was more potent even than the old haunting fear. Conquering the tremor, she went on bravely—

"He told me that I had deceived and entrapped him—I, who would have died far more gladly than marry him—that I was a false wife—a woman he could never trust again. At first I tried to answer him; but he would not hear me. He cut my explanation short with that bitter little laugh of his, and went on and on, in a cold, smooth, merciless voice, saying the cruellest things in the quietiest fashion, till at last I really ceased to understand him. His words seemed to bruise and hurt my brain like so many blows, but not to convey to it any coherent idea. I suppose he saw this, for he suddenly bent forward, seized me by the shoulder, and shook me, bringing his face so close to mine that I could not keep back a startled cry.

"'You are hysterical, my lady, worn out and exhausted by the fatigues and excitements of the day,' he said, with grim, horrible mockery. 'Your maid shall show you to your room. In your present state of excitement you had better keep it for the remainder of the evening.'

"'I understand; I am a prisoner,' I said slowly.

"'By no means,' he answered, with an angry snarl. 'We will not shock the servants with a key; you are indisposed—a fitting subject for strong tea and sal-volatile, as your maid will reading believe. You are by no means a prisoner—only understand'—his hand closed again in a cruel grip upon my shoulder, and again my heart died within me in a chill deadly fear—'only understand that I shall be on guard the whole evening in this room. So, if you have a fancy for any more stolen meetings with your lover——'

"In spite of the craven fear that paralyzed me, Arthur, I broke in then; the insult was too cruel, the wrong too great for even cowardice to bear.

"'I met Mr. Beaupre by accident, and we have parted for ever,' I began; but he cut me savagely short.

"'That is my business—I will see to that,' he said, in a low grating voice that was in itself a threat. 'With both of you I have a long account to settle; but not now—not now.'

"Arthur, to this day I cannot tell what impulse moved me in that moment to do the last thing I should ever have thought of doing a second or so before. Until then I had hated him as a slave hates a hard and cruel master to whom he is down, till it lingered on the placid splendour of the sea—and, look where I would, no flying figure was in sight. It was a dream, thank Heaven—a dream only!

"I sank back in my chair, ashamed to find how intense was my feeling of reliief, how strong a hold the vanished vision had had upon me. It was long before I could control the wild throbbing of my heart, or regain anything like composure; but it came at last; and, worn out and exhausted, I once more dozed off, to be once more roused by a long moan of pain.

"This time, however, the sound did not cease with my slumber, as I sat, cold and shaking, in the chill gray morning light. I heard it again, and yet again—a sound to freeze the blood in your veins, a sound like the moan of a wounded animal too weak to cry aloud.

"Almost mechanically, conscious in an unconscious way that that piteous sound had reached no ear but mine, I rose to my feet, and, obeying some impulse beyond my own control, descended the stairs and entered the little room in which Lord de Gretton had told me he should be 'on guard.' I found—— Oh, Arthur, is it any wonder that the sight I looked on drove me mad?"

She broke down in a passion of hysterical tears; Arthur let her cry, restraining his impatience by a giant effort for her sake. In such tears lay the best medicine for the overwrought nerves and overtaxed brain.

He held one hand within his own strong clasp, in firm assurance of his sympathy; but it was not till the sobs had died away, and the girl tried to smile gratefully through her tears, that he spoke at all—then he said gently—

"Do not dwell on details that distress you, but finish the story, like my own brave girl. You found Lord de Gretton—dead?"

"Not dead, but dying," she said in a low shaking voice. "He still lived when I knelt beside him, but that was all. The blood ran like a river round him; it was on my dress, my hands—everywhere; and his face was white—oh, so horribly white! I should have thought him dead but for the dreadful glitter of his eyes and that broken cry—it was faint as the faintest whisper. Then I tried to raise his head, to cry aloud; but my voice failed, and he motioned me back. He tried to move, to speak, failed, and closed his eyes—tried again, and, by a supreme effort, jerked out one word—the word that had been the haunting key-note to my dream—'Olivia;' and so, with a brief convulsive struggle, he died."

"And you?" Arthur Beaupre asked, in tones of infinite compassion, as he laid his hand on the down-bent head, and thanked Heaven in his inmost heart that even this ray of light, faint and uncertain as it was, had pierced the darkness of the night and given promise of the dawn at hand.

"I"—the sweet voice was sharpened by keen pain, the sweet uplifted eyes were filled with self-reproachful light—"I was not brave, Arthur; I was not what you called me. I dropped like a dead thing by Lord de Gretton's side, and, when I awoke, it was broad day. It was too late to summon help, too late for anything. Cristine; I am not dead, and you can give me up to justice with a word."

CHAPTER XXVI.

Lady Olivia Blake sat in the tiny luxuriously-furnished nest she called her own snuggery, awaiting with some impatience the arrival of an expected guest. It was barely twilight—a rosy glow still lingered in the western sky; but her ladyship's curtains were all drawn, and the light of a dozen wax candles not being considered enough to illuminate the small room, a large moderator lamp upon a centre-table diffused a bright radiance around. Light was a craze with Lady Olivia; the sun could never blaze too fully into every corner of her house; and, when the sun retired, she could not supply his place with too many lights. Naturally her elder feminine friends wondered among themselves that "dear Olivia, with whom complexion was never a strong point," and who, since her disappointment, had grown quite too dreadfully pinched, and thin, and sallow, should care to throw such a strong revealing light upon her fading charms; and one especially intimate individual, who felt that such an absurd illumination was a wrong to her elaborate "make-up," ventured to remonstrate with her on the subject.

"I love the dark because my deeds are evil perhaps," she said, with a deprecating smile; "but, though your conscience may be clear, my dear Olivia, you should have some mercy on your visitors' complexions."

"The sun that comes here will not scorch them," was the short and barely courteous answer.

"Scorch them! No; but"—with a little shoulder-shrug and prettily affected laugh—"though you disdain them, there are secrets of the toilette, you know."

Lady Olivia regarded her friend, a fair faded woman about her own age, but dressed in ultra-girlish fashion, with a sort of civil sneer upon her thin scarlet lips, but a savage and apparently uncalled-for anger in her great dark eyes.

"Such secrets will not hang you, even if they are found out," she said, so brusquely that the offended lady rose to take her departure. "I am sorry to annoy you, Harriet; but I cannot live in total darkness, even in deference to 'rouge' and 'blanc de perle.'"

Naturally the indignant lady did not repeat her warning or her visit. Naturally, also, the story of "Lady Olivia's odd rudeness, and very unpleasant whim" spread about, and other ladies, whose complexions were not impeccable, or who had a nervous dread of eccentricity, ceased to call at the little house in Mayfair, which had been so pleasant a rendezvous in other days. Little by little old friends fell off and old acquaintances dropped away. It seemed as though a curse had fallen on the handsome Spanish-looking woman with the dark passionate face and haunting eyes—who, seen in every crowd, was always seen alone.

And, next to being in darkness, to be alone was the thing that Lady Olivia Blake most hated in the world. She was a proud woman, and had hitherto been a markedly exclusive one, closing her doors rigidly to those who were not of her own social standing, however meritorious, or fascinating, or popular they might be.

impulse moved me in that moment to do the last thing I should ever have thought of doing a second or so before. Until then I had hated him as a slave hates a hard and cruel master to whom he is hopelessly consigned. His look had never been more threatening, his words more cruel—and yet all in a moment a flood of light seemed to rush upon me. I saw things by its clear lustre no longer from my point of view, but from his—saw that he had wrong to complain of and disappointments to endure, that, where he trusted, he had—though, Heaven knows, most innocently—been deceived. The impulse was like a revelation; I obeyed it as unhesitatingly.

"'Lord de Gretton,' I said humbly, 'try to belive me, try to forgive.

"But he snatched away his hand as though my fingers burned him, his eyes shone with their evil glitter, his voice literally trembled with passion, as he said between his teeth—

"'Never, so long as we may live! I never trust a traitress; and, if you wish to know how I forgive the women who have wronged me, ask Lady Olivia Blake.'

"They were the last words he ever spoke to me, Arthur. No wonder that they linger in my mind.' I hardly understood them then; but afterwards, when all things were confused and misty in my thoughts, those words rang in my ears incessantly."

She paused again, her hands tightly locked, her eyes gazing into the deepening shadows of the night with a strained and painful intensity. Arthur did not dare to speak, to hasten in any way the disclosure that was so slow to come.

"The hours seemed long — horribly long, Arthur—and yet I must have passed them in a sort of trance. Long after my maid had left me for the night I sat by the open window, thinking, thinking in a maze of misery, till I fell into a dull heavy sleep—a sleep that left me no consciousness of my present surroundings—only an abiding sense of pain and fear. And, while I slept, Arthur, I dreamed a dream—such a strangely vivid, dreadful dream that I woke from it trembling from head to foot, and with great drops of perspiration on my forehead. I thought that, while Lord de Gretton sat writing in the room below, with his heart full of bitterness and anger, a shadow came nearer and nearer; and I knew that it came to do him harm. I saw its outline clearly in the moonlight, tall, black, and slender, a graceful woman's shape. The face was hidden; but I caught the glitter of fierce eyes, and in the small white hand another glitter that made my heart stand still. I tried to scream, to warn the man, who never raised his head, of the dreadful thing that drew nearer every moment; but horror had paralyzed my every faculty. I could not stir or cry. I heard a sharp cry of pain, a clear and cruel laugh, the sound of shunting voices, and a heavy fall. Then the spell that held me seemed suddenly to snap, and in an agony of terror I—awoke!

"So it had been but a dream after all! I was still in the velvet chair by the open window. Stillness perfect and intense reigned around. Far up in the clear depths of the heavens the moon shone with brightness, making each [illegible] of the garden [illegible] terrace to [illegible] called me. I dropped like a dead thing by Lord de Gretton's side, and, when I awoke, it was broad day. It was too late to summon help, too late for anything. I think I went mad in that moment, Arthur! The sight of the rigid motionless figure, of the blood that lay around me, that stiffened on my dress, my hands, my feet, the hopelessness of my own future, a craven fear of the life that seemed so incomprehensibly cruel—all seemed to stir me to a sudden frenzy, and bid me take my fate in my own hands. I forgot all these things — conscience, religion, duty—all but the sweet and easy death that awaited me there at the cliff's foot; and, like a thing possessed, I rushed to meet it. You know the rest," she said, with a strained sob. "Heaven sent my better angel, Nettie, to my rescue; and for all the months that followed I remembered little more—nothing but the absolute devotion with which Vance and she have watched, and tended, and sacrificed themselves to me—me, whom they thought a murderess!"

The shadows had gathered unnoticed round the young pair as they sat absorbed in their own conversation; only the faint moonlight and the uncertain glimmer of the lamp across the street lighted the room now. Arthur stood by the window, looking out abstractedly, his whole thought engrossed by the story he had heard. Suddenly he turned to Nora—who, lost in a painful reverie, sat by the table—and spoke quickly, with a nervous jar in his voice—

"Nora, dearest, go away for a little while to your room. A lady has just come into the house, and I think—I fear —— Go, dearest, to please me!"

A little surprised, but unquestioningly obedient, Nora rose at once and moved towards the door; it opened in her face, and disclosed Cristine Singleton!

Nora recognized her step-sister at once; but Cristine, whose veil of spotted net confused her vision, and whose eyes were not trained to the dusk, naturally concluded that the slender form was that of Mrs. Vance Singleton.

"My dear sister," she cried, with outstretched hand, and her most fascinating smile, "I have come, in spite of Vance's prohibition, to make acquaintance with Vance's wife. I know we shall love each other dearly."

She bent her fair head with the words, prepared to imprint the kiss that is the absolutely necessary seal of friendships feminine. Nora drew aside instinctively; the one clear line of light fell straight across the fair proud face, defining it with startling effect against the blackness of the surrounding shadows.

Cristine grew absolutely livid; a cry rose to her lips, but it found no utterance. Recognition was instantaneous, and as instantaneous was the paralysing terror that seemed turning her to stone.

"Nora," she cried at last, in a hoarse broken voice—"Nora—or—or——"

She paused, trembling from head to foot, oppressed with the horror of a supernatural presence; then, as Nora neither moved [illegible] suddenly up[illegible] a proud woman, and had hitherto been a markedly exclusive one, closing her doors rigidly to those who were not of her own social standing, however meritorious, or fascinating, or popular they might be. But now, in her pitiful yearning for human companionship, she seemed to lose all pride and exclusiveness, to throw her doors widely open to all who would enter within them.

But even this sudden relaxation did not satisfy her craven desire to escape from herself, her eagerness for society at any price. Pushing parvenues, who were at first flattered by the warmth of Lady Olivia's welcome, and rather disposed to plume themselves on the acquisition of so distinguished a friend, were not slow to discover that there was but a small amount of honor and glory to be got mixing in the motley mob that the eccentric lady gathered round her. And, when they discovered also that for this more than doubtful privilege they were required to pay the price of absolute submission to all the caprices of a passionate ungoverned nature and a despotic will, they too found the game not worth the candle and fell away.

So it came to pass that, just at the time of Cristine Singleton's return to England, Lady Olivia had taken to haunting theatres, concerts, exhibitions—whatsoever places were crowded and well lit. That was all that mattered to her apparently. She never cared whether the entertainmene offered were good or bad. The great haggard eyes, with their unchanging look of mingled scorn and pain, seldom rested on stage or picture, and never with the least pretence of interest.

Baron Benjuda, who, in his two years' absence from London society, had fallen a little behind the gossip of the times, had hastened at sight of her to renew an intimacy that had hitherto been of the slightest character. A bow and a few civily-spoken words were as much as he expected the proud lady to accord him; but to his amazement, he received the welcome of an old and much-prized friend.

Lady Olivia seemed as though she could not bear to part with him; and, when at last he tore himself away from the flattering eagerness of her questions as to his life abroad and the probability of his again leaving England for so long a period, he found himself pledged to visit her next day. He was too shrewd a man not to surmise some reason for this sudden and startling change of manner—too much a man not to be subtilely flattered by it, suspicious though it was.

"Can she want to borrow money?" he speculated amusedly, as he sauntered back to Cristine; but he soon dismissed that idea as improbable.

He knew all about Lady Olivia Blake, as he knew all about most people. Her jointure was small, but she lived well within her income, and would be the last person in the world to sacrifice her pride for pecuniary help.

"Well, she is a mystery; but what woman is not?" he added, dismissing the subject with a well-pleased shrug of his expansive shoulders. "She has fallen off [illegible]ly in her looks. Never saw a woman changed in all my life! The blood tells when you get into the [illegible] I suppose; and of course she [illegible]tton's death. Still, in every[illegible]uty, she is greatly improved.

I shall certainly cultivate her—for the sake of Cristine."

And cultivate her he did, though much at first against Cristine's will. He was a little startled certainly when he learned that his fair betrothed was the step-sister of that unhappy Lady de Gretton whose tragic story he knew but in imperfect outline; but, when he found that Lady Olivia made no objection on that score, but rather caught eagerly at the proffered intimacy, he laughed Cristine's scruples resolutely away.

"It will be a capital thing for you, Cris; the very fact of her being De Gretton's cousin makes the friendship more desirable. Of course the wretched girl was really no relation of yours, and you were in no way mixed up in her affairs. Why, Cris, what a ghost you look!"

"I cannot bear to—to talk of that time!" faltered Cristine.

"Then you shall not talk of it," the Baron said, pinching the pale cheek till the color came. "Talk of your wedding-dress, or Lady Olivia Blake!"

So the two women drifted together again, and Lady Olivia Blake—who, in the old days, had been barely conscious of Miss Singleton's existence—now took the oddest fancy to her, and seemed hardly happy when out of her sight. Even the Baron, who at first watched the growing friendship with much complacency, grew at last a little jealous of the frequency with which she claimed Cristine.

"It is all very well in its way," he grumbled; "but I never get you to myself for an hour now. Lady Olivia is here, or you are at Lady Olivia's. Honestly, Cristine, do you not get a little tired of her ladyship, handsome and agreeable as she is?"

"Not tired," the girl said with a little shudder, "but—but, Israel, at times—I am afraid."

"Afraid!" Benjuda turned her round, laying a weighty hand on either shoulder, and looking amusedly into the strangely troubled face. "Why, you nervous goose, what harm do you think she will do you?"

"I think at times—she is mad," Cristine said slowly.

"By George, I should not wonder!" The Baron released his captive, and nodded two or three times, as confirmatory circumstances rushed into his mind. "That is the key to the riddle, is it?"

He stood thoughtfully considering the matter for a few minutes, then turned with startled fondness to Cristine.

"My darling," he said, throwing one arm round the slender waist, and drawing the fair head down upon his shoulder, "I have been wrong to let you run so great a risk; you shall not stay in Green Street again."

There was real emotion in the full voice, real tenderness in the dark heavy-lidded eyes. After all, it is not necessary to be young, handsome, or aristocratic to feel genuinely, and even nobly; and the fat elderly Baron was as deeply stirred by the thought of peril to his betrothed as the most of romantic lovers could have been.

That Cristine was touched by his unfeigned concern was evident. She had won much admiration, but hitherto little love had fallen to her lot; she found, much to her own surprise, that she was

MADAGASCAR.

A Country of Gigantic Wild Animals, Poisonous Spiders and Barbarous People.

"How did you like the country?" asked a Cincinnati Enquirer reporter, of a sailor just from Madagascar.

"Like it! Why, there isn't a redeeming feature about it. Why, it was enough to sicken one to see what the people eat, there. In the market at Tamatava I have seen great heaps of small locusts dried and exposed for sale. They were about half roasted, and made me sick to look at them. There are no roads—barely bridle-paths—through the woods, and travel is accomplished on foot or in palanquins—long bamboo poles borne on the shoulders of natives. The interior of the country is filled with dense forests, and during the rainy seasons great quantities of decaying vegetable matter are brought down. There is a great deal of lake and marsh on the coast and plains boardering on the sea, and these give rise to the Malagasy fever. The only remedies the natives use are hot baths and herbs, which induce perspiration. Quinine is also used in large quantities. You can judge of the unhealthiness of the country, for the French, who for years have tried to establish colonies there, called it "the churchyard," and the Dutch, who were equally unsuccessful, named it the 'dead island.'"

"Do many wild animals abound there?"

"The woods are full of them; vicious, venomous serpents of extraordinary size. Not snakes but huge serpents—bodies as big as a man's, and thirty or forty feet long; powerful enough to kill a horse or swallow an ox. They hang down from the limbs in the forests, and snatch up the natives going along, and making a breakfast of one with as much unconcern as a fly taps a sugar-cork. Near Andavaka Menarana, is a deep cave called the "Serpent's Hole," and it is so full of them that they frequently drive the villagers all indoors.

"Then they have a sort of monkey, there, called the 'aye-aye.' It has teeth like a chisel, and a claw with a prong, or hook to it. It lives on bugs that it digs out of the trees. And then the rivers swarm with crocodiles, the biggest I ever saw. These the natives worship as water gods, and are superstitious about killing them. They try to propitiate the creatures by prayers, and throwing in charms of ody, but their virtue is owing to the noise and shouting and beating the water with which the offering of the ody is always accompanied. Why, these animals eat up all the sheep and hogs, and even larger cattle that come anywhere near the banks; and they don't refuse women and children, who venture near. At Itasy, which is a fine lake, sixty miles west of the capital, the people believe that if a crocodile be killed a human life will, within a very short time, be exacted by the monster's brother relatives, as an atonment for the death. When I was there some Frenchmen shot several, and they had to leave the country at once, or the people would have murdered them.

In the Hands of the Russian Police.

In Russia every one who has the misfortune to fall into the hands of the police as a political offender—no matter how trivial his offense may be—is, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, a lost man. The preliminary detention is made at the arbitrary pleasure of the prosecution, which in Russia is another name for the police; they can arrest and detain whom they will. No blame attaches to a mistaken arrest; on the contrary, the more arrests the greater the merits of the prosecutor. For instance, at the time of the trial of the "hundred and ninety-three" in 1878, there were, over and above this number of the accused, about 1,400 persons arrested. Of these half were set at liberty after a few months, but the remainder were kept in prison during the whole four years that the case lasted; save only 75 who died, some by suicide, some of consumption, some insane. And in more recent times, when the white terror followed upon outbreaks of revolutionary terrorism, and especially in the reign of Alexander III.—who invented a species of political proconsuls, such as Strelmikoff, to devastate towns and provinces, and arrest right and left—the severities have been even greater. But I have no positive figures at hand. The normal penalties for political crimes are simply Draconian—10 years at the galleys for a single speech or for reading or preserving a proclamation. And whenever a prosecution follows an outbreak, the tribunal receives special orders to aggravate the penalties so as to make "a salutary example," and the verdicts become legal assassinations of the most monstrous character. The lad Rosovsky was condemned to death and actually hanged at Kiev on the 5th of March, [illegible] for merely having in his house a proclamation of the Executive Committee. The same judgment was passed on the student Efremoff for having lent a room in his house to two revolutionists who were concerting a plan of escape without even taking their young host into confidence. But his sentence was commuted to a life-long condemnation to the galleys in consequence of his having the weakness to appeal for mercy. Drobiasgin, Maidansky, Lisogub, Tehubaroy, were all hanged—some for having subscribed money to the revolutionary cause, others for conveying a box, of which they did not know the contents, but which was proved to contain notes for a circular drawn up by two or three youths, offenses, one and all, which the actual law of the country punishes only with exile or a few years of imprisonment.

A Choir Anecdote.

In the April Century, the Rev. Dr. Charles S. Robinson continues his discussion of the annoyances and humors of the musical service in churches, and relates this anecdote.

"Glorious Easter was at hand, and great preparations were made in the rural parish, for its celebration; boughs were twined in the arches of the building; flowers swung in wreaths overhead, and shone in beautiful baskets among the aisles; children had been rehearsing carols. All the town came in on that notable morning. It was a scene never to be won much admiration, but [illegible]berto little love had fallen to her lot ; she found, much to her own surprise, that she was beginning to attach an odd value to it. She had not yet reached the point of returning it—the small amount of honest affection she had to bestow she had given unasked to Arthur Beaupre, and that love, flung back upon itself, had turned to gall and poisoned her whole nature ; but she had grown to feel that, if Benjuda's trust in her were withdrawn, and her betrothal broken, she would lose more, far more than the rank and wealth that had been his sole attractions when she first sought to win him.

$13,000,000 from Making Gunpowder.

Mr. Lammot Dupont, who was killed recently by the explosion at Thompson's Point, is said to have been worth $13,000,000. He had a controlling interest in the manufacture of nearly all the high explosives that were made in the United States and Canada east of the Rocky Mountains. Ten million pounds of these materials were consumed in the country in 1882. The Repauno Company's works at Thompson's Point produced one-third of this amount. He is credited with having organized a combination of all the makers of high explosives. When negotiating with the Panama Canal Company for the powder to be used in that work he guaranteed to supply twelve tons of Atlas powder daily if that amount were needed.

One of the most daring achievements recorded in the history of the present century is one of which he was the central figure. During the Crimean war the Russian Government ran short of powder, and the explosive was required to continue the defence of Sebastopol. A cargo was purchased from the Duponts in this country, and was placed in a steamship lying off Baltimore. The British had frigates posted in waiting outside the Chesapeake. After seven feints the watchers were eluded and a chase began across the Atlantic, through Gibraltar, and up the Mediterranean sea. With remarkably good fortune the vessel passed through the Bosphorus and into the Black Sea unchecked ; but when nearing the place of contention the English war ships hailed the stranger. Young Dupont was at the helm himself, and insisted that the vessel proceed, not heeding the signals from the war ships. Two broadsides were fired into the vessel, but she was able to steam ahead and steer through the rocks, and was beached inside the Russian lines. This daring adventure saved the cargo, for which the Russian Government paid the sum of $3,000,000.

Throughout the civil war the family rendered distinguished services to the Government, and at the very beginning of the rebellion Mr. Lammot Dupont was placed in a position by which, through his energy and genius, the country was supplied with the means of defence for the ensuing conflict.—Philadelphia Record.

beetles, sand-flies and mosquitoes as big as beetles, and whose sting hurts like a dog's bite. The ants are the greatest pests I ever saw. They eat every article of provision or apparel ; scarcely any precaution can elude their vigilance and cunning. They raise a hollow cylinder of earth perpendicularly toward their object, and through it, as by a ladder, they [illegible] by thousands. They are terrible [illegible] of the sick ; they will reach the bed in a night't time, though hung at a distance from the ground, when their bite, like scalding water poured upon the skin, is more intolerable than the disease itself. The sand-flies and mosquitoes were terrible plagues, but nothing to compare with the wild bees, who would swarm in the bed-rooms, and sting every intruder.

"Locusts come two or three times in a summer, and eat up everything green. But nature is so prolific here that in eight days the verdure will be all out again. There were baboons as big as good-sized boys. There are two kinds of spiders whose bite is deadly. One, a small, black fellow, is called menarody. Those who are bitten fall into a swoon, and their bodies become as cold as ice. The other one is called the foka, or crab-spider. The bite is followed by swelling, which begins at the part wounded, and spreads through the whole body. The animal is maroon-colored, and death ensues, in five hours. The woman are dirty, curly-headed creatures, blacker than coal, and wear is mply a cloth about their waist, only the higher class wearing shoes.

"Does the country have any commercial relations with the rest of the world ?"

"They ship horned cattle from the interior to the Island of Mauritius, if the crocodiles don't eat them up in fording the rivers before they reach the coast. They raise coffee and rice. Ebony is found and gum copal. Some trade is carried on in India-rubber, and a few years since an English company tried raising cotton, but I cannot say how successful they are. The great trouble with the country is that it is so extremely unhealthy for Europeans. It would take years to clean out the underbrush and drain the marshes. The missionaries claim to have made great headway here, both Roman Catholic and Protestant, but a new king or queen ascends the throne every now and then, who don't take much stock in them, and they are stoned to death by the doeen, fired alive, tied up to stakes, and in other cruel ways murdered."

The Wrong Word.

A ploughman frae the hills of Fife called Sandy, whose education had been finished before the days of the compulsory clause, had a habit of using the wrong word. When the Highland and Agricultural Society's Show was at Stirling Sandy went to see it. Meeting his master in the showyard, he was asked by that gentleman if he had seen the new sheaf-binder. Sandy replied that he had not, and his master volunteered to show it to him. The machine was in motion, and as the sheaf was bound and tossed aside, Sandy was asked what he thought of it. "Guid keep me, sir !" he replied, "the dimensions o' man are something awfu'."

aisles; children had been rehearsing carols. All the town came in on that notable morning. It was a scene never to be forgotten. The minister was radiant ; his eyes beamed with delight. But a thought struck him ! This audience, so happy, so generous, so enthusiastic—would they not hear him a moment for a stroke of business ? After the invocation and the first song, he surprised them with a proposition to bring 'Easter offerings' now and at once to God's altar, and lift the dear old church out of debt; oh, then there would be a resurrection! The congregation would come up from under its great stone in a new life, if they would roll it away! Then the plates went their course, and hearts were reached, and the heaps of money lay before the moistened eyes of the relieved pastor, as he tremulously thanked a good God for his people's fidelity in response,

"'The money is here, I am sure it is,' he exclaimed. 'If there be a little in arrears, it can be made up in a day; and now we are ready, heartily to go on with the worship of our risen Lord.'

"So the fixed programme proceeded. A little German had been procured from the metropolis for an annex to the tenor; his solo came in at this exact crisis of grateful emotion ; he rendered it with a fresh aplomb, though the consonants were awkward:

"'An' de det sall be raised—de det sall be raised—an' de det—an' de det—sall be raised—sall be raised—in de twinkling of an ay-ee!"

"Now it is quite safe to say that after the congregation went home, the theme of the day was dissipated, and the two events uppermost in every body's mind were the surprise which the eager minister had sprung upon the people and the ridiculous appropriateness of the declamatory solo which followed it. On general principles, we have no objection to the collection of money to discharge religious obligation, even in divine service; but it does seem a pity that a humorous episode should be the chief reminiscence of such a solemn occasion."

A Good Scotch Pun.

Two gentlemen had been fishing for salmon with a leister in one of the salmon rivers in the South of Scotland, when one of them having speared a fish drew it from the water, and holding it on high apostrophised it thus : "And noo, Mr. Salmon, what think ye o' yersel ?" The other gentleman, an inveterate punster, remarked : "I suppose he will say, 'I'm nane the better for your spearin'."

Employes of the Montour Iron and Steel Company, while digging sand near the State Insane Hospital, Danville, Pa. have unearthed two large Indian skeletons, also eleven small bells, one Indian buckle with pin attached, and one clay pipe over two inches in diameter, with stem three inches long. The teeth of the skeletons are perfectly formed and white. Tradition affirms that the delta on which Danville stands was formerly occupied by a warlike tribe, the Mahonings, and the exhumed remains are supposed to belong to that tribe. Crowds of relic hunters flocked to the place.

WORTH AND VIROT.

The Prince of Dressmakers and the Queen of Milliners—Their Shops and Idiosyncrasies.

The Rue de la Paix was never a greater power than to-day. Coroneted carriages stand before its doors, princesses alight and mount the gloomy stairways. Pilgrims come from Russia, America, and from all the remote and civilized parts of the globe and patiently wait audience.

Here are found the great arbiters of fashion, chief among them Worth and Virot. Worth occupies the great hotel, 7 Rue de la Paix. Long corridors lead toward the salons d'attente. Here there is no attempt at display, the floors are softly carpeted, there are long mirrors and sufficiently comfortable chairs. The truly elegant appointments are the young women employed and the rich garments stowed like costly bric-a-brac in glass cases.

There is no better amusement, if one has the run of Worth's, than to sit in the salon and observe the procession of women that file through. It is only then one feels the sacredness of dress and the greatness of its priest. When it is a possible thing Worth deludes his visitors with some one of his satellites. If they are not acquainted with his personnel he can easily do this, for when the calm-mannered, easy gentleman appears in answer to their desire, modestly expressed, to see Mr. Worth, they are usually so awe-stricken at the contemplated interview that it does not occur to them to doubt his identity. No one could be more unlike his chief than this usual representative, so suave, so mild, so self-possessed; all of which Mr. Worth is not, since he wears the idiosyncratic marks of genius—that is to say, being short, stout, and red—and he is irritable and bristles with points.

It is when the women come whose lives apparently hang on a personal interview that one gets a really realizing sense of the greatness of his power. I have not seen an ambassadress, a woman accustomed to command, weep in the presence of a number of other women at his refusal to come out from his secret recesses where his busy brain elaborates numerous and artistic toilets, but I have seen her supplicate and humbly entreat, her eyes suffused with tears, which only did not trinkle down, and thus give me every opportunity to describe her agony of mind.

This was the occasion of a really remarkable scene. After a time Worth was persuaded to appear, and the great lady dried her eyes. It was not one woman now he had to encounter, but a half a dozen, who, if they had not the courage to drag him forth from his hiding, knew how to take advantage of his presence. The ambassadress was a lady of fine personal presence, a blonde cendree. Evidently with no keen perceptions of dress, she had arrayed herself in the most distinguished toilet her dressmaker had provided her with, but one which bore no possible relation to her own physical advantages. A shudder did not run over the great man as he contemplated her while she was making known her desires, but he shut his eyes, as if the sight were more than he could quite bear. Then, peries, in his bold combinations of color, and au fond in his good sense.

One idiosyncrasy may be added. A friend of mine was much addicted to the wearing of violets. She observed that every time she visited Worth he made some excuse to avoid seeing her. Finally she persisted one day for an interview. He then sent her down word he had noticed that she always wore violets, and as their odor made him ill, he could only consent to see her if she would remove her flowers. As these were the days following the fall of the empire, and as violets are the Napoleonic flower, she readily comprehended how sensitive he had become to their fragrance.

Virot, whose spacious rooms are further down the street, near the Rue Daunon, formerly Rue Neuve St. Augustin, owed her good fortune directly to the Empress Eugenie. In those early days she was a little milliner on a back street. She had, however, a genius for striking effects, and the Empress driving by caught a glimpse in the window of one of her daring creations. No one could more quickly appreciate an artistic novelty than the Empress Eugenie. She bought the bonnet, affected Virot thereafter, and the milliner's fortune was assured.

She is now a great lady and her cabinet is more thoroughly sealed than that of Worth. The most curious part of her clientele is the American milliner. She comes often from Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Kansas. Her great difficulty is that she knows what she wants. She has seen something in Cleveland, Ruincy, or Omaha that came from Virot's and she wants something like that, with possibly some variations in her own mind that she strives to make plain. But one does not go to Virot to give ideas, but to buy them for a great price. The elegant young women who represent Mme. Virot in several languages do not know what to do with this impossible person. The interview, however prolonged, usually ends satisfactorily; the French ladies succeed in selling the sort of bonnets that they consider appropriate to those unknown but presumably uncivilized regions, and the lady from the West departs happy in the possession of things from Virot's.—Demorest's Monthly.

The Origin of Rain.

Various theories have been advanced to account for the formation of raindrops, but the most satisfactory explination is that proposed by Professor Osborne Reynolds. The minute particles of which clouds are composed are moving downwards in consequence of the attraction of gravity; but by reason of the resistance which the air offers to their descent, they are only moving very slowly. Since, however, the resistance offered to the passage of large drops is much smaller in proportion to their weight than that offered to small drops, it follows that the large drops will descend faster than the smaller ones, and will overtake them, coming into collision with any which are in the direct line of their descent. When two drops collide they will unite to form a larger drop, which will descend with increased velocity, sweeping up all smaller drops in its path, and thus increasing in size until it emerges from the cloud. Since many clouds are several miles in

AN EAST INDIAN MUSICAL.

A Nautch Girl Singing "My Ballentine," and "God Save the Queen."

Last Friday we were invited to a native musical entertainment at a Rajah's residence. The grounds, or compound, as they say here, were all lighted with glasses filled with cocoanut oil put upon frames, making a very fairy-like appearance as we drove up. A spacious porte cochere received the guests, while armed men in red uniforms stood about, and all the way up the broad staircase men were stationed in handsome dresses, while tropical plants stood about, and arches of evergreen, interspersed with flowers, were thrown over the doorways. Finally we reached the presence of the little Rajah himself, who was attired in a white satin turban, adorned with a blazing spray of diamonds headed with an immense ruby; a long coat or polonaise of green satin, with medals hung upon it; a string of precious stones depending from his neck, and some silk trousers completed his costume. Such a looking little fellow he was, with his prominent teeth, insignificant figure, small hands, and homely features. But I suppose he has money enough to sink a ship twice over.

The room where the musical entertainment took place was fitted up like a small theatre, with a stage and scenery. The instruments were handsome and curious in the extreme, and such noises as they made were enough to drive Theodore Thomas into an insane asylum! Their drums are shaped something like a barrel, with tapering ends, and are called tom-toms. Some of the stringed instruments really sounded very well, One of the performers was a comic singer who came out, sat down upon his haunches, and shook his head in a most surprising manner, and sung most dolorously upon three or four notes. The curious pair of trumpets that were placed upon the outside of the throat, upon the vocal chords, and played by the motion of these same muscles, was an astonishing performance. Then they had a Nautch dance by a girl who was gorgeously apparalled and fairly loaded with elegant jewels upon her toes, ankles, fingers, arms, ears, and nose, representing a fortune upon her small person. The so-called dancing is more like posturing, a gentle motion back and forth causing the bells on her ankles to tinkle. She was accompanied by three native musicians, and sang in the most nasal, forlorn, and monotonous manner imaginable. To end up with and please the English audience she sang something about "My Ballantine," meaning valentine, we supposed, it being the 14th of February, and then ended with "God Save the Queen," without which no performance is complete in this loyal country. Dusky waiters in white turbans and dresses passed champagne around on handsome salvers, and a fine supper was spread in a banqueting hall above stairs. Neither the Rajah nor his Hindoo servants would touch a particle of the same food we did. His poor wife was hidden away somewhere out of sight, where she could see, but not be exposed to the unhallowed gaze of men.

There was a fine library just adjoining the room where we were entertained, showing that our host was quite a learned little Hindoo. After supper, as we came down the great man as he contemplated her while she was making known her desires, but he shut his eyes, as if the sight were more than he could quite bear. Then, as if with great resolution, he opened them and fixed on her a peculiar gaze. It was a look as if attempting to see her, not as she was, but as she ought to be. It is for moments such as these one pays Worth large money. The other women sat by and devoured him in this, his great, supreme act, with concentrated gaze. Then, with a few rapid words, he sketched for his client the outline of a toilet for an occasion such as she desired. They gathered up his words like precious jewels; no one else spoke, and all felt the occasion to be something precious.

When he had finished and was about to go a wail of supplication broke forth: "Mr. Worth, you will think of me," "Mr. Worth, you will do something for me," "Mr. Worth, give me just one minute."

At that moment (for it seems Mr. Worth's retirement had been genuine several employees came in, eager also to catch his attention. First one, then another, sped him hastily some whispered question; others, trailing samples of rich silks, held them inquiringly before his eyes. Suddenly his face grew purplish red, the veins of his forehead swelled. He closed his eyes and shut tight his hands, as if in great tension—the gesture of a man putting with great effort a restraint upon himself—holding himself together, so to speak.

"They are killing me," he murmured. "They are all on my back; they are weighing me to the earth." The employees fell back awe-stricken. The wail of the women ceased, and dead silence fell on the room. The moment was really solemn, for the suffering of the man was too evident. In a short time he recovered himself, said a few words, and left the room.

Without doubt Mr. Worth is no longer a strong man. He saves himself, and everybody in the establishment desires to save him. Many people who take no very high grounds as to their duty to their individual shortcomings or good points are content to have Worth clothe at the least expense of time and trouble. The wardrobes are certainly supplied with the largest choice in elegant costumes, and different rooms are dedicated to different occasions. The unique feature provided for such visitors is the multitude of fashionably-dressed women ready to try on the various garments. In most places of the kind the grand division of feminine beauty are recognized—the blonde, the brunette, the tall, and the petite. But here we have the variations of these species, the blonde cendree, the warm blonde, and all the garments of hints down to those of the dusky Oriental. Ugliness has its place, and not only as deformity, a living model, but the different vicissitudes of life are provided for.

Worth garments are now too well known to need comment, but his much may be said in a general way; they are marked by simplicity of line and largeness of effect. He does not snip and cut and waste good cloth, and an admirable but unintentional result is that they make over well. Shirrings, folds and fine trimmings are conspicuous only by their absence. His strength lies in the grace of his draperies.

increased velocity, sweeping up all smaller drops in its path, and thus increasing in size until it emerges from the cloud. Since many clouds are several miles in thickness, it is easy to see that a particle descending from the upper part of the cloud may become a rain drop of considerable size before it emerges from the cloud. In their passage from the cloud to the earth the larger raindrops will overtake the small ones in a precisely similar way. At the same time the size of the drops may be slightly increased by the condensation of water from the air through which they are falling, or may be slightly diminished by partial evaporation from the surface of the drops. A falling raindrop ascends with a velocity which increases until the acceleration is balanced by the resistance of the air, after which the drop descends with uniform velocity. It is, of course, well known that large clouds may exist without any rain falling from them. In some cases rain is actually formed but evaporates and is again converted into vapor before it can reach the ground; in many cases the nonformation of rain is possibly due to the fact that under certain unknown atmospheric or other conditions the particles forming the clouds do not unite when they collide. As an agent of geological change, rain is of the greatest importance. It plays a large part in the disintegration of rocks and the formation of soils, washes the smaller particles into streams and rivers, and is, in fact, one of the most important of the various denuding agents. Indeed, since rain is the ultimate source of all of our brooks, river, &c., it may be said to be the principal agent of geological change on the earth's surface. The amount of the rainfall varies very considerable in different countries, and in different parts of the same country, depending on geographical position, the conformation of the surface of the ground, the proximity of large lakes and the sea, &c. The heaviest annual fall of rain occurs in the zone of calms over the equatorial region of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and on the west coasts of the British Isles, India, Norway, North and South America, and New Zealand. In all these latter districts the west wind blows over a large tract of ocean and becomes heavily charged with moisture, which it deposits when forced upwards by the action of the mountains on the coasts. The driest districts of the world are the desert regions of Africa and Asia. The amount of rain which falls in single showers is sometimes enormous, especially in the Tropics. In the British Isles one of the heaviest falls on record is a fall of 5.36 inches in twenty-four hours in Monmouthshire, July 14, 1875. On October, 25, 1836, at Gibraltar, there was a fall of 30.11 inches.—"Cassel's Concise Cyclopædia.

Easter cards with mediæval designs are the novelties this season.

"It was my invariable custom in my youth," says a celebrated Persian writer, "to rise from my sleep to watch, pray and read the Koran. One night, as I was thus engaged, my father, a man practiced in virtue, awoke, "Behold," said I to him, "thy other children are lost in irreligious slumber, while I alone am awake to praise God." "Son of my soul," said he, "it is better to sleep than to awake to remark the faults of thy brethren."

There was a fine library just adjoining the room where we were entertained, showing that our host was quite a learned little Hindoo. After supper, as we came down the staircase, our host met us at the foot, shaking hands, giving each a bouquet of roses and a small bunch of aromatic things to eat done up in a green leaf. We were also presented with a small dish of sandalwood oil, which we touched with our fingers, and that ended his good night to us. It seemed just like a page out of the "Arabian Nights." His name is Rajah Commandeur Sourindo Mebune Tagore,—Mus. Doc. He sent an exhibit of native musical instruments to the Foreign Exhibition in Boston, and they are now in Washington at the Smithsonian Institute.—East Indian Correspondence.

God's Power, Man's Duty.

The servants of God are made equal to the burdens laid upon them. If you have been truly brought to discipleship you will always be hungry for more truth. You say you hear a sermon every Sunday, and I say to you, What of it? What have you gained? Real healthy appetite does not lead a man to turn away from food because food of the same kind has been served to him before. No man can be sure that he is not in danger of morbid feeling in some direction. Divine power is always ready to be put in operation if we will keep the channels ready. You may take a sheet of paper and fill it with lines of ciphers, but they amount to nothing till you put the one at the beginning. Numbers in a church are idle unless the spirit of God leads them. Ask yourself if you have not been livfng below your privileges.—Dr. Hall.

Before publishing his book, "Study and Stimulants," Mr. A. Arthur Reade sent circulars to a large number of literary men, asking about their habits with respect to the use of alcohol, tobacco, etc., while engaged in literary work. The writer received 132 replies. Mr. Gladstone found that his "glass or two of claret at luncheon, the same at dinner, with the addition of a glass of light port, especially necessary to him at times of great intellectual exertion." Canon Farrar believed from experience that "work may be done more vigorously, and with less fatigue, without wine than with it." The editor says that no one of those who replied to his questions resorted to alcohol for inspiration. Thirty-four abstained wholly from alcohol; 27 used wine at dinner only; 26 used tobacco. Of the latter, only 13 smoked while at work; one chewed, and one took snuff. Mark Twain "required 300 cigars a month, which he found sufficient to keep his constitution on a firm basis," and Mr. Ruskin expressed his "entire abhorrence of the practice of smoking."

The following is the formula for the mucilage said to be used on United States postage-stamps—Dextrine, two ounces, acetic acid, one ounce, water, five ounces, alcohol one ounce; add the alcohol to the other ingredients when the dextrine is completely dissolved.

One holy action is a better argument against blasphemers than a thousand fine discourses.

English Governesses.

The position of governess is naturally an ambiguous one, and difficulties surround it on every side. As the profession is overcrowded, so it is almost inevitably underpaid. Ladies have drifted into the position because so very few other means of making a livelihood were open to them. This is as much as to say that thousands of women with no natural vocation for the task became teachers. At the best the relations between the governess and the family with which she lives are difficult. To keep them pleasant requires extraordinary tact and temper on both sides. A guest who is always there, a perpetual third beside husband and wife, has a hard part, and so have the wife and husband. The big brothers are a dreadful plague to governesses—the big brothers and the big cousins. These have a way of loafing in the school-room, and of expecting to find the children always ready to amuse them; which is naturally more annoying to the teacher.

Even worse than the war which big brothers are apt to wage with governesses is the chance that they may fall in love with the maidens. This causes a perpetual fear in the minds of some mothers, and here again is a new difficulty in this most arduous profession. While the family and the parents are most to blame if the life of a governess becomes a burden to her, it would be unfair to blink the fact that some governesses run ahead, so to speak, to meet trouble before it comes. They expect to be persecuted, and are on the lookout for slights and wrongs. It is difficult to blame a temper so natural, though so unlucky, in a young woman whose position is difficult, and whose past life has probably not been fortunate. Probably a partial solution for the problem of the position of governesses will be found in the education of girls at day schools. These are being much improved, with happy results to all concerned. The teachers at such schools are infinitely more independent than governesses can be.

Lord, pardon what I have been, sanctify what I am, and order what I shall be, that thine may be the glory, and mine the eternal salvation.

One of the most necessary adjuncts of a gentleman's attire, is a reliable and comfortable suspender, which will not give with a little strain, or rip off a button at an untoward moment. Such an article is to be found in the "Common Sense Suspender" manufactered by H. N. Fisk & Co., 277 King St. W., Toronto, which for ease, simplicity and durability, is certainly superior to all others. Having worn it, we know whereof we write. No buttons are required on the pants, there is no possibility of any strain on shoulder or pants, and the cost is no more than that of the ordinary braces of the same quality of web.

In a recent lecture in London before the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, Mr. Browne of the Royal College of Surgeons contended that the air of Italy had nothing whatever to do with the peculiar excellence of Italian voices. He showed that but a small proportion of the singers in Italian opera are Italians. He warned singers against concert rooms in which smoking is al-

—All the latest novelties in linen and lace collars, ties, fichus, etc. C. F. Henderson.

—The street sprinkler was out for the first time this season on Wednesday.

—Remember the meeting of the Queen's birthday celebration committee to-night.

—Mr. A. H. Allison has purchased the stock of Mr. J. A. Smith at a very low rate and is selling off at a great sacrifice.

—Some cheap new feed at Close's Mills.

—Get your horse route bills printed at THE EXPRESS office. Large assortment of cuts and lowest prices.

—Ex-Mayor James says that any of the "boys" who wish to see him can do so by making a row on the street and letting "Joe" make them.

—Tons of clean horse feed for sale at Close's Mills.

—Messrs. Helliwell and Fessenden have disposed of their steam yacht, "Ethel-Grace," to a gentleman in St. Catharines for $500.

—Read J. F. McAlister's advertisement and act accordingly. The best evidence that his watches are what he claims them to be is that people frequently repeat their orders.

—We Have again assorted up in all sizes in Corsets, also Misses' Corsets. C. F. Henderson.

—Rev. Mr. Card preaches Sunday School anniversary sermons in Kingston M. E. Church next Sunday. Rev. J. P. Wilson, B.A., will fill Mr. Card's pulpit here.

—The Latest Puzzle. How can W. D. Madden sell wall paper from 15 to 20 per cent below all competitors.

—Chief Allen got the sanitary brigade at work cleaning up Dundas street on Monday and the marked improvement speaks volumes for the Chief's abilities as street surveyor.

—R. P. Lahey's stock is complete in all lines of men's furnishing goods. Don't forget to call and see the watches and chains.

—If you want anything in the fine harness line, call at K. J. Strong & Co.'s, near the Brisco House. They keep on hand a large assortment of first-class single and double carriage harness of the highest quality and lowest price.

—Our Parasols are extra good value this season. An inspection will satisfy every one. C. F. Henderson.

—Mr. Geo. Lasher being desirous of retiring from business offers for sale his most valuable property at Napanee Mills and a farm on the York road. The former affords an excellent opening for an energetic business man. See adv.

—Grind loads of wheat and feed same day at Close's Mills.

—The Napanee Mills Paper Co. have made a new use of refuse sugar cane. Wrapping and printing paper have been made from it, samples of which were last week shipped to New Orleans to be tested. It is believed the experiment will prove successful.

—Remember R. P. Lahey is giving a stem-winding watch and gold-plated chain with every suit of clothes from $8.00 up.

—Mr. A. A. Bartlett, jeweler, finding business unremunerative, closed his store on Tuesday and has disposed of his stock to his creditors. Any person having watches or jewelry left for repairs will find them at his place of residence, corner Bridge and East streets.

—Quite extensive improvements have been made in the post-office. Two new cases have been put in, one for letters and the other for papers. Improvements have also been made in the inside arrangement. Postmaster Bogart and his assistants are deserving of the highest commendation for the pains they have taken.

—When in town and you find you are wanting any hardware, be sure and call at H. W. Perry's, where you can get more hardware for the same money than at any other store in Ontario. Make a memoran-

Scott Act Movement.

The following gentlemen were elected officers of the Scott Act movement to hold office for one year :—

President, Rev. M. L. Pearsen, Napanee; Secretary, Dr. W. W. Meacham, Odessa; Treasurer, F. Burrows, Napanee; Vice-Presidents, Samuel Clark, Ernesttown; W. N. Daller, North Fredericksburgh; Ira B. Hudgins, Richmond; George Asselstine, South Fredericksburgh; E. Clapp, Adolphustown; Miles Caton, Newburgh; A. V. Price, Camden; James Aylsworth, Sheffield; Capt. Polley, Amherst Island; Dr. Kennedy, Bath; O. M. Rolnfs, Kaladar; James Lane, Denbigh; Rev. A. Young, Napanee.

Shipping Notes.

—Navigation on the river and bay opened on Friday last.

—The schooner "Wm. Jamieson," laden with barley, left on Monday.

—The "Nellie P. Downey" cleared on Saturday for Oswego with 6,280 bushels of rye.

—The steamer "Utica" has resumed her old route between Prinyer dock and Napanee.

—Capt. Collier's new steamer "Reindeer" was launched in Kingston on Tuesday and is expected here to-morrow (Saturday.)

Oddfellows' Demonstration.

On Monday a meeting of Oddfellows was held in Brockville to decide the location of the proposed international Oddfellows' demonstration. Napanee was represented by Messrs. A. L. Morden and W. C. Scott. The Kingston delegation was anxious to have the demonstration held in that city but it was decided to hold it in Brockville, as it would be very expensive for the members in Ottawa district to go to Kingston. The Whig accuses Mr. Scott of working against them having it in that city and says the demonstration will be quite a small affair after all. Probably this is a case of sour grapes.

A Chapter of Accidents.

On Monday last Mr. McHenry, of Adolphustown, while working in his barn fell from the loft to the floor, a distance of 13 feet, and had his right fore arm broken. Much sympathy is felt for him in his misfortune, which is intensified by coming at seeding time, when he cannot well afford to remain idle, and some of his neighbors have volunteered assistance in the fields.

On Tuesday night James McFarlane, a 13-year old son of Mr. Andrew McFarlane, of Big Creek, was thrown from a horse and sustained a fracture of the right leg. He suffered considerable pain but is now recovering.

In both cases Dr. Ward, of this town, contributed to the relief of the sufferers.

A Spring "Poem."

The first instalment of spring poetry has been received. It is headed "Early Spring," contains eight stanzas and hails from Richmond. Here are the two opening verses :—

"So soft is the snow,
So tame is the crow,
Near the fence are such banks,
That they tire our shanks.

"As we travel from school,
So we rest at each pool,
And sit on the ties, [railroad ties]
Where the sun's rays drys."

The same great depth of thought, beauty of sentiment and purity of diction pervades the other verses, but space forbids us the pleasure of reproducing them. The writer, in the concluding verse, threatens us with further contributions of the same nature. We trust he will be induced to change his mind. People can be surfeited with good things, you know.

—All the latest novelties in linen and lace collars, ties, fichus, etc. C. F. Henderson.

—The street sprinkler was out for the first time this season on Wednesday. Mr. E. Perry has the contract and we feel assured he will give entire satisfaction.

—The Best judges say that Madden has by far the finest and cheapest wall paper in Napanee.

—Messrs. M. L. Clement and J. W. Babcock have purchased the west-half of lot No. 4, in the 4th con. of Olden. It was sold through the agency of Messrs. Williams & Wilson.

—Mr. Nelson Sharp, of Violet, has Italian and Black Bees for sale. 23-3.

—Owing to other attractions in town the meeting of the celebration committee in the town hall, Wednesday evening was postponed until this (Friday) evening. A full attendance is requested.

—See the new Henry Irving hat received this week at McAlister's.

—Mr. D. C. Jennings, silver plater, is now prepared for a still greater amount of business. From the way in which his work is done we can confidently recommend everyone to him for plating of any kind.

If you want to buy a spade, shovel, hoe or garden rake, go to R. G. Wright's.

—Smith Bros., jewellers, have secured the services of Mr. Walker of Birmingham, England, and are now prepared to manufacture anything in the line of jewellery.

—Madden's gold paper from 40c. per roll up cannot be surpassed.

—The award of the arbitrators in the case of Herring vs. N., T. & Q. Railway for right of way through the glass works property was set aside on Friday last by Mr. Justice Rose at Toronto.

—We Have now in stock the finest assortment of hosiery ever imported into town. See them before you buy. C. F. Henderson.

—There are six new bicycles in town this spring and there will be a meeting at the Campbell House, on Wednesday evening to organize a bicycle club. It will start with about twelve members.

—Mr. Amos Kimmerly has organized a band which will number about ten pieces. They practice Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings. There will be an orchestra in connection. They will be open for engagements about 24th of May.

—Parties building will consult their own interests by going to R. G. Wright's for their hardware, paints, oils, glass, putty, etc.

—When the steamer "Deseronto" was coming up the river Thursday of last week a log got caught in the screw which obliged her to lie in the river all night. She resumed her regular trips on Friday last, and leaves Napanee at 6 a.m., returning at 6 p.m.

—R. P. Lahey's. See the new Fedora Hat just arrived, and big stock of all the latest English and American Hats. Prices down, down.

—The special services in the C. M. Church under the direction of Rev. D. Winter are increasing in interest every week. They are attended by such crowds that the meetings are now held in the body of the church instead of the lecture room as formerly.

—Cotton undershirts only 25c. each at McAlister's.

—The rush still continues for the ready-made clothing shown by A. Rose & Co. This firm has a large and fine assortment and at prices to suit everyone. We would advise our readers before purchasing to call and see their stock.

—The Napanee band have written to Kingston for the instruments of the 47th battalion and they are expected here soon. There will then be between sixteen and twenty pieces in the band which will become the 47th battalion band. The leader, Mr. Edwin Brooks, intends to make it a first-class organization.

wanting any hardware, be sure and call at H. W. Perry's, where you can get more hardware for the same money than at any other store in Ontario. Make a memorandum of this and look into the matter before you buy your next bill. Every customer treated alike, irrespective of age, size, color or condition.

—At the regular meeting of the Good Templars on Thursday night, the following officers were elected for the ensuing quarter: W. C. T., Bro. Thos. Lawless; W. V. T., Sister Addie Empey; W. S., Bro. Will Long; W. F. S., Bro. Edwin Pearson; W. S., Sister Hudgins; W. M., Bro. Will Thompson; W. I. G., Sister Cassie McKim; W. O. G., Bro. N. Sagar; P. W. C. T., Bro. Myron Mills.

—Mr. R. P. Lahey, our enterprising young townsman, is giving away with every suit of ready-made clothing a very superior watch beautifully engraved and one which nobody need be ashamed of. Young gentlemen should call immediately and secure one of these really fine time pieces, as they are going off at a tremendous rate. His stock of hats, caps and gents' furnishing goods is complete.

—A shrewd Yankee appeared in town on Monday with a preparation called "The Howard Nickel Solution," for plating brass, copper, etc. It sold pretty freely but on trial it was found to be a fraud of the basest description. After applying it lasts about one day or two at the most. He left town, however, without being caught. People are warned to be on the look out for him.

—A case of an appeal from the award of the ditch engineer of South Fredericksburgh in a matter between Messrs. John G. Alcombrack and Geo. Asselstine, was heard by Judge Wilkinson. After hearing the evidence of several leading residents the Judge gave decision sustaining the award. Mr. H. M. Deroche for appellant; Mr. A. L. Morden for respondent.

—Dr. Bristol has decided to remove from town and take up residence in Toronto, where he will continue the practice of his profession. After a practice of over thirty-five years in the country he feels that he is entitled to the physical rest which a city practice affords. We will regret to lose so estimable a citizen, but trust the change will prove beneficial to him in every respect. In accordance with this resolve, as will be seen by an advertisement in another column, the Doctor offers his residence for sale. It is a most desirable property and should soon find a customer.

—We are pleased to learn that an effort is being made to raise a handsome sum of money for the purpose of erecting suitable monuments to the memory of two worthy laborers in the Church of God, both of whom were well known in this part of the province, the late Rev. Peter Empey and Rev. Benson Smith, who some years ago passed to their reward. The friends of the late Rev. Peter Empey some years ago erected a marble tomb stone in the Huffman cemetery, but through accident, by allowing horses and cattle to pasture in the lot and owing to the dilapidated condition of the fence, the stone was broken so as to render it useless and a new one is desirable. A subscription list has been put in the hands of Messrs. A. L. Morden, K. J. Strong and Silas Vrooman, who have succeeded in obtaining several names of friends of the deceased ministers for sums of money of $5.00 and under. Any person wishing to contribute to this object can hand their subscriptions to any member of the committee.

It is Natural.

It is natural for some people to be bilious, being often a result of peculiar bilious temperament, which with high living, too greasy food, indigestion from inactive liver, is the frequent cause. The remedy, above all others, is Burdock Blood Bitters. It is highly curative for all biliary complaints, and far better than physic for inactive conditions of the bowels.

"Fogg's Ferry" at the Opera House.

Miss Lizzie Evans and company played "Fogg's Ferry" in the Opera House Wednesday evening before a large and delighted audience. The piece, which is of the popular order, is a bright four act comedy-drama replete with striking situations and clever and witty dialogue, and was rendered under the direction of Mr. Callahan, the playwright, an American lawyer of marked ability. The leading role, "Chip," was taken by Miss Evans, a petite comedienne, than whom no better has ever appeared in Napanee, and who has few superiors on the American stage. Her representation of the character was most charming. "Chip," the little rough diamond, "pert, chipper and sassy," but withal good at heart, was never better portrayed and the audience manifested their appreciation by repeated applause. The support was excellent and the result was a most enjoyable entertainment. Mr. Callahan in conversation with an EXPRESS reporter after the performance, expressed himself as highly pleased with the audience. He may have been giving our people "taffy" but he said that the audience was one of the most intelligent looking and orderly the company ever played before in a small town, and this statement was cordially endorsed by Miss Evans. Mr. Callahan promises to give Napanee a call next season.

A Well Deserved Promotion.

R. A. Helliwell, Esq., manager of the Dominion Bank here, has, we are pleased to learn, been promoted to the inspectorship of the bank with headquarters at Toronto. The position was rendered vacant by a re-adjustment of the offices in Toronto and the appointment of Mr. Kane, late inspector, to the managership of the Toronto branch. While we, together with the business men and people of the county generally, deeply regret Mr. Helliwell's removal from town, the fullest satisfaction is experienced with his preferment, and the directors are to be congratulated on having in a fitting manner recognized intelligent and faithful service to the bank by one of its most popular officials. As manager, both in Brampton and Napanee, Mr. H. distinguished himself for thorough knowledge of banking principles, good judgment and courtesy, and attracted to the bank a large and remunerative business. His success here has been almost phenomenal. To say that he will be missed, both as a business man and socially, only faintly describes the void his removal will create. We understand that he will enter upon his new duties about the first of May, but his removal from town may not take place for some months later. No doubt our townspeople will, before his departure, give fitting expression of their feelings toward him. Mr. Helliwell's successor here will be Mr. Gamble, manager of the Brampton agency, who was also his successor at Brampton when Mr. Helliwell was promoted to Napanee. Mr. Gamble is a gentleman held in the highest esteem, and will, no doubt, be able to sustain the present high popularity of the bank here. The young men of the town will be pleased to know that he is one of Canada's best cricketers, was captain of last year's international eleven and, therefore, will be a great source of strength to our local club, in which all our townspeople take so deep an interest.

—Messrs. Perry & Co. will receive to-day one of the finest consignments of flower plants ever offered for sale in Napanee, and which all lovers of the beautiful should see. There are all the standard varieties in geraniums, fuschias, heliotropes, roses, foliage plants, etc., besides many rare specimens of names and varieties innumerable. Many of the plants are in bloom and look really lovely, while all have an appearance of health not often met with in plants at this season of the year. The plants are all in suitable pots or baskets and are selling fast, at very reasonable prices. The same firm have a full line of first-class vegetable plants which they are selling cheap.

Drowning Accident.

A sad accident occurred at Crooked Creek, near Arden, last Thursday. Mr. Charles Loucks, who resided near Napanee, while engaged in raising a dam, fell into the water and was drowned. His brother, who was working with him, as soon as the accident happened, ran to his assistance, but the unfortunate man was caught between two eddies and immediately drawn down. The remains arrived here on Sunday morning and were interred on Monday.

Fatal Accident on the N., T. & Q. Railway.

As the construction train of the Napanee, Tamworth & Quebec Railway was proceeding to work on Saturday morning and when opposite Newburgh station, Mr. Daniel Clement in passing from one car to another fell between them and was badly crushed. Dr. Ruttan was summoned, but notwithstanding all that he could do the unfortunate man died a couple of hours afterwards. On Monday Mr. M. C. Row put the train at the disposal of the friends of the deceased and at 10 o'clock the body was conveyed to Moscow for interment. He leaves a wife and five children wholly unprovided for. We understand that $88 were subscribed by the railway men and Mr. R. A. Johnston collected from the townspeople $70, making in all $158, for the family.

Gospel Temperance Meeting.

The Gospel temperance meeting held last Sunday was largely attended. Rev. Mr. Pearson occupied the chair. The meeting was opened with singing and prayer, after which the chairman made a few remarks. He was followed at some length by Mr. James Daly, who spoke very forcibly on the questions at issue. Mr. Burrows then read a sermon delivered in Westminster Abbey by Canon Farrar on the subject of Temperance. Rev. Mr. Young closed the programme by a few remarks. The choir rendered good service by their music.

LEAP YEAR BALL.--One of the most interesting events of the season was the ball given by the ladies of this village on Friday night. The committee in charge was composed of the following ladies:—Mesdames McKenty, Rouse and Ferren, and Misses Howard, Dennee, McPherson, Armstrong, M. Day and L. Armstrong, with Miss Ferguson as Secretary. Napanee was represented by Mr. and Mrs. M. T. Rogers and Miss Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. James E. Herring, Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Pruyn, Miss Grange, Miss Aylsworth, and Messrs Zina Ham, O. L. Herring, Wilson, Lahey, Jemmet, Grange, Wray and Gillespie. They were most hospitably entertained before the ball by Mrs. McKenty and Mrs. Rouse. The ball itself was a most brilliant affair, in which the grace and beauty of the district was well represented. The supper would do credit to any gathering of the kind in a much larger place. Dancing was continued until quite late, and all went home not soon to forget the Bath Leap Year Ball.

—I went into Cummins' the other day and was surprised to see so large a stock of goods brought to Bath, and while looking around I heard a lady asking why they did not have an opening to show off their goods, but Charlie said he did not want to throw Duncan's small display in the shade after his going to three weeks' trouble to get it up, with his 7½x8½ mirror in the centre of the table. I believe Miss Roblin bought the millinery goods herself, and every lady of her acquaintance knows her good taste in trimming them up. They have the neatest and best assorted stock of everything for a general store that I have ever seen, and I would advise every person that wishes to save a dollar to give them a call before buying. This is the experience of your humble servant,

—Under the heading of "A Plucky Horsewoman" the Kingston News thus refers to a young lady well known in Napanee:—"On Saturday afternoon Miss Grace Armour, daughter of Judge Armour, while riding on horseback on Barriefield common in company with Col. Montizambert, had a lively experience. Her horse became excited and began to plunge, when she noticed that the saddle was shifting. She kept her seat till a favorable opportunity presented itself, when she sprang off the animal's back to the ground. The saddle was firmly fastened, when she remounted and subdued the horse in a few seconds."

Advice to Mothers.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting of teeth? If so, send at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25 cents a bottle. 14-1 2-1y.

LENNOX AND ADDINGTON COUNTY COUNCIL.

The June Session.

The June session of the County Council opened at the Council Chamber on Tuesday afternoon last. The Warden in the chair. All the members were present except Mr. Davis, of Ernesttown.

The WARDEN, in his address, made the usual congratulations, and informed the Council that a certain debenture had fallen due, of which they knew nothing. The by-law under which it had been passed, had been destroyed, but the amount ($2,000) had been paid and $1,200 was left in the hands of the Treasurer. He also said that suit entered against the county for damages had been withdrawn.

Moved by Mr. J. C. CARSCALLEN, that Mr. F. A. Roe be appointed Clerk, pro tem.—Carried.

The minutes of the last session were then read and confirmed.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Before the regular order of business was taken up Mr. Wilson rose to a question of privilege. He stated that on different occasions the NAPANEE EXPRESS had accused him of manipulating funds to the detriment of the County for a sum of about $600. He read extracts from THE EXPRESS relating thereto. He denied having unduely used any influence in favor of Dr. Mackenzie getting the debentures referred to. He denied knowing of such an offer as mentioned in the editorial. He read an extract about his knowing of a better offer than the one accepted, whereby there might have been a saving of $600 to the county; but protested he did not know of any such offer. He produced the letter sent to him by Mr. Macher, of Kingston, asking for a copy of the by-law authorizing the issue of tenders, and the advertisement for tenders, and asking if tenders would be received subject to the by-law. He said he received a number of letters relating to this but handed them to Mr. Roe to be answered. On the 8th of March Mr. Jas. Herring handed him a letter, whose father, in which, had been addressed as Chairman of the Finance Committee, asking for particulars of the Lennox and Addington debentures and requesting the time when the tenders must be in. He believes Mr. Macher received an answer to his first letter but through carelessness overlooked it. He read the letter written Mr. Macher from Mr. F. A. Roe, and one from Mr. A. H. Roe, stating that Mr. Wilson had no authority to vary the conditions of the advertisements. He utterly denied that correspondence relat read the letter written Mr. Macher from Mr. F. A. Roe, and one from Mr. A. H. Roe, stating that Mr. Wilson had no authority to vary the conditions of the advertisements. He utterly denied that correspondence relating to the affair had been withheld and that Mr. Parks gave a notice of a better offer than the one received. He had written to the city treasurer of Kingston and had learned that that city had issued no debentures this year. In conclusion, he wished a committee appointed to investigate these charges and if he were found guilty in these he would feel compelled to resign.

Mr. PERRY wished to have the advertisement read as to whether Mr. Roe had any right to answer these letters or not and upon it being read, thought he had no right to answer either tender or letters.

Mr. WILSON said that as there was a great deal of correspondence, on this matter and Mr. Roe was paid as County Clerk, he thought he ought to answer the letters.

The WARDEN wished the discussion to close and that a committee be appointed.

Mr. PARKS wished to know, as it was a question of privilege, whether discussion were to go on now or to be deferred until the matter were brought before the Committee.

Moved by J. C. CARSCALLEN, seconded by Mr. DENISON, that the Committee to investigate these charges be Messrs. Ham, Polley, Parks, Lloyd and Lane.—Carried.

Mr. PARKS believed that this matter was brought up by some action of his in voting against the report of the Finance Committee. He also believed there was too much haste in the matter, and he never understood the answer of Mr Macher was produced. He thought that Mr. Roe should have had no cognizance of the doings of the Finance Committee. The Beaver had attacked him, but he thought that paper, if it knew the public opinion of it, would say with Moore in Lalla Rookh—

"Hell, with all its powers to damn, Cannot be the vile thing I am."

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Mr. George Lamey, regarding wire fences on Tyendinaga road, between the G. T. R. track and the limits of the corporation. He requested that the wire be furnished him and he would have the fences put up.—Referred to the Committee on Roads and Bridges.

From the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly, regarding reducing the number of County Councillors.—Referred to the Committee on Education and Printing.

From the County Council of Peel, requesting the co-operation of this Council, in relation to the movements regarding school sections.—Referred to the Committee on Education and Printing.

From Mr. R. W. Phipps, of Toronto, regarding forest preservation.—Laid on the table.

From the Ontario Agricultural College, showing cost of tuition, board, &c., of the students, and asking the Warden to recommend young men to that institution.—Referred to the Committee on Education and Printing.

From Geo. W. Grote, presenting an account of the constable at Langstaff for $8.25.—Filed.

A petition was read from Judge Wilkison and others to have telephone communication between the Court House and the town.—Referred to the Committee on County Property.

Moved by Mr. DIAMOND, seconded by Mr. SHARP, that the Reeves of the different municipalities, with the Warden, be a committee to equalize the assessment.

Moved in amendment by Mr. J. C. CARSCALLEN, seconded by Mr. REID, that Messrs. Lane, Wagar, Diamond, Davis and the mover and seconder, be appointed the Committee.—The amendment was lost and the original motion was carried.

ONT., FRIDAY, JUNE 13, 1884. VOL. XXIII. No. 31.

Moved by Mr. WILSON, seconded by Mr. T. G CARSCALLEN, that the usual grant of $200 be made in aid of the County model school.—Carried.

Capt. POLLEY gave notice that to-morrow he would introduce a by-law to extend the time between the nomination and municipal elections in Amherst Island.

The Council then adjourned till tomorrow at 10 o'clock.

WEDNESDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment at 10 a.m., the Warden in the chair. All the members were present. The minutes of yesterday's proceedings were read and confirmed.

The communication in reference to the preservation of forests which was laid over from yesterday was referred to the Committee on Roads and Bridges.

Capt. POLLEY introduced a by-law to extend the time between the nomination day in municipal elections in Amherst Island, and polling day, nomination day being the next Monday before the last in December. The by-law was read the first time and the Council went into committee of the whole on the second reading, Capt. Polley in the chair. At this point Mr. Lane rose and requested that the by-law be amended by associating Denbigh, Abinger and Ashby with Amherst Island. This was granted and the committee rose and reported on the by-law as amended. The report was received and adopted. Upon motion the by-law was signed, sealed and finally passed.

Moved by Mr. DIAMOND, seconded by Mr. BALL, that Messrs. A. Martin, H. M. Deroche, C. Fessenden, D. Hicks and F. Burrows, I. P. S., be members of the Board of Examiners of Public School Teachers for the current year.

With the consent of the mover this motion was laid on the table until the afternoon session.

The report of the grand jury of the County Court was then presented. On motion of Mr. Ham, seconded by Mr. Parks, the report was referred to the Committee on County Property to report.

The following accounts were then disposed of:—Robt. Light, lumber, $2.55, referred to Committee on County Property; County Clerk, postage, assessor's guides, etc., $10.20, referred to the Committee on Education and Printing; Brown Bros., registers, etc., $50, referred to the Committee on Education and Printing.

The Treasurer's statement was then read as follows:—

Statement of Receipts and Expenditures for Lennox and Addington from the 1st day of March, 1884, to 1st day of June, 1884.

The matter of appointing a Board of Public Instruction was asked to be laid on the table until the afternoon. Mr. Ham had investigated some of the accounts and wished a further investigation.

Moved by Mr. WILSON, seconded by Mr. J. C. CARSCALLEN, that the matter go to the committee on Education and Printing.—Carried.

Mr. SHARP called attention to a grant of $300, instituting a telegraph connection at Amherst Island.

Capt. POLLEY wished the matter left over till next session for consideration. This was granted.

Mr. HAM moved the first reading of a by-law for the purpose of dividing the County of Lennox and Addington into High School districts.

The by-law was read the first time and the second reading was deferred.

The Council then adjourned until 2 p.m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Council came to order at 3.30, the Warden in the chair.

Mr. HAM introduced the question of insurance upon the Court House which expired to-day. Tenders had been received and the lowest was for 70c. per $100 dollars. One party, however, after this was found out tendered at 50c. He wished to know whether the Council would bear them out in accepting the lowest tender.

Mr. T. G. CARSCALLEN explained the matter.

Moved by Mr. BALL, seconded by Mr. LANE, that the tender of Mr. T. G. Davis for 70c. on the dollar be accepted.—Carried.

Mr. WILSON presented the statement of the County Treasurer for amounts due from the different municipalities on county rate for 1883:—Ernesttown, $34.28; Camden, $300; Sheffield, $550.40; total, $884.68.—Referred to the Finance Committee.

Mr. PERRY introduced a by-law to create a road in the township of Camden, a county road to be known as the Newburgh and Croydon County Road.—Referred to the Committee on Roads and Bridges.

Mr. HAM presented the report of the Equalization Committee as follows:—

Your Committee on Equalization appointed to examine and equalize the assessment of the different municipalities of the county for the purpose of levying the county rate for the current year, would submit the following schedule as in their opinion an equitable equalization:—

ter, of 18th March, which was the only communication I had received from him on the subject. As I had said nothing in my letter of 11th February about varying any conditions, it is clear such a letter as Mr. Roe speaks of having written could apply only to my second letter to Wilson in March. Certainly I never received either that letter or the by-law.

Your obedient servant, J. M. MACHAR.

Mr. HAM said he had no reason to believe that Mr. Machar would write that he was prepared to make a tender of 105 if it were not true. He thought it was one of those unfortunate things that often occur for which nobody is to blame.

Mr. WILSON denied that Mr. Parks had given the council information of better terms being at hand, and also that the correspondence had not been read, but he was afterwards forced to admit that all the correspondence had not been read, one letter of Mr. Machar's being at the time in the possession of Mr. Roe. He stated that on the Saturday after receiving Mr. Machar's letter of 11th of Feb. he handed it to Mr. Roe instructing him to answer it. Mr. Roe says he answered the letter in Toronto on the following Monday but did not make a copy of what he wrote. He considered he should not be held responsible if the letter miscarried. He thought that the Clerk being the paid servant of the council he should attend to the correspondence.

Mr. PARKS held that the matter was not referred to the Clerk but to Mr. Wilson and it was the latter's duty, as the advertisement stated, to furnish the information.

After a general discussion the committee visited Mr. Roe's residence and obtained for him a statement that he answered Mr. Machar's letter in the Legislative building in Toronto, and handed it together with a copy of the by-law and the minutes to a page to be mailed. The com. then adjourned. They have not yet made their report.

COUNTY COURT AND GENERAL SESSIONS.

A Light Docket—Three Civil Cases, Only one of Which Goes to Trial.

The General Sessions for the County of Lennox and Addington opened at the Court House on Tuesday afternoon before His Honor Judge Price of Kingston. The civil docket comprised three cases and the criminal one—a case of larceny. The cases were all handled by members of the local bar.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Upon resuming—the appointment of five Public School Examiners was brought up, but at the suggestion of Mr. Ham the matter was deferred till to-morrow. He thought a reduction in the number could be made. Mr. Wilson stated that the Board last year cost $365.14.

Mr. PERRY gave notice of a by-law to be introduced by him to-morrow to provide for the road in the township of Camden from Files' Corners to Hamilton's Corner, Croydon, being made a county road, the same to take effect 1st Jan., 1885.

Mr. HAM submitted the report of the special committee on the U. E. Loyalist monument, which recommended a grantoof $200 to be paid when the monument is erected. The Council went into committee of the whole on the report, Mr. Ham in the chair. The adoption of the report was moved by Mr. Perry, seconded by Mr. Ball.

Mr. REID moved, seconded by Mr. SEXSMITH, that the grant be conditional on a monumont to cost $1,500 being erected.

The vote was a tie but the chairman giving his casting vote for the amendment it was carried.

Upon the report being submitted in Council Mr. MALLORY moved, seconded by Mr. BALL, that the Council go back into committee for the purpose of striking out the amendment clause in the report. The motion was lost on the following division :—

Mr. WILSON moved, seconded by Mr. BALL, that the report be laid over till tomorrow.—Carried.

Accounts were presented from Mr. T. H. Waller and Mr. Boyle, which were referred to the County Property Committee toreport.

The Council then adjourned till Thursday morning.

THURSDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The council met persuant to adjournment, the Warden in the chair. The minutes of yesterday's proceeding were read and confirmed.

An account of T. S. Henry was handed in for advertising, stamps and cards amounting to $22.35 Referred to the committee on Printing. The account of A. T. Harshaw & Co. supplies for gaol, was ordered to be paid.

The Debenture Sale Committte.

This Committee met after the adjournment Tuesday and elected theWarden, chairman, and Mr. Parks, secretary. A motion was passed requesting the editor of THE EXPRESS to appear before the committee. The committee then adjourned till Wednesday.

Upon resuming, Mr. O'Beirne appeared and stated that while he did not hold himself responsible to any other tribunal than the public for any opinions he expressed in his journal on public matters, he would as an act of courtesy and in the interest of the county, answer any questions put to him and give any information he possessed that might throw any light on the transaction. He then stated that immediately after the March session it was brought to his notice that Mr. Machar, a leading lawyer of Kingston, was prepared to offer $630 more for the debentures than the price accepted by the council, but was detained till too late in getting in his offer because of his not having received the necessary information on which to base his tender, notwithstanding that he had written several letters asking for the information. He obtained copies of the correspondence and published it in THE EXPRESS of April 4th, together with comments he believed just and proper. He requested Mr. Parks to read a letter he had received a few days ago from Mr. Machar, which substantiated everything that had been printed in regard to the matter in THE EXPRESS.

Mr. Ham then read the article referred to.

Mr. Parks submitted the following letter which he read :—

KINGSTON, 7th June, 1884.

IRVINE PARKS, ESQ., Napanee, Ont. :

Re County Debentures.

DEAR SIR,—Pursuant to your request, I beg to state the following facts for your information in this matter :

(1) On 11th February, at request of a client, I wrote Uriah Wilson, Chairman of Finance, asking particulars of certain debentures ($33,000) of the County of Lennox and Addington, offering for sale. My client had seen an advertisement, referring inquiries to Wilson, and wished to know "due dates" of different debentures, so that he could make a tender. If he had been aware that only about $3,000 would mature every year from 2 to 11 years, he would have then tendered for the whole 105 at least, and was prepared, if necessary, to buy at a rate to yield him about five per cent. on his investment.

(2) To this letter I never received any reply.

(3) On 3d March I wrote to J. Herring for some information, having had no answer from Mr. Wilson. I wrote that I had seen the advertisement for the first time and desired to base tender.

(4) I enclose the further correspondence which please return. On receipt of F. A. Roe's letter of 12th March, I wrote him requesting a copy of the answer he stated had been sent to my letter to Mr. Wilson of 11th February.

(5) The debentures were on 12th March sold to Mr. E. H. Smythe, of this place at 103 1-8.

(6) On 19th March I received A. H. Roe's letter from York.

His HONOR in charging the Grand Jury congratulated them on their duties being very light. The only case to come before them was one of larceny. He called their attention to the fact that a vagrant named Rickley was now in gaol on a commitment which did not specify the length of time he was to be confined therein. He pointed out that the man would have to remain in gaol for life at the expense of the county if some action was not taken to have the commitment quashed. He understood that the man was able to work and was anxious to be released, but as no person had authority to order his discharge while the commitment remained in force he would suggest that they consider the matter and recommend the County Council now in session to instruct the County Crown Attorney to institute proceedings to have the commitment quashed. In paying a tribute to this county for the absence of crime within its borders he referred to the executions which had taken place that day in the adjoining county of Prince Edward, which had long borne the reputation of being the most law-abiding county in the province, and also to the sad shooting affray in which a little boy shot his brother, which only a day or two ago took place in Kingston. The former was the result of crime superinduced by drink and the other through the facilities afforded small boys of procuring firearms. He (His Honor) was told by a hardware merchant that the majority of revolvers was purchased by boys under fifteen years of age and another gentleman had told him that as many as eight small revolvers had been found with one boy in Kingston. People had lately become so prone to attribute most of the crimes and casualties to drink that they had seemed to lose sight of other causes. He believed a great deal of crime was caused by liquor, but he also believed that if a law were passed prohibiting the sale of firearms to small boys crimes and casualities would greatly decrease. He also referred to the tramp nuisance and urged municipal councils to see that their constables and magistrates were on the alert against these gentry, as with the approach of hard times a large influx of these organized marauders might be expected in rural districts. In referring to the grand jury question he remarked that while in this county there might not be any apparent necessity for continuing such an expensive institution, yet in other parts of the Dominion it was found very necessary and legislation was designed for the general good. He thought, however, grand juries might render greater services to the country by discussing, especially on occasions like the present when their duties were light, matters tending to improve the criminal law, the result of their deliberations being embodied in their reports. He then instructed them as to their duty in inspecting the gaol and the jury retired.

THE CIVIL LIST

comprised the following cases :—

ALLISON VS. ROBLIN, ET AL.—Action for damages for cutting timber on plaintiff's property. Settled out of court. Mr. D. H. Preston for plaintiff ; Mr. A. L. Morden for defendant.

A Kansas girl was caught in male attire, and as she refused to pay a fine of $10, a Justice sent her to prison for ten days. As there was no worse intention in her conduct than to play a prank, and the State has no law against what she did, her rich father has sued for damages.

The present ruler of Afghanistan boasts of his skill as a mechanic, a musician, and a physician. In each capacity he believes there is no Afghan to equal him. Prof. Reuger, on feeding his monkeys, in Paragua, with eggs, observed that at first they smashed them and then wasted much of their contents; but they soon learned to hit one end against some hard body and pick off the bits with their paws, and if they cut themselves once with any sharp tool, they would either not touch it again or handle it with the greatest caution. Lumps of sugar are given them wrapped up in paper, and sometimes a live wasp was put in to try them, so that in hastily opening the paper they got stung; but after this had once occured they always held the packet to their ears to detect any movement.

Perhaps the most curious battalion in any army is the Norwegian Corps of Skaters, It is composed of picked men armed with rifles, which they use with great precision. The skates used are admirably adapted for travelling over rough and broken ice and frozen snow, being six inches broad and between nine and ten inches long. The soldiers can be manœuvred upon ice or over the snow fields of the mountains with a rapidity equal to that of the best trained cavalry. As an instance of the speed at which they can go, it is stated that a messenger attached to the corps has accomplished 120 miles in eighteen hours and a half, over mountains.

A military writer in the Paris Soir points out the advantages to be gained by France, both strategically and commercially, if the Great St. Bernard were tunnelled through, so that Calais might be united in a straight line with Brindisi. At present, the writer states, the St Gothard Tunnel has been productive of great damage to the existing French line, and he calls on his countrymen not to stand passively by while the trade of England and Belgum, the Indian mails, and the industry and commerce of the northern departments of France all find their way over the German line. He proposes that either the Great St. Benard, the Simplon or Mont Blanc should be pierced the first, however, being the one through which a tunnel might be most advantageously made from a strategic point of view.

Another huge diamond has been discovered. On the 27th of March last, a digger at the Kimberley Mines, South Africa was fortunate enough to find a diamond measuring $1\frac{3}{4}$ inches in length and $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches in diameter, weighing no less than 302 carats. This is by far the largest gem yet discovered in South Africa, or, in fact elsewhere. If we except the Pitt and Mattam (of a flask shape) in their uncut state, and some diamonds of apocryphal history. It is a perfect octahedron in shape, and of the usual Cape or off color. Some years ago its value would have been simply enormous. At present, however, it is reported that $15,000 has been refused for it in its uncut state.

The Welbeck Tunnel, which the late Duke of Portland, the "Invisible Prince," created for his workmen to pass through on coming to and returning from work, without disturbing the serene repose he longed for, is one of the wonders of the world. During the day it is lighted by enormous plate glass bull's eyes, superseded at night by hundreds of gas jets. The floor is excellently asphalted, and the tunnel is high enough and wide enough for carriages to pass along. Stepping into it during the hot days of summer, one feels as if he had walked into an icehouse, and the whole length of its interior can be traversed without catching the slightest glimpse of the abbey, or the beautiful park under which it passes.

A singular accident occurred recently at Naples in the Church of San Maggiore, where some priests of the so-called mission are now preaching. The preacher of the evening had chosen for his theme the terrors of hell. The church was crowded. Near the pulpit stood a figure of the Madonna. All at once, in the middle of the sermon, the lights went out, and the figure of the Madonna disappeared. The priest, striking the desk with an iron chain, cried out: "We are falling into hell! Look, the Madonna has fled! Call on her; call, or woe to us!" The panic was universal; women fainted, children screamed, and there was a rush to the doors, which were found to be carefully closed: At last the police appeared on the scene and got the doors opened, and the congregation escaped into the open air without injury, beyond a few bruises and the loss of various articles of wearing apparel.

The famous jackdaw of Rheims has been outdone by a British tomtit. At Shenbridge Hall, the residence of Mr. Lockett, in England, the hall letter box is placed in a gate at the roadside, and Mr. Lockett, expecting a check from Liverpool, went to the box. He discovered that the envelope had been tampered with and the check abstracted. Coming to the conclusion that he had been robbed, as the letter itself remained while the check had been taken, Mr. Lockett at once rode to Nantwich and gave information at the Post Office and at the police station. On returning later he examined the letter box more closely, and then found several tomtits in it, and further investigation led to his finding the missing check lying twenty-six yards away on the turnpike road, whither it had evidently been carried by a tomtit. Marks of the beaks of the tomtits were found on the letter and the check, and the latter being folded very small, its abstraction was easy.

Among the 86,000 non-commissioned officers and men constituting the British home army on the first of January, and including all young soldiers, there were under 5 feet 5 inches in height 10,622: between that and 5 feet 6 inches, 11,944; between 5 feet 6 inches and 5 7 inches there were 15,810, and nearly the same number, or 15,499, 5 feet 8 inches or an inch under; between 5 feet 8 inches and 5 feet 9 inches there were 12,763; between 5 feet 9 inches and 5 feet 10 inches 8,725; and between 5 feet 10 inches and 5 feet 11 inches, 5,373. Above that height there were only about 5,000 men,

5 feet 11 inches, 5,575. Above that height there were only about 5,000 men, and one-fifth are in the Household Cavalry, of whom 665 are over, and 378 less than an inch under, 6 feet. In the Guards notwithstanding the lowering of the standard from 5 feet 8 inches, there are but 505 men between 5 feet 7 inches, the new, and 5 feet 8 inches, the old, minimum. In the mater of chest measurement there were 2,376 under 33 inches and 5,513 between that and 34 inches. For each increased inch above that the respective numbers are 13,796, 16,303, 17,106 and 13,690. Above 38 inches the number are, of course much less.

Worship in a Japanese Temple

This is a common custom among the old people of the Buddhist faith. Having closed their account with life, they devote their remaining days, be they few or many, to propitiating Buddha, wearying him with incessant prayer for admittance into the heavenly state. We saw many of these people in the temple. Two, a neat old lady and a vigorous old man, were noticeable for the businesslike way in which they set about their task. They had taken possession of one of the little chapels that abound in the temple, a small alcove with a shrine crowded with gods, and filled up with little trays bearing food, each labelled with the name of the donor. Both man and woman were on their knees, and each had a tiny wooden hammer with which they incessantly struck a small gong. The old man, with the selfishness of his sex, had in addition possessed himself of a large bronze bell. From time to time he struck this, its sonorous notes drowning the sound of the woman's gong and fixing the attention of Buddha exclusively upon him. All the while both man and woman rapidly prayed, the old man occasionally breaking forth in song, with most comical effect. Like Ito's mother, they had come here in the early morning, and evidently meant to stay till the place closed. On a cloth before the shrine was a handful of copper coins, doubtless the joint offering of the worthy couple. Judiciously distributed, a 3-penny bit will go a long way in this kind of expenditure, and a day so spent need not be costly.—Temple Bar.

When distance lends enchantment to the view, does the view ever return it?

THE MYSTERY OF THE LAKES.

Cayuga's Bed of Craters—A Subterranean River Between Superior and Ontario.

"If you are ever drowned in Cayuga Lake, your friends need not go to the expense or trouble of dragging the lake for your body, for they'd never find it."

This was the cheerful remark made by a resident of Ithaca, who has a taste for geological research, and who has indulged it during the past few years in investigating the bottom of Cayuga Lake.

"From all I have been able to discover," said he, "the bottom of Cayuga Lake is a series of large openings and cavities, many of them resembling the craters of extinct volcanoes. Some of these are a hundred feet in diameter, and are all surrounded by raised rims, like the sides of a milk can. These craters, as I believe they are, lie at different depths, or, rather, are of different heights. Their depth I have never been able to sound, although I have lowered many hundred feet of plumb line into them. They are undoubtedly fathomless, and have become receptacles of the bodies of the hundreds of persons who are known to have been drowned in the lake during the past half century, and of the undoubted thousands of people killed in the fierce battles that were frequently waged on the shores of the lake between hostile tribes of the 'original people' years before the white man appeared on this continent.

"It was in Cayuga Lake that the wretch Rulloff lowered the bodies of his wife and child, enclosed in a chest, after he had murdered them, twenty years ago. The weeks that were spent in dragging for the chest was time thrown away, for it had sunk into the mouth of one of these and, if it is not sinking yet, is no doubt floating about in the bottomless depths where, in the ages past, fire and smoke and ashes were the dominant element.

"Within forty years between two and three hundred persons have been drowned in Cayuga Lake, to recover the remains of whom the grappling iron and drag have been used industriously, but in vain. If it were possible for one to make the rounds of this lake's crater-like bed, he would, beyond doubt, encounter hideous charnel houses beyond number—caverns where thousands of grinning skeletons have found their own sepulchre, subterranean catacombs without end. Water taken from a depth of 300 feet in Cayuga Lake—which must have been from one of these cavities—is strongly charged with sulphuretted hydrogen, nitrogen, carbonic acid, and the carbonates of lime,

"Cayuga Lake has also a mysterious tidal motion. It is irregular in its occurrence, but very decided. The phenomenon has been known to appear twice a year, and then two years or more have elapsed between its periods. The water frequently recedes fifty feet, the ebb is gradual, but the flood tide comes in with considerable force and rapidity. This phenomenon is also noticed on Seneca Lake, which is divided from Cayuga by the high Seneca county hills. The surface of Seneca Lake is sixty feet above that of Cayuga Lake, but I believe its bed is of the same remarkable character

Prehistoric Man In Egypt and Syria.

A gala meeting was held by the Victoria Philosophical Institute of London in the second week in May, at which its members gave a worthy welcome to Vice-Chancellor Dawson, C. M. G., of McGill University Montreal, at whose instance the British Association visits Canada this year. The Society of Arts kindly lent its premises for the occasion, and its great theatre was crowded in every part long before the hour of meeting. The chair was taken by Sir H. Barkly, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., F.R.S., who—after the new members had been announced by Captain F. Petrie, the secretary—welcomed Dr. Dawson amid loud applause, and asked him to deliver his address. It was on "Prehistoric Man in Egypt and Syria," and was illustrated by large diagrams, also flint implements and bones collected by Dr. Dawson himself on the spot during his winter tour in the East; Professor Boyd-Dawkins, F.R.S., kindly assisted in the classification of the bones. In dealing with his subject, Dr. Dawson remarked that great interest attaches to any remains which, in countries historically so old, may indicate the residence of man before the dawn of history. In Egypt, nodules of flint are very abundant in the Eocene limestones, and, where these have been wasted away, remain on the surface. In many places there are good evidence that the flint thus to be found everywhere has been, and still is, used for the manufacture of flakes, knives and other implements. These, as is well known, were used for many purposes by the ancient Egyptians, and in modern times gun-flints and srike-lights still continue to be made. The debris of worked flints found on the surface is thus of little value as an indication of any flint-folk preceding the old Egyptians. It would be otherwise if flint implements could be found in the older gravels of the country. Some of these are of Pleistocene age, and belong to a period of partial submergences of the Nile Valley. Flint implements had been alleged to be found in these gravels, but there seemed to be no good evidence to prove that they are other than the chips broken by mechanical violence in the removal of the gravel by torrential action. In the Lebanon, numerous caverns exist. These are divided into two classes, with reference to their origin, some being water caves or tunnels of subterranean rivers, others sea-caves, excavated by the waves when the country was at a lower level than at present. Both kinds have been occupied by man, and some of them undoubtedly at a time anterior to the Phœnician occupation of the country, and even at a time when the animal inhabitants and geographical features of the region were different from those of the present day. They were thus of various ages, ranging from the post Glacial or Antediluvian period to the time of the Phœnician occupation. Dr. Dawson then remarked that many geologists in these days had an aversion to using the word "Antediluvian," on account of the nature of the work which, in years now gone by, unlearned people had attributed to the Flood described in Scripture, but as the aversion to the use of that word was, he thought, not called PLANTATION NEGROES.

The Life of Field Hands—Their Domestic Relations.

Plantation negroes are, to those who see them for the first time, most miserable specimens of "men and brothers," if they are to be judged by their external appearance. They are usually very black in color, with pronounced negro features, and ignorant. In some cases they are but a few degrees above the animals. They live only in the present, know nor care nothing for the future, and seem to regard freedom as only the means of deciding for them whether they will work or remain idle, and, as may be supposed, if bacon and corn bread could be had without the labor, it is safe to say they would remain idle. I was told however, despite their dejected, work-a-day look, they are a very happy and contented people, and they are treated with much consideration and kindness on the two plantations I visited, being allowed to build huts and cut all their firewood on the lands, and in illness cared for either by the overseer or owner, who employs a physician in urgent cases. These plantations have also stores upon the grounds wherein the hands can buy at market rates all the necessaries of their lives, food, clothing, and shoes—in fact, anything that can be had at the usual or "general country store." And this has been done in order to keep the "plantation hands" at home, for if during the plantation season the hands can get off to town after a pay day there is no chance of their return until all their money is spent and either work or starvation stares them in the face. And, as most plantation hands are born and raised in the work, they know no other. Occasionally a more ambiguous or intelligent one will aspire to "learn to be a barber," and leave his "native heath," but it is said that they do not as a rule take to education, and prefer to remain ignorant and work by day, and if they can dance and frolic by night they are content with life as they find it. Their domestic relations and moral life is better left unquestioned in many cases, although the law compels marriage. It is often honored in the breach only, but they have the enthusiastic religious "revivals," and their colored preachers are ever on the plantations and hold services in their church at "Orton" for the religiously inclined. Some of the women seem disposed to think that the lives of "house servants" are more enviable than their own, working as they do in the hot fields, but it is not an energetic longing and involves too much thought to be put into active execution. One rather bright-looking young woman, to whom I spoke, asked me if I thought I could get her a "place" as cook at the north. I asked her what wages she earned as field-hand, and she said: "Mostly $3 a week, but they say I could get $12 for a month as cook!" Her mental arithmetic was a little off, but she was in earnest. I told her I did not think she would like the northern states, it was so much colder, and she laughed and said: "That's what they all say, miss; mebbe I would not." Freedom means to this class of people only the ability to earn money and provide for themselves, instead of having bed is of the same remarkable character. Seneca Lake rises and falls as much as three feet during the time of its tidal commotion, which is also irregular in its periods. I believe there is running from Lake Superiors through Lakes Huron and Michigan, under Lake Erie, and emptying into Lake Ontario. There is no other way in which to explain certain mysteries connected with our great lakes. The surface of Lake Superior is about 650 feet above tide, while its bed is about 260 feet below tide level. Lake Huron's surface is 50 feet below that of Superior's, and its bed is about on a level with Superior's. The surface of Lake Michigan is 300 feet lower than Lake Huron's, and its bed is sunk a corresponding distance to the level of the other two lakes. Lake Erie's surface is nearly as high as Lake Michigan's, being 565 feet above tide, but its bed is also above tide, being 350 feet higher than the ocean level, consequently its bed is 250 feet higher than those of the lakes above it. Lake Ontario's surface is the lowest of all the great lakes, being less than 500 feet above tide, but its bed is 260 feet below the ocean, or about the same level as Michigan, Huron, and Superior. So there is a continuous fall from Lake Superior to Ontario, and all the outlet that the upper lakes have that is known is the comparatively insignificant Detroit river. That stream never can care for all of that great pressure and volume from above, and the theory of an underground river such as I mentioned, seems to me most reasonable. All the St. Lawrence fishes are taken in every one of the lakes but Lake Erie. Why? Because they follow the course of the subterranean stream, passing 300 feet beneath the bottom of Lake Erie, and enter the waters of the upper lakes. The great lakes above Lake Erie have an occasional flux and reflux of their waters, corresponding with ocean tides save in regularity.

"The subterranean river, according to my theory, becomes occasionally obstructed by great obstacles that are constantly moving down from the lake bottoms. Then the channels of outlet are insufficient to carry off the great volume of water, and they are dammed back and the lakes rise. Finally these obstructions are swept away by the irresistible pressure, the river flows naturally once more, and the dammed waters subside. That is the whole mystery of the rise and fall of the tides in the great lakes."

Patience strengthens the spirit, sweetens the temper, stifles anger, extinguishes envy, subdues pride; she bridles the tongue, restrains the hand, and tramples upon temptation.

Advice is like snow; the softer it falls, the longer it dwells upon, and the deeper it sinks into, the mind.

Bacon is generally cured by smoking, but there are some hogs who are never cured by riding in a smoking-car.

"You are the most stuck-up chad I ever saw," remarked a young lady to a youth whom she met at a taffy pull, to which he retorted: "And you are just as sweet as you are candied." Another leap year horror!

for in these days, he hoped it would pass away. Speaking as a geologist, from a purely geological point of view, and from a thorough examination of the country around, there was no doubt but what there was conclusive evidence that between the time of the first occupation of these caves by men—and they were men of a splendid physique—and the appearance of the early Phœnician inhabitants of the land, there had been a vast submergence of land, and a great catastrophe, aye a stupendous one, in which even the Mediterranean had been altered from a small sea to its present size. In illustration of this, the caverns at the Pass of Nahr-el-Kelb and at Ant Elias were described in some detail, and also, in connection with these, the occurrence of flint implements on the surface of modern sandstones at the Cape or Ras near Beyrout; these last were probably of much less antiquity than those of the more ancient caverns. A discussion ensued, which was taken part in by a number of distinguished Fellows of the Royal Society, including Sir H. Barkly, F.R.S., Professors Wiltshire, F.R.S., Warrington Smyth, F.R.S., Rupert Jone, F.R.S.; Colonel Herschel, F.R.S., the talented son of the late Sir John Herschel; Dr. Rae, F.R.S., the Arctic explorer; Dr. Dawson, F.R.S.; Mr. D. Howard the vice-president of the Chemical Institute, and other geologists. The meeting afterwards adjourned to the Museum, where refreshments were served.

It was Sent to Her House.

A certain pretentious shopper, after teasing the clerks of a dry goods store beyond the forbearance limit, pompously ordered a spool of thread to be sent to her house. It was agreed that she should be made an example of, and a warning to her kind. She was surprised, and her neighbors were intensely interested, shortly after she had arrived at home. A common dray drawn by four horses proceeded slowly up to her door. On the dray, with bare arms, were a number of stalwart laborers. They were holding on vigorously to some object which she could not see.

It was a most puzzling affair. The neighbors stared. After a deal of whip-cracking and other impressive ceremonies, the cart was backed against the curb. There reposing calmly, end up, in the centre of the cart floor, was the identical spool of thread which she had "ordered." It seemed to be coming all right. With the aid of a plank, it was finally rolled, barrel fashion, safely to the sidewalk. After a mortal struggle it was "up-ended" on the purchaser's doorstep. The fact that the purchaser came out a minute later and kicked her own property into the gutter detracted nothing from it.

"That's the trouble in this part of the country," remarked a Texas editor, as a bullet crashed through the window and took a piece of his ear off. "You make a paper interesting and newsy, and you have got to dodge around to keep it up."

"Well, Johnnie," said a doating uncle to his little nephew, who had been fishing all day, "did you catch a good many fish?" "No, uncle, but I drowned a good many worms," was the reply.

everything provided for them, and it will be a long, long time before they are elevated or educated sufficiently to understand how much has been done for them. —Wilmington (N. C.) Cor. Troy Times.

To educate a youth so that he shall have a strong moral character, do not isolate him, but teach him to come out unscathed from temptation.

This is the law of benefits between men: the one ought to forget at once what he has given, and the other ought never to forget what he has received.

Falsehood is in a hurry; it may be at any moment detected and punished. Truth is calm, serene, its judgment is on high; its king cometh out of the chambers of eternity.

Those men who destroy a healthful constitution of body by intemperance and an irregular life do as manifestly kill themselves as those who hang, or poison, or drown themselves.

The everyday cares and duties, which men call drudgery, are the weights and counterpoises of the clock of time, giving its pendulum a true vibration, and its hands a regular motion.

Poetry teaches the enormous forces of a few words, and, in proportion to the inspiration, checks loquacity. Great thoughts insure musical expressions. Every word should be the right word.

Strength of character is not mere strength of feeling. It is the resolute restraint of strong feeling. It is unyielding resistance to whatever would disconcert us from without or unsettle us from within.

There is poetry and there is beauty in real sympathy; but there is more—there is action. The noblest and most powerful form of sympathy is not merely the responsive tear, the echoed sigh, the answering look, it is the embodiment of the sentiment in actual help.

A Hindoo was utterly puzzled by the use of the word baptism in the sentence. "He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved." Bap, he knew, meant father; tis he could not make anything of; but ma meant mother. He, therefore, concluded that on believing Jesus Christ would be his father and mother.

A man being accused of being so mean that he would quarrel about a farthing, retorted: "I know I would and I'm proud of it; for everybody knows that the 'less' one quarrels about the better."

The Government of London.

We are apt to think of London as a single, vast city, covering a wide area and teeming with a population of four millions of souls. What we do not fully realize is, that London, while geographically a great and compact mass, is, politically speaking, simply a combination of a large number of separate towns, each partially independent, in government, of the others.

What is called "the city of London" is but a very small part of the metropolis. The "city" comprises only about a square mile, and has a population at night of only about fifty thousand. It is this small section, consisting mainly of the business and financial quarter of London, which is ruled over by the Lord Mayor and Corporation.

Otherwise London is divided up into a large number of parishes, which are governed by "vestries," and into boroughs, like Westminster and Southwark, which have still another kind of government.

There are one or two "Boards" indeed, which exercise their functions throughout the whole area of the metropolis. These are the Board of Works, which establish the roads, make regulations for health, and look after the sewerage, water, and so on; the School Board, which presides over the national schools, and the Board of Police Commissioners, who manage the police force of the entire city.

Justice is meted out in the large part of London by police magistrates, who are appointed and salaried by the State. But in the "city" proper the Lord Mayor and Aldermen are the magistrates, serving—like the English country magistrates—without pay.

The many evils attendant upon the divided government of London have long been recognized; and now a bill has been introduced into Parliament changing the various local and independent systems, and combining London under one central system.

This measure proposes, indeed, to make London a sort of municipal federation, which we may compare with the United States. The Lord Mayor, chosen, not as now, by a small body in a single locality, but by the representatives of the whole metropolis, will find his authority extended throughout its limits. The Board of Aldermen is to be abolished, and a Common Council chosen by and for all London.

At the same time each parish and borough is still to have its local body, acting under the general one, and managing its local affairs, just as do our States under the general Government at Washington.

The present Corporation of the "city" is thus made the basis and nucleus of the new single government which is to hold sway, not over fifty thousand, but over four millions of people.

In making this great change, the Cabinet proposes that the people to be governed shall have a much larger share in electing their civic rulers than they have hitherto had, either in the "city" or in the parishes. The government of the "city" has already been chosen by the "livery-men" and the various trade guilds. Now, the mass of those who are interested in the conduct of municipal affairs will have a voice at the polls as to who shall assume it.

QUEER FACTS AND HAPPENINGS.

A New Albany firm gives every twentieth customer the amount of his purchase. The plan takes well.

"I have buried six family physicians, and still live," said Col. George L. Perkins of Norwich, Conn. He is 96.

The 14 year old daughter of George Wilhelm of Lima, O., jumped the rope 256 times and fell unconscious. She lay in that condition for twenty days before she died.

An enormous tree on the farm of James Reese, near Mountain Creek, Ga., was washed by the floods sixty feet from its place and is left standing upright. Foilage still covers it.

John Lowell of Wessington Springs, Dakota, was to be married on the 30th ult., but on that day he was compelled, unaided, to bury his affianced, her whole family having the diphtheria, and the neighbors being too much alarmed to assist.

A tourist in Montana travelled eight days and nine nights in the direction indicated by a finger board which read, "Six miles to Miles City," before he reached that place. Then he learned that the sign had been carried off by Indians, and stuck up there where he saw it.

A remarkable case of change of color is exciting the medical men of Santa Barbara, Cal. Four years ago a man named Pina was of very dark complexion. White blotches began to appear on his skin and now he is as white as any man, save on part of his face and hands.

G. L. Record of Vicksburg has an odd strawberry patch in which the plants are very prolific. He bored holes in rows around a hogshead at regular intervals of six inches, filling the hogshead with earth and set a strawberry plant in each one of the holes, besides putting a number on top. There are one hundred plants growing from the sides of this novel garden. Some of the berries are ripe and have attained great size, one measuring three inches in circumference.

Austria's Empress.

The empress is at once proud and capacious, says a Vienna letter to the London Daily News, and in some ways one of the most interesting, as well as extraordinary, women of her rank that the century has produced. She is equally proud of her hair and her figure, the first being as abundant as a Magdalen's—the latter slender as a girl's. The former she wears as loosely as possible; the latter she tightens as much as she can. Her waist belt used to be shown as curiosities in exhibitions. They measured only eighteen inches in circumference. I can remember but one other woman with a waist so small.

The emperor has always been a model husband, so far as admiration for his wife's beauty is concerned. He is reported to have said on one occasion that "the Empress Eugenie might be the most beautiful woman in the world if there were not my wife."

When the shah of Persia travelled some years ago in Europe, the Empress of Austria was the only sovereign who would not receive him. She shut herself

COOKING RECIPES.

Doughnuts.—One pint of sour milk, two eggs, one cup of sugar, one half teaspoonful of soda, lard size of an egg, salt.

Sally Lunn.—Three tablespoonsful of butter, two tablespoonsful of sugar, one cup of milk, three cups of flour, two eggs, one teaspoonful each of cream tartar and soda.

Layer Cake.—One cup of butter, three eggs, one and one-half cups of sugar, two and one-half cups of flour, one and one-half cups of milk, three teaspoonsful of baking powder.

Clear Soup.—Four pounds of beef, one-half gallon of water, boil slowly eight hours; skim and strain then add two onions, three stalks of celery, salt and pepper and boil twenty minutes and strain.

Poached Eggs.—Fill a frying pan with boiling water, add a little salt and vinegar. Break eggs, one at a time, into a wet saucer: slip upon the surface of the water, cook slowly three minutes. Take up with a skimmer.

Boiled Spice Pudding.—One cup of molasses, two cups of water or one cup of milk, one cup of suet or one-half cup of butter, one cup of raisins, four cups of flour or three and one-half cups when milk is used, one teaspoonful of soda, spice to taste.

Fig Pudding.—One and one-half pounds of flour, one and one-half pounds of figs chopped fine, one-half pound of beef suet, one half pound of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, a little spice, three eggs; mix with milk, tie in a cloth, and boil for four hours.

Chicken Soup.—One chicken jointed, two and a half pounds of beef cut into stripes, two onions, two turnips, one-half cup of sago, pepper and salt; chop onions and turnips: put all to boil in seven quarts of water. Take out meat and put into a jar. Strain soup through a sieve. Cook two hours more.

Lyonnaise Potatoes.—One quart of cold boiled potatoes cut into dices, one tablespoonful of chopped onion, three tablespoonsful of butter, one tablespoonful of parsley chopped fine. Fry the onion in butter till yellow, then stir in the potatoes and parsley, one teaspoonful of salt, one-half teaspoonful of pepper. Stir carefully with a fork so the potatoes will not get broken.

Beards.

Shaving became almost universal with the Restoration, the Second Charles, with whom the growth seems to have been naturally deficient, setting the fashion. Still, there were those who refused to surrender the beard. In Ely Cathedral, for instance, as late as the first decade of the eighteenth century, we see a bearded effigy of a Bishop of the See. Then came a long period, lasting down almost to his generation, during which no words were hard enough for the audacious creature who dared to show himself in the haunts of his fellows as, as it may be presumed, Nature had intended him to be. He was supposed to be revolutionary in politics, and heretical in faith, if not positively an atheist. Persons not yet middleaged will remember how fiercely the controversy in the conduct of municipal affairs will have a voice at the polls as to who shall assume it.

All the important functions, in short, of the municipal rule except poor relief, education, and police, are to be given to the new corporation. The council thus created is to consist of two hundred and forty members, this entire body being elected every three years. Of these, the "city" proper will have thirty members. The Lord Mayor will be elected by this council, and will be paid such salary as it chooses to vote him.

Each of the old vestry districts will have its "district council," all the powers of which will be derived from the general Common Council, and the members of which will be chosen by the voters of the locality itself.

Such are the main features of the scheme for the union of London into one great central government.

Russian Longevity.

Says Chambers' Journal: From a correspondent who has passed some years in Russia, we learn that in the village of Vellkotti, in the St. Petersburg government, an old woman is living who has just attained her 130th birthday! The old lady is in the enjoyment of good health, but complains of her deafness (and no wonder.) Her hair is still long and plentiful, considering her age. She spent her youth in great poverty, but is now pretty well off. She has outlived three husbands; and had a family of nineteen children, all of whom have been married, and are now dead, the last one to die being a daughter aged 93. She lives with one of her great-grandchildren, a man of 50. Our correspondent also informs us that a few months ago an unusually curious wedding took place in Ekatterinoslay, in Russia. The bridegroom was 65 years old, the bride 67. By former marriages, each of them have children and grandchildren, and even great-grandchildren living in the same town. The bridegroom's father, now in his 103d year, and the bride's mother, in her 96th year, are still alive, and were at he wedding.

Jealous Millionaires.

Speaking of the hatred of wealth, I observe a great deal of rancor between millionaires themselves. Gould and Vanderbilt are reputed to loathe each other. It is only lately that the Astors and Vanderbuilts came to speaking terms. When Villard went under the expressions of delight were by no means confined to men who had envied him in prosperity. And now that Jim Keene is suffering a disaster there is positive hilarity among Wall streeters. It seems to me that a mob which should pillage one millionaire's property would be encouraged and abetted by most of the millionaries. The joy is quite unconfined over Keene's downfall, however, on account of his personal obnoxiousness. Few men went near to him, on no matter how trivial the business, without going away inveterate enemies. He had a needlessly harsh, insulting manner, and rarely modified it on any occasion or towards anybody. It is not manly or courageous to strike a dead lion, but there are few men in Wall street who ae not this week doing it.—New York ror. Utica Observer.

some years ago in Europe, the Empress of Austria was the only sovereign who would not receive him. She shut herself up in a country castle all the time he was in Austria. She never could be induced to go to Paris during the empire, the style of living at the Tuileries not being to her taste. A short time ago, also, when passing through Paris, she would not go to the Elysee to return the president's visit. She never follows a fashion, it is said, but makes her own fashions, and, as all her inventions are suited to her own peculiarities of person, they do not become any other women. It was she who introduced the abominable fashion of high shouldered sleeves fulled in on the shoulders, a fashion which does little to her artistic taste, to say the least.

Altogether, however, Austria is proud of its empress, who, take her all in all, is a wonderfully attractive woman for her age. I must add that no woman ever studied her own beauty so much as the empress does. Every hour of the day is employed in its conservation. She rises at daybreak and goes to bed at dark, to keep her complexion clear, and she spends the day on horseback to keep her figure trim. Her food and drink are carefully regulated, and for the same object. This certainly better than painting her face, but it is a life of sacrifices which few women would be willing to lead, even for beauty's sake.

Earth Tremors.

Earth tremors produced by artificial disturbances, such as the passing of carriages or trains, the movements of machinery or bodies of people, are at our disposal for daily observation. At Greenwich Observatory the tremulous motion in the soil, especially noticeable on bank holidays and at all times when Greenwich Park was unusually crowded, resulted in the construction of an apparatus in which the dish of mercury used in the determination of the collimation error of the transit circle was suspended by flaccid springs. By means of this contrivance the tremulous motions of the ground were absorbed before they reached the mercury, and the difficulty of observation was overcome. French engineers, working with delicate surveying instruments in crowded cities, have similarly been compelled to suspend a portion of their apparatus, so that a steady image could be obtained. Professor H. M. Paul, seeking for a site for the Naval Observatory at Washington, found that the image of a star reflected from a tray of mercury was disturbed by a train passing at the distance of a mile. Lieutenant Colonel Palmer, when engaged in observing the transit of Venus in New Zealand, discovered that a ditch a few feet in depth was sufficient to entrench his instruments against the disturbance created by trains passing at a distance of 700 yards. Captain Denman found the effect of a goods train to be transmitted 1100 feet above marshy ground, but vertically above the train, passing through a tunnel in sandstone, disturbance extended only 100 feet. One result obtained from these and numerous other observations upon artificially produced tremors indicates that these disturbances were superficial, and although they may creep up the surface of a gentle sloping hill, their spread is checked by a steep cutting.

and heretical in faith, if not positively an atheist. Persons not yet middleaged will remember how fiercely the controversy raged. It sounds ludicrous now to a younger generation, which, thanks to the struggles of their elders, enjoy a perfect freedom in such matters; but it was not a laughing matter at the time. Bishops and judges, as has been said before, not only denounced, but persecuted, the beard. Masters forbade it to their employees. A West-End Bank, with a certain humour that does something to atone for the tyranny of the act, issued an edict that "gentlemen were not to wear beards or moustaches during office hours." Congregations deserted ministers who had the presumption to appear as according to all tradition, and indeed all probability, the founder of their religion appeared. Slowly the opposition became less vehement. A bearded clergyman was appointed to a Bishopric (not in England, it is true—that has not yet, we think, happened)—and declined to follow the suggestion of his Metropolitan, and shave. Now, every man may do as he pleases; but certainly, while he has to own a record of such unreasonable intolerance on the part of his own sex, he cannot say much about feminine subservience to Fashion.

A New Cure for Rheumatism.

A correspondent writing to Notes and Queries from Lincolnshire, England, says: "I am told that in the villages near here confirmation is considered a safe cure for rheumatism, and that, consequently, old persons are in the habit of presenting themselves to the Bishop from time to time, as often as they can get an opportunity, to receive the rite. The following story was told me lately as a fact, though I cannot be responsible for its absolute truth. The present Bishop of Lincoln, knowing of this belief, was on one occasion almost convinced that he had already lately confirmed a certain old man who presented himself among the candidates, and therefore he sent Archdeacon K. to ask him. The Archdeacon went up to him, saying. 'Have you been confirmed before?' but the man was deaf, so he had to repeat his question, adding, 'The Bishop thinks he has confirmed you before.' But the old man was, or pretended to be, still unable to hear, so the Archdeacon spoke again in a louder tone: 'The Bishop feels sure that he has confirmed you before.' Then the old man, hearing at last, and being perhaps a little nettled, replied gruffly. 'Tell un he's a lee'er, with which unique answer the Archdeacon was forced to be content."

Darwin says there is a living principle fruit. But we suppose he refers to the worms.

"What do we need of a navy?" asks an excited contemporary. To look after our floating debt, of course.

We must never undervalue any person. The workman loves not that his work should be despised in his presence. Now God is present everywhere, and every person is His work.

"And now, Mrs. Sullivan," said the counsel, "will you be kind enough to tell the jury whether your husband was in the habit of striking you with impunity?" "Wid what, sir?" "With impunity." "He was sir, now and thin; but he struck me oftener with his fist."

The Napanee Express.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, JUNE 13, 1884.

—Hon. J. G. Blaine, of Maine, has received the Republican nomination for the Presidency. His candidature is very unpopular with a large section of the party.

—The plain English of it is put in this concise style by the Tory editor of the Winnipeg Sun:—"'Protection to home industry' was a good phrase to conjure with some years ago, but the settler up here now understands it. It means that the Eastern manufacturer, finding that he was losing money, got Parliament to pass an Act enabling him to levy a tax upon the people in order to keep his business going. That is the plain English of it."

—The Adolphustown U. E. L. Centennial celebration commences Monday next and will be continued till Wednesday evening. The programme, published in THE EXPRESS last week, furnishes an excellent bill of amusement. It is reported that Sir John Macdonald will not be present on Monday but Sir Richard Cartwright and the other prominent speakers announced will positively be on hand, so that the disappointment will not be so great. It is to be hoped that the weather will be favourable and that the attendance will be large as is fitting for so important an occasion.

—Henry Ward Beecher lectured in Toronto a few evenings ago on "Evolution." The object of the lecture was to show that the theory of Darwinian evolution was in harmony with Christianity. The lecture was, of course, very clever and contained some good points along with many bad ones. Mr Beecher has, during the past few years, thrown aside orthodoxy and become an out and out Unitarian. It was his new view of religion that he presented to his Toronto audience, but not satisfied with confining himself to his subject he went out of the way to caricature in a coarse manner revivalists and their mode of conversion. The lecture was evidently a bid for the applause of the

A BUNGLED HANGING.

TOMPSETT AND LOWDER SWING INTO ETERNITY.

Horrible Suffering of the Wretched Men.

Early Tuesday morning in the neighboring town of Picton two men expiated the crime for which they were convicted, under circumstances which will never be forgotten by those who witnessed the hanging. Joseph Tompsett and George Lowder, aged 34 and 24 respectively, were sentenced to hang for the murder of Peter Lazier, who resided near the village of Bloomfield. The evidence was largely, in fact entirely, circumstantial. Though the trial was long and conducted with perfect fairness, and though the jury were unanimous in their verdict, the prisoners stoutly maintained that they were innocent. The murder was something new in Prince Edward County, and the execution stirred the people as they had not been stirred for years. Sheriff Gillespie, who much disliked the duties of the office, was literally besieged for tickets of admission to the gaol.

THE CLERGYMAN'S STATEMENT.

When the gaol was visited late Monday evening the condemned men were in a peaceful mood, the Rev. Mr. Loucks having spent some hours with them. Mr. Loucks and Rev. Mr. Coulthard had from the time of conviction of the men constantly attended them, and given them all the spiritual consolation they could. They wanted him to remain all night with them, but he said they had better rest. As he passed out of the gaol he remarked to the reporters, "They appear to be calm and resigned, they maintain innocence, and I believe that young Lowder is as innocent of committing the foul murder as I am, and if I believe the testimony of a man about to enter eternity I must believe that Tompsett is also innocent. His dying statement is to that effect. I have seen persons on their dying beds less contented than these poor fellows. To-day their friends called and bade them adieu. I was not present, but I am told the scene was most affecting. Tompsett's wife after her departure saw me and sent to her husband a cheering and loving message. "The men," Mr. Loucks went on to say, "have been most cruelly maligned by the papers. They have been trodden upon by a relentless public. I have warned them to tell the truth, and both called God to witness that they had neither part nor lot in the murder of Peter Lazier.

ALL HOPE ABANDONED.

In the afternoon of Monday the Sheriff obtained a telegram from the Secretary of State which ended all hope of reprieve. It read: "The sentence of death pronounced upon Joseph Tompsett and George Lowder is to be carried into effect. Answer repeating message." Later on a confirmatory message was received. It read: "The law must take its course."

THE LAST SLEEP.

After Rev. Mr. Loucks left them the convicts retired to their beds calm and collected, and having prayed long and fervently they slept quietly. At 3:30 o'clock Tompsett awoke and asked the time and resumed his slumber. Shortly before five o'clock the men arose. They were joined by Mr. Loucks, who remained with them till after six o'clock. Rev. Mr. Coulthard then entered and stayed with them until after seven o'clock. His final interview was deeply affecting; both prisoners broke down.

THE LAST MEAL.

About six o'clock they partook of breakfast, which they ate heartily afterwards. They then changed their prison clothes for those sent from home. Long before this

The rope was under Lowder's chin and the spectators remarked that his neck was broken as they heard it crack. Lowder struggled greatly, but at the end of five minutes the choking noise ceased, though his pulsation continued for nine minutes. Tompsett died hard—struggled and twitched, and kicked the pinions off his legs. Several times he drew them up and threw himself forward. His hands also were thrown around as much as the pinions would admit, and the spectators sickened at the sight.

A WISE MOVE.

The hangman disappeared, not waiting to hear the comments upon this dreadful bungling, and those who saw the hanging were also glad to leave the scene, and many wished they had never witnessed it. The hangman did not understand his business, and the case will strengthen the agitation for the appointment of one skilled in the dreadful work of death by hanging. At the end of 14 minutes the heart of Tompsett ceased to beat. Lowder's face, after hanging, was fearfully distorted, and very black, while Tompsett's was more natural.

The usual inquest was held and the bodies were interred in the gaol yard.

The following letters of Tompsett and Lowder were given Rev. Mr. Loucks, to be published after the execution:—

To the Inhabitants of the County of Prince Edward:—

"I thought I would write you a few lines before I die. I do not suppose anything I might say would cause you to change your minds regarding guilt or innocence, and even if I could it would be too late to rectify any mistake and bring me back to earth again. God is my witness that I am innocent of having anything to do with the murder of Peter Lazier, and when I am hung for that crime the innocent is punished for the guilty. I die bearing no malice or spite against any one, and my wishes are that all my enemies may be forgiven as truly as I hope to be forgiven for all my sins. Believe me, I do not die a murderer nor with a murderer's heart. If I knew who were guilty of the crime for which I am to suffer death I would make it known. I have not owned a revolver for two years past, and I have not fired one off for upwards of one year. I did not have a gun in my hands for six weeks previous to my arrest, and I was not in Mr. Gilbert Jones' house nor on his premises in my life to my knowledge. These are my last and dying words.

(Signed) GEORGE LOWDER."

TOMPSETT'S LETTER.

PICTON GAOL, June 9, 1884.

"Dear, kind and loving mother,—These are my dying words. I never knew that fatal shot was fired, nor that that man was killed, nor nothing of that murder; nor my boots never made them tracks; but the jury say I must die to pay some man's penalty. I am ready to die, but I die for something I never did. You want me to confess, but I never will to a crime I am not guilty of. I never was in Gilbert Jones' house in fifteen years, nor I never was at the door in four years. I never saw Jones get any money at the station, but I must say that it is like all the stories that are told of me. They won't let me alone and die in peace; they won't let my poor old father rest in the grave. You know father never had to pay one dollar for anything I ever done; but I forgive all those that swore false against me; I forgive all my enemies; I want them all to forgive me. With all the reports, no man can say I done him any wrong or took anything from him, but my shoulders, however, bore many wrongs that I never did. Mrs. Jones swore at the examination that the men were larger men than we were; and at the trial we looked just like the men. She said the man that fired the shot had on a gray suit of tweed. I had on my dark clothes that day. They say I fired the shot but thank God I was not there to fire any shot, so I cannot confess to that crime, nor I never will, if they will let me die in peace. I have made my peace with God. I would rather go to meet my reward than go to prison for life, so don't weep for me dear mother, sister, wife and daughter, for I am going to a better world where grief and parting is unknown." "All I can say will do no good; but if I could see you and tell you all about this, you would believe I am innocent. I declare to my God in these my last words. I never raised a hand to take innocent life nor slay my fellow man. I die an innocent man and I have made my peace with my Savior. I hate to leave you all but the law says I must. God does all things well. I have no spite or malice against any man. I forgive them all, hoping to meet you in a better world. I am happy. I himself to his subject he went out of the way to caricature in a coarse manner revivalists and their mode of conversion. The lecture was evidently a bid for the applause of the unbelieving and anti-Christian part of the audience which he obtained. Mr. Beecher left Toronto with fewer admirers among the good Christian men of the city than he had before.

M L PEARSON.

Napanee, May 23rd, 1884.]

About six o'clock they partook of breakfast, which they ate heartily afterwards. They then changed their prison clothes for those sent from home Long before this they had been notified of the refusal of the Government to interfere, and they manifested no surprise, having become reconciled to fate, and expressed a preference to die rather than go to penitentiary for life.

OMINOUS SOUNDS.

They had heard men digging the graves without for a moment losing their composure. At seven o'clock a reporter gained admission to the corridor on which the cells faced, and at the request of the prisoners took their dying statements.

ANTE-MORTEM STATEMENT.

Tompsett spoke the words deliberately: "I am innocent of this crime. I knew nothing of the man's death directly or indirectly until I was arrested. Up to ten o'clock that night I was at Lowder's. This is the truth, so help me God, as these are my dying words" He added that he was happy, that he had spite towards no one, and that he was ready to meet death. He forgave everybody and loved everybody as Jesus loved him. He desired to give an emphatic contradiction to the statement that he had at a former period killed a man with bird shot. "I have never before been arrested," he said, "never been fined, and until now never been in gaol."

LOWDER'S WORDS.

Lowder said he had written something for Mr. Loucks addressed to the people of Prince Edward, and that it would be published in due time. He desired this statement to go to the press:—"I know nothing about the affair. I was not present when the man was shot, and I am not a murderer at heart. I have written a few lines for the public, and Mr. Loucks will publish them, and the papers can copy them. There is no use saying anything, for the public will not believe me. I was at home the time of the murder."

LAST PREPARATIONS.

At 7.25 o'clock the Sheriff entered the gaol preceded by Rev. Mr. Loucks. The men prayed earnestly, and when the Sheriff announced that they should make preparations they arose, removed slippers, and held out their hands to be pinioned. The hangman—masked in convict clothing—went to the gallows and awaited the coming of the men. At 7.45 the bell of St. Mary Magdalene's Church tolled, and at 7.50 o'clock the procession filed up the stairs, Sheriff Gillespie leading the way, followed by the surpliced Anglican clergyman. The prisoners followed, lead by the death watches. The gallows was erected in the south end of the gaol in a corroder. The trap drop was of 6½ feet. The beam from which the ropes dangled was of oak and the supports of the same material. The minister read the burial service as the men stood side by side on the trap, both trembling visibly, and the hangman stepped around with cat like tread, adjusted the nooses, and pinioned the convicts' legs. Lowder watched the proceedings in a distressed way, then threw back his head and prayed for divine assistance. Tompsett stood calmly, but the twitching of his fingers demonstrated his agitation. Mr. Loucks offered prayer while the hangman donned the black caps.

"HAVE YOU ANYTHING TO SAY?"

said the Sheriff. Tompsett was silent. Lowder, with deep emotion, remarked, "I have said all I have to say; I am ready to go to God." He continued to pray aloud, his speech being indistinct amid his sobs. There was a moment's suspense, the men edged nearer each other, and with difficulty shook hands and said good-bye. The Sheriff struck the floor with his sword, and with great noise the trap dropped at 7.56 o'clock. The rope slipped between Tompsett's right ear and chin, and he struggled desperately. I have made my peace with my God as the law says I must, to leave you all but the law says I must. God does all things well. I have no spite or malice against any man. I forgive them all, hoping to meet you in a better world. I am happy. I can give up all the comforts of this world for my hopes of heaven. My heart aches for my sweet little girl, but God will take care of her and you all, till He thinks it best to call you home to the better world on high. Dear mother, wife and daughter, don't think I am the cause of this disgrace on you for I am not. Good-bye and farewell forever till we meet in a better world.

Your loving son, brother, husband and father,

(Signed) JOSEPH TOMPSETT.

Sad Accident at Kingston.

A most lamentable accident occurred at the house of Peter O'Neill, Bond Head-st., Kingston, on Sunday morning last. Peter O'Neill, aged four, while playing with his brother Tom, aged eleven, was fatally shot by him through accident. The particulars are as follows, as given by the boy who did the shooting :—

Shortly after 6 o'clock he awoke, the pain of his thumb preventing him from again falling asleep. He and Peter and Johnny, (the last named aged 13) were sleeping together. The little four-year-old brother was awakened by Tommy and they sat up, in bed. Then Tommy arose, crossed to the window and looked out. Peter was dancing upon the bed filled with childish happiness. In a few moments Tommy turned, and knowing that Johnny had a revolver in his pocket, fumbled through his clothes and captured it.

"Oh, Petey" said Tommy, "let us play. You be the robber and I'll be the peeler."

"All ite!" cried the little fellow, and he began to run up and down the bed.

"Hi there!" cried Tommy, an he drew up the revolver, and Peter laughed louder and romped about on the bed more than before.

Tommy by this time crying out "Hi there" pulled the trigger, cried out "bang" and there was a loud report. Peter, who was midway down the bed, ran up a few feet and fell upon the pillow. He didn't speak but raised his little hand nervously and apparently in great pain.

"Come, Petey, let's play it over again," said the innocent brother, but just then he saw the flow of blood staining the pillow, and he rushed from the room crying, "Mother, mother!" Johnny, the possessor of the pistol, was awakened by the report. The ball had passed right over his head. He jumped up and when his mother arrived handed the dying boy over to her.

Tommy, as he told the story in the police station, frequently cried. He said he did not know that the revolver was loaded. There was only one cartridge and it came to the nipple as the trigger was pulled. The revolver was, of course, confiscated. It was of the biggest size, and had been bought or borrowed by Johnny from George Clarke, a neighbor boy.

THE BOY PRISONER RELEASED.

After Tommy had made his statement the policemen conferred and decided to release him. The wounded child, very pallid, lay on the bed with a great rent in his cheek. His clothes were soaked with blood and the crimson, life-given fluid was dyeing the white coverlets. The mother sat beside the half unconscious child, her head and eye wrapped in white cloths. She had a terribly bloody eye, the result of a beating which she seems to have received. The life of the little fellow was fast ebbing. He struggled every little while and impulsively reached up his thin hand towards the wound, but his mother prevented him from touching it. There was positively no hope, as the ball had severed very important arteries. The nuns offered consolation as best they could, and shortly after dinner death came and the little sufferer was at rest.

HYMENEAL.—On June 5th Mr. Richard Babcock, aged 75, was joined in wedlock to Margaret Mima, aged 22, daughter of Mrs. Mima, of this place. Early in the morning Mr. Reube Garrison, with his splendid team, escorted the happy couple to Verona, where the ceremony took place. Their return was greeted by the congratulations of friends, and to prevent any noisy demonstrations, the happy bridegroom asked the crowd to wait until Tuesday, when he would be prepared to treat his friends in good style, which he did to the satisfaction of the crowd who gathered. Noise and fun were kept up while the spirits supplied lasted. We tender our congratulations to the happy couple.

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

After a week of intensely hot weather, a welcome rain came and has saved the grain and hay crops, which were suffering, especially on high lands with thin soils.

—It is expected the railroad will be finished to Tamworth this week. A switch and station are much needed here.

—Mr. A. C. Scott opens his ice cream parlor on Saturday, at which the Board will be present and Mrs Scott will be ready to supply the cooling cream to the happy ones.

—Mr. Burrows, Public School Inspector, visited the school Monday and found everything satisfactory. On Friday our teacher went to Napanee to attend the Teachers' Convention.

—On Friday morning Mrs. Walroth, wife of Mr. Garratt Walroth, sank to to rest after a long and painful illness which she bore with the utmost fortitude. She was highly respected by all who was acquainted with her, and they were many, from your own town and other places, especially the many commercial travelers who visited Yarker. She was earnest in her endeavors to entertain her guests, and in this she was very successful. No one ever left her table dissatisfied, but was loud in their praise of the treatment they received. On Sunday there was a large gathering of friends in the C M. Church to listen to the discourse of the Rev. Mr. Drew, upon the words of the Prophet Amos: Prepare to meet thy God. After the services in the church the body was taken to to the Wilton Cemetery, followed by a large number of friends. The pall-bearers were Messrs. J. V. POSTPONED.—On account of the centennial at Adolphustown, the social which was to be held here the 18th, will now be held Friday, the 20th. A grand time is expected.

Selby.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Mr. Quigley started last Tuesday for Dakota to visit his son and look after some land he owns there.

—Some others of our citizens, it is rumored, will shortly visit Huron County, Michigan, with the intention of investing, if the land proves as represented.

—Rev. Mr. Ferguson delivered his farewell sermon (so expected) to his Selby congregation, last Sabbath evening in the brick church. It was one of his best efforts. Mr. Ferguson will leave many warm friends in this vicinity.

—Rev. Mr. Robinson has been absent for some time, attending the Brockville conference. He will preach a temperance sermon next Sunday evening in the stone church.

—An ice-cream social will be given in the Thompson school house, east of Selby, next Saturday evening, 14th inst. Music, recitations and readings will enliven the evening. Admission 15 c.

—Wednesday evening, 18th inst., an ice cream social or a fruit festival will be given in the brick church, Selby. Rev. Mr. Card and Miss Card, of Napanee, Rev. Mr. Robinson, Mrs. Robinson, the Selby choir, and others will assist in the entertainment.

Sillsville.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—In spite of the long continued drought this part of the county is looking well, and if the showers of Wednesday do but continue to moisten the ground a good yield of all kinds is assured.

—A wedding on Wednesday of last week created quite a hum of excitement. The happy couple, Mr. Wm. Hurbet and Miss Cassie Youngs, have the congratulations of all.

—Messrs. Thos. and Felix Mellow have removed to Sandhurst. They are not entirely lost to Sillsville, however, as they are occasionally seen in this neighborhood.

—The return Base Ball match played in Bath on the 24th of May, between the club of that place and the Sentinels will be played on the grounds of the latter on Saturday, June 14. The score of 17 to 10, by which the Sillsville club were victorious, will probably be considerably lessened in the coming match, as the grounds of the home team are much smoother than those of Bath. A collection will be asked from the spectators of the game.

—Mr. D. Rikely is clapboarding and otherwise repairing his house. Coming events cast their shadows before and this is probably the prelude to a more interesting event.

—Our cheese factory is turning out a large amount of cheese of the finest quality. The amount of milk received is in excess of the most sanguine hopes of the stockholders.

A serious runaway occurred here on Tuesday of last week. Mr. Duncan Hough had harnessed a spirited young horse to a buggy for the first time. The rattle of the buggy over a piece of rough road frightened the animal, and caused it to rush against the fence and so escape from the grasp of Martin Hough, jr., who was leading him. He now became unmanagable, and escaped from Mr. Duncan Hongh, who had jumped from the buggy to stop him, and tore down the road, smashing three of the wheels of the vehicle and doing other damage before he was brought up by the lines winding about the axles and hubs.

—The centennial at Adolphustown is the main subject of conversation at present. The Sentinels propose camping on the ground and have entered for the prize to be given to the best base ball club. A challenge has been sent to the Clarks Mills team to meet them there. A hard struggle for the championship of this part of Ontario will no doubt be the result.

PERSONAL.—Mr. J. W. Hough, B.A., was visiting friends in North Fredericksburg for a day or two this week.—Mr. J. B. Robertson, of F. Calhaack's jewelry establishment was scalded about the face and head by the explosion of a spirit lamp on Saturday last. He is, however, regaining his beauty and enjoying a holiday at his mother's.—Miss Neely attended the Teacher's Convention at Napanee on Friday and Saturday of last week.

—For some time a drought was very much feared, but on Monday last, a welcome rain fell, moistening the parched earth and giving a great stimulus to vegetation.

—On Sunday last, the Reeve of Denbigh, on his way to attend the County Council, called on some friends adjacent to this place, where he domiciled for the night, taking his departure for Napanee on Monday.

—A number of vehicles of the buck board style have been brought in lately. It is said they are better adapted to the roads in this section than any other.

—Reports coming from parties in the west, formerly of this place, are rather unfavorable, as it is said the labor market is overstocked, employment very difficult to obtain and the wages low.

—In numbers, audacity, activity and penetrating powers, the mosquito excels other insects or animals in the vicinity of the lakes and marshes, from five miles to an indefinite distance to the north. Though it is said their numbers do not at all compare with those of some years ago, yet their hum or song, to the unitiated is very discouraging, and betokens danger and distress.

—Mr. A. P. Wickware has been given one thousand dollars, colonization road money, to expend north of Cloyne Operations were begun about a week ago about five miles distant, and will continue towards the north till the money is spent. According to all accounts the road to what is called the head of the Massinoque is in a bad condition, and from the latter to the Snow road, and on to the Madawaska river, is not only dangerous but almost impassable, becoming more and more so as you travel north. The chief obstructions are the large heaps of stones and immense pine roots the rains and melting snow have laid bare, the material of which the road-bed is composed, being so easily moved and so difficult to solidify.

—The Government mining inspectors paid a visit to some of the mines in this section and gave favorable reports of the auriferous deposits.

DEAR JANE,—Yarker is fortunate in having a current of pure air continually passing over the place and so invigorating to the system that the inhabitants step higher and lighter than they do in other rural villages. It is thought by many that their robust appearance is due largely to the excellent bread they daily eat. It is manufactured in the place, weighs four pounds to the loaf and is as light as a man's conscience after he has freely contributed towards the minister's salary. It is no wonder Mr. Scott manufactures good bread for the Yarker grist mill turns out flour of a superior grade and as white as a charwoman's washing after using electric soap.

Notwithstanding the good health the inhabitants as a general thing enjoy, two eminent physicians are located here, and deal out pills and other nauceous mixtures to the ailing public.

The scenery here is delightful; the lovely fall of water puts one in mind of Montmorencey. The river at this point is quite narrow—

But farther up it's much wider,
So I'm told by Hial Snider.

There are but few private gardens but those they have are so artistically arranged that they present a pleasing appearance to the eye.

The country around here is not very prepossessing. There is a collection of houses a short distance below the village and it is generally acknowledged by all that

A man might better kick the bucket,
Than spend his days down in Wood Mucket.

In what particular part of the military drill are the Yarker young men proficient?

There is considerable talk here about the coming U. E. Loyalist celebration. Some of the inhabitants claim to be lineal descendants and are characterized by their intense loyalty to the Queen, and in case of trouble with a foreign power would no doubt be the first to buckle on the armour. Even now on public they are extolled for their pugilistic encounters.

Mine host professes to make a specialty of fancy drinks. I ordered a Suffolk Punch; I see he didn't like it but smiled as usual. His smile is worth two common sized laughs.

I have had the pleasure of forming the acquaintance of the gentleman you alluded to in your welcome letter of the 2nd inst. He is possessed of good morals and is a shrewd financier, and no doubt it will be a pleasure for you to hear that notwithstanding the beauty and accomplishments the Yarker young ladies possess he is still unmarried, and it's for you

My dear sister, to come and then —The bronze statue of the late Hon. George Brown may be expected to arrive here at the end of August or the beginning of September.

—Henry G. Venner, long known to the public as a weather prophet, and in education circles as a scientific man, died in Montreal on Monday. In him Montreal loses one of her foremost citizens.

—The sure effects of Ayer's Sarsaparilla are thorough and permanent. If there is a lurking taint of Scrofula about you, Ayer's Sarsaparilla will dislodge it and expell it from your system.

—Two giant powder cartridges, with fusos almost entirely burned, were found on Saturday, under the lock-up, Northville, Fulton County, N. Y.

—A whisker dye must be convenient to use, easy to apply, impossible to rub off, elegant in appearance, and cheap in price. Buckingham's dyes for the whiskers unites in itself all these merits. Try it.

—Mr. H. C. Work, the song writer, who wrote "Marching through Georgia" and "Grandfather's Clock," died at Hartford, Conn., on Sunday evening.

—A man named Casse, acting as a private detective, fatally shot a man on Wednesday at Orillia. He was trying to make an arrest in a house of ill-fame, on a charge of robbery, and in a desperate struggle the accident occurred.

—As a sure remedy for Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation, Torpid Liver, Biliousness, &c., no medicine is equal to Dr. Baxter's Mandrake Bitters. 25 cents per bottle.

—A suit of pearls owned by the late Lady Otho Fitzgerald has been privately bought by Queen Victoria, for £40 000, and is intended as a present to Princess Beatrice.

—To cure Consumption, Ulceration in the Lungs must be stopped, the matter must be thrown off, the membranes and tissues healed and the system invigorated. Downs' Elixir will do all this. Try it. Every bottle warranted.

—China has conferred upon Admiral Lespes, commander of the French fleet in Chinese waters, the order of the Double Dragon, which carries with it the title of Mandarin.

—Health is a duty, disease a crime. Use Dr. Henry Baxter's Mandrake Bitters and be cured of all biliousness or liver trouble. 25 cents will buy a large bottle.

—J. A. Whelpley, of Greenwich, N. B., has invented a three-wheeled vehicle which can be turned safely in its own length. A carriage firm have already decided to introduce the invention in their works.

—Charles Clarke, of the Bay of Quinte House, Kingston, has a curiosity at his farm in the shape of a four-legged chicken. Two legs are in the usual place, the other two shoot out from under the wings.

"I had been for eight months unable to work and felt as though I would lief die as live, through Dyspepsia and Indigestion. I weighed at the time of getting a bottle of McGregor's Speedy Cure 130 ibs.; used 3 bottles, and now weigh 165 lbs, and never was better in my life. It was McGregor's Speedy Cure that brought me around." So says Wm. Fell, Hamilton, Go to T. A. Huffman's and A. W. —The race between Wallace Ross and Courtney did not come off on Saturday as Courtney was missing when time was called. Wallace Ross is disgusted with Courtney and will not row with him again. Some days before the race he proposed to Ross that he should be allowed to win, but Ross to take the money. Ross on Saturday pulled over the course and claimed the $2,000.

A Fact.

There are oils white, and oils black,
Put up in bottles short and tall,
But Hagyard's Yellow Oil, for pain,
Is the very best oil of all.

It cures rheumatism, neuralgia, deafness, sprains, bruises, contracted cords, sore throat, frost bites, burns and all soreness of the flesh. It is for external and internal use.

Danger in the Air.

The recent strange planetary movements and electrical phenomena have developed the fact that the earth is passing through a strange period when atmospheric influence will seriously affect human health. Fortify the weakened system with that grand tonic regulator, Burdock Blood Bitters, and avoid malarial blood poisons Remarkable Restoration.

Mrs. A. O'Brien, 372 Exchange street, Buffalo, was supposed to be dying with consumption and abandoned by her physician. She suffered terribly and was reduced to flesh to ninety pounds. In this condition she resorted to Burdock Blood Bitters, and now enjoys perfect health and weighs one hundred and forty-six pounds. She will gladly answer enquiring sufferers on receipt of U.S. postage stamp.

Round About Us.

—Messrs. Downey & Preston are building a new dock around their lower elevator, Belleville.

—A fire occurred at Storrington on Wednesday night about 12 o'clock, in the house occupied by a woman named Mrs. Hawk. A spark which lodged in the roof caused the blaze. The occupants had a narrow escape from injury, being awakened from their sleep by the fire. The house and furniture were demolished. No insurance.

—The will of the late D. D. Calvin, of Garden Island, has been entered for probate. The property is divided equally among the five children, four of whom survive. These are Mrs. J. A. Hendry, Kingston; Hiram A. Calvin, Garden Island; Mrs. N. G. Bigelow, Toronto, and Sanford C. Calvin, Garden Island. The children of Mrs. Crevolin, Cape Vincent, will receive the share the demised lady is entitled to. The estate is worth over $450,000, the personal property in the Province of Ontario being valued at $324 000. There is considerable property in the United States and the Province of Quebec.

—The 3.30 express train from the East Tuesday morning came very near meeting with an accident. When about a mile from the G. T. R. station, Kingston, the cow-catcher struck two ties that had been placed on the track by tramps, no doubt for the object of plunder. One of the ties, fortunately, was shunted off the track, the other was carried to the station in the ash pan of the engine. The night was dark and the engineer says he did not see the obstruction, but could hear something grating when the engine struck the ties. Seven or eight tramps had been seen loitering about where the ties were laid on the track.

A GHOST STORY

"I am going to be married, my dear. I can see the tears in your eyes as you say to Harry, 'Poor Sibyl! she can never be happy as we are.' Of course I can not. No woman can who does not marry her first love, while her past is without regret, and her future without shadow. But I am going to marry what is more rare than first love—perfection. Absolutely he has not a fault, and the wonder of wonders is that he should desire the society through life of one who is so full of faults as I am. He is clever, rich, amiable, good-looking, thirty-two, respected of all men, and (until within the past week) praised of all women. Can you wonder that dear mamma, who has been a little anxious about me this last year or so, is as happy as a queen, and that my acquaintances are all loud in their congratulations? But then, as they say, 'Sibyl Van Eyck has always been a lucky girl.' You and I, my Kate, might differ with them as to that, only it is not worth while recalling such a very old and commonplace mishap. Indeed, I am not without a realizing sense of my mercies myself, for that a young woman facing her thirtieth birthday so nearly as I do, and who has played fast and loose with such good cards as kindly Fate has hitherto thrust into her hands—that such a young woman should become Mrs. Brian Chester is truly a wonderful favor of Fortune. It is not the first time that you have seen his name in my letters, and I dare say that with your usual sagacity you have had suspicions of what might come to pass? Behold me at length on the eve of marriage, figuratively that is, for we are not to be married until June, and this is only January, but it seems very near to me.

"Shall I whisper something to you, my Kate, so low that not even Harry shall hear it? (I know you keep my secrets even from him). I respect Brian Chester, I admire him, I am proud of his preference, and I feel safer and more at rest with him than I ever did in my life—yet, oh, Kate! Kate! it is not such a love as yours for Harry in the days of your love-making, nor like mine for—the knight who wooed and rode away. Is it because I am twenty-eight, and such a dreadful flirt, as people say, or because Mr. Chester's affection for me is so very cheerful and matter of fact? He is evidently incapable of jealousy, and evinces a beautiful faith in me, which my past has scarcely justified. I ought to be immensely flattered, but I am not, for that perfect love which casteth out fear is divine, and far above poor, passionate, doubting humanity. Do not, however, imagine me so foolish as not to know that I am more nearly happy than I have been for years, and that I shall be a very contented woman as Mrs. Brian Chester. Kiss your small Violet for me, and give my love to Harry. I can trust him, whatever his criticisms may be, not to say, as Bob Lisle did when Mary Vincey was married last month, 'Another old landmark gone!'

Always your loving

SIBYL."

With a faint smile at Mr. Lisle's very uncivil remark, Miss Van Eyck addresses her letter, and leaving her writing-table Eyck, and that you have had enough experience of the world to make you wise, but, for all that, you are a child, and a child in some things you will remain as long as you live."

"Ah! you do not know how much nicer I was ten years ago," she says, laughing nervously.

"If I have the bad taste to be content with you as you are, I do not see that it is of any consequence," he says, again taking her hand. "Besides I do not believe it."

"I wish," she began, wistfully, while tears stand in her eyes—"I wish we had known each other then, and that I had never—never—"

"Never fancied you cared for some one else," he breaks in abruptly. "Look here, dear—here in my eyes;" and he puts one arm about her, while he keeps her hand. "Tell me nothing yet; I am not a jealous man, nor afraid of ghosts, and it is not your past I want, but your present and your future."

When he is gone she stands before one of the long mirrors, smiling at herself rather defiantly.

"You have found your master, Miss Van Eyck," she is thinking: "A good master, a tender and true master, but just a little too sure of himself."

When Brian Chester enters his rooms, the first thing he does, after lighting the gas, is to find the evening paper, and glancing hastily over it, to read with sure instinct two verses in its columns.

"Very worldly-wise indeed, my poor little girl," he says to himself, as he lays it down with half a smile and half a sigh; "and a very shabby thing of me to hunt up the cause of your tears after refusing to hear it; but you are more mine now than you think, and you shall be altogether mine yet, in spite of the ghost."

But, for all that, his eyes have a troubled look not usual to them, and he smokes more cigars than are good for him before he goes to bed.

"If I were a jealous man (which, thank Heaven, I am not), I should endure some exceedingly uncomfortable hours," says Mr. Chester, smiling placidly, as he takes possession of Sibyl for a waltz, some six weeks later, at one of the last parties before Lent; "for upon my word these fellows seem to think that I have no right whatever to more than a stray dance."

"Being a philosopher (which, thank Heaven, you are), I suppose it makes no difference to you," she answers as they waltz off.

"I admire their good taste, and am thankful for what I can get at present; also I have some faint idea that Mrs. Chester will give up round dancing."

Sibyl pauses abruptly, and moves out of the circle of waltzers.

"Do not you mean to be a philosopher about—Mrs. Chester?" she asks, softly, looking up at him with radiant eyes and flushed cheeks.

"Do you think that I am always a philosopher now?"

Her color deepens, her eyes turn from his, and then, with a little cry, she puts her hand on his arm, growing suddenly white, and gazing fixedly at somebody behind him. He turns instinctively, and sees a tall, very handsome man, staring at Sibyl with more fixity than politeness permits.

his utter ignorance of the circumstances prevents him from being able to judge whether such a thing could come to pass. To add to his anxiety, during the four days he is in Boston he does not receive even so much as a line from her, though she had promised, half laughingly, to write every day. The result of all of which is that, after having been so absent-minded as to cause his business friends much amazement, he returns to New York two days earlier than he had intended, leaving his affairs very much as he had found them. An hour after his arrival he is walking up the familiar street on which the Van Eycks live, with a great deal of outward cheerfulness, and an old mingling of self-contempt and anxiety at his heart, for he will know his fate in another ten minutes.

"My fate indeed!" he mutters, with rather a failure in the way of a smile. "If I were anybody else what a jealous fool I should call myself!"

Then he starts as if he had been shot, for ascending the steps of the Van Eycks' house, with the confident manner of one who does not come for the first time, is Mr. Devereux. Very still stands Mr. Chester—very still and very pale for a man who is "not jealous or afraid of ghosts"—until Mr. Devereux has rung and is admitted.

"I will wait until he leaves; he will not be long," he thinks, with a strong momentary desire to follow him and confront him and Sibyl together, though all his life he has had the true Anglo-Saxon horror of anything like a scene.

He walks rapidly down to the end of the block, and returns slowly, with his eyes on the Van Eycks' door; but Devereux's visit bids fair to be a lengthy one, and he has time to repeat his manœuvre many times, to the great interest of a couple of school-girls, who from an opposite drawing-room window, are speculating excitedly as to what "Miss Van Eyck's lover" can be about. It is not very fatiguing for a man to pace up and down a block for an hour, and yet, when that time has elapsed, Brian Chester's face has grown oddly worn and haggard-looking. God pity us all! We can most of us remember some such hour, whose sixty minutes held an eternity of suspense, but let those of us render thanksgiving all our days who feared in that hour only death, not faithlessness, for our heart's beloved. It is nearly six when Van Eyck's door opens and closes again on Mr. Devereux, who walks quickly down the street in an opposite direction from Chester, but the latter scarcely glances at the receding figure as he springs up the steps.

"Miss Van Eyck is in the drawing-room," the servant tells him, as he passes in.

Outside it was nearly dark, and here it is quite so, except when the fire is a blaze of light; but he sees her at once, crouched in the corner of a sofa by the chimney, and weeping—ah! weeping as even women given to tears weep only once or twice in their lives. At the sight of that drooping figure, and the sound of those strangled sobs, the strong heart of Brian Chester turns faint and sick, for he knows so well, with such wonderful dreary conviction, just what she has done, and what he must do now. He casts one farewell look about the familiar room,

SIBYL."

With a faint smile at Mr. Lisle's very uncivil remark, Miss Van Eyck addresses her letter, and leaving her writing-table, seats herself in a low arm-chair near the fire.

"I will give it to him to post," she thinks, as she listlessly takes up the evening paper.

For a second or two she glances indifferently over it, and then she reads earnestly, while her face softens, her eyes fill, and two heavy tears fall on the paper as she drops it on her lap. Only a couple of verses, with no beauty or power beyond their truth, and yet they can send her thoughts back over eight years—such a long, long time out of one's youth!—and make her head ache with pity for the difference between the woman of twenty-eight who is to marry Brian Chester, and the girl of twenty who loved so foolishly and so tenderly that the ghost of a handsome, fond, false face can come between her and her future husband even now.

Sibyl Van Eyck is a young woman very appreciative of the advantage of becoming surroundings, but just now she is quite unconscious that her fair head and slender figure in its pale blue trailing dress make a picture very pleasing to a man's eyes as she lies back in a crimson chair in the soft warm glow of the fire. Her thoughts have gone so far and so fast that she does not hear the door open and close, nor a man's quick step on the thick carpet. She has forgotten that she ought to be expecting Mr. Chester, until he seats himself beside her and takes calm possession of one of her hands. She comes back to the present with such a start that he laughs.

"You look as if you had forgotten all about me;" and then gently kissing the hand he has taken, he lets it go, and leaning back in his chair, makes himself comfortable after the fashion, more easy than elegant, of our generation.

She colors like a school girl, though she is "twenty-eight and such a dreadful flirt," and she puts the paper out of sight under the train of her dress.

"And if I had, sir?" she asks, lightly. "I dare say you forget me, often enough, for more than five minutes?"

"Never," he says, rather shortly; and then, after an instant; "What were you crying for just now?"

"Do you not know that we women cry for anything, or nothing?"

"Not you; but do not tell me unless you wish to do so."

"I assure you I have no such intention," she says, gayly. "Does your lordship think that I shall make you my confessor?"

"Some day—yes," he answers, quietly, and looking not at her, but at the fire.

Very quickly she lifts her eyes to his face—a very frank and pleasant face, with a look that shows its owner well content with the world and himself, but just now a little graver than its wont, and she wonders, with a thrill of the same pity she had felt for herself, whether he too in the years which lie behind him has missed something of life's completeness.

"You and I are too old and worldly-wise for that," she says, rather sadly.

"Old?—you child!" his eyes meeting hers with a smile half amused, half tender. "I am aware that you have reached the awful age of twenty-eight, Miss Van [illegible] him. He turns instinctively, and sees a tall, very handsome man, staring at Sibyl with more fixity than politeness permits.

"Take me away—out of the room—somewhere," she murmurs.

Very much bewildered, he obeys, and presently finds a seat for her in a small deserted room.

"You are tired?" he says, tenderly. "Shall I get you a glass of wine?"

"No, No; stay with me. It is he," she says, looking up piteously in his face, which at those very enigmatical words grows rather pale.

"Who?—the ghost?" he asks, unsteadily.

"Mr. Devereux. I have not seen him since I—since I— Oh, what will you think of me?" she cries, with a sudden burning blush at the change and trouble in his face. "Indeed, it is only the surprise."

"Of course," he says, positively. "You will not mind, now that you know he is here, and when you are a little rested I shall steal somebody else's waltz instead of the one we have lost."

But in spite of his positiveness and her efforts at composure an uncomfortable silence falls upon them, which she breaks by proposing to return to the ball-room. In the doorway they are met by their hostess, and Mr. Devereux himself.

"Sibyl, dear," says the lady, hurriedly, "here is a gentleman who claims to be an old friend, but doubts whether your memory is so good as his."

"My memory is excellent," Sibyl answers, rather coldly, but with that utter self-possession which comes to most women in bitterest need. "I perfectly remember my acquaintance with Mr. Devereux."

"Then that is all right, and I shall carry you off, Mr. Chester."

"We will go together, dear Mrs. Burns," Sibyl says, with her hand still on Brian's arm. "Mr. Chester is going to take me to mamma."

"Will you not permit me?" says Mr. Devereux, speaking for the first time, in a voice which falters perceptibly.

"Thanks, no; I will not trouble you."

"Then may I not have a waltz, or a square dance, for—for 'auld lang syne'?" The last words are very low and eager, but Mr. Chester hears them as distinctly as if they had been spoken in his ear.

"My card is full, thanks," is the steady answer, and then all four enter the ball-room, where Mrs. Burns takes Mr. Devereux in one direction, while Sibyl and Mr. Chester go in another to search for Mrs. Van Eyck, and within half an hour they are driving home.

It can not be denied, though Miss Van Eyck's lover is not a man given to jealousy, that the next week is the longest and most uncomfortable which he can remember. Business compels him to go to Boston so early on the morning after Mrs. Burn's party that he does not see Sibyl again, and in spite of her dignified repulsion of Mr. Devereux he can not forget her pale face and piteous eyes when she had first seen the "ghost." He is convinced that Devereux will do everything possible for a reconciliation, and he calls himself an insane idiot for having refused to hear the story of her first love, which Sibyl had seemed to wish to tell him, for knows so well, with such wonderful dreary conviction, just what she has done, and what he must do now. He casts one farewell look about the familiar room where he has been so happy, and then his eyes return to the woman he loves and suffers for, as only a man can to whom neither love nor jealousy comes easily.

"Sibyl!" he says, abruptly, in an odd, hoarse voice, which vaguely surprises him it is so unlike his. "Don't cry so terribly; there is no need."

She springs to her feet and faces him n the fire-light with a low cry, and a look that changes instantly from surprise to pity and terror.

"Brian!" she says, tremulously, taking both his hands in hers, "Are you ill, dear?—or has something dreadful happened?" It is the first time she has ever uttered his name, the first time those shy fingers ever sought his, but she does not think of that in fear of the calamity which can have so changed calm, cheerful, philosophical Brian Chester.

At the frightened compassion in her eyes, he glances suddenly in the mirror over the chimney, and stares at himself, with the dull wonder men feel when they are brought face to face with the change an hour's agony can work in them.

"I am a fool," he says, presently, with a miserable laugh, and dropping into the nearest chair, he draws his hands from hers and covers his face.

For an instant she is silent, and then the despair in every line of the bent figure gives her courage.

"Dear," she whispers, kneeling beside him, "surely I, who am to be your wife, may share your troubles, and—comfort you?" and with a rush of tenderness that sweeps her old doubts and fears away forever, she tries to draw his head against her shoulder.

But he springs to his feet, with a flush on his haggard face. "For Heaven's sake do not make it harder for me to give you up!" he gasps.

"Give me up?" she repeats, rising too, and trembling very much.

"You never wrote me"—he begins, passionately.

"Because I would rather tell you than write," she interrupts, quickly.

But he goes on, bitterly: "I saw that man leave the house after he had been here an hour, and I find you breaking your heart for him. What have I done that you should think I would accept such a sacrifice? Do you think I want your life without your love?" He pauses, with a struggle for the self-command that seems to have so utterly deserted him, while she stands silent, with down-bent head and clasped hands. "I see it all," he says, presently, in a very low voice, whose forced steadiness it takes all his resolute will to maintain. "You have loved only him always, and you sent him away to-day that you might keep your faith to me, like the brave, true woman you are; but he will be easy to recall, so—so God bless you!"—and he turns rather blindly toward the door.

But she stands swiftly before him with out-stretched hands, and tearful, shining eyes.

"Oh, Brian, I am no heroine, only a foolish woman to whom God is very good. Mr. Devereux will never again be even a ghost to me. And you—do you wonder I was crying for those years when I fancied I cared for him, and which ought to have been yours, with all the rest of my life—my love?"

Wild Vines About The House.

While admitting that many foreign plants are all that is claimed for them, I like our own native ones best, because I see great merit in them. I never have understood why persons of excellent taste should neglect them, unless it is because they are not familiar with them. There is no finer vine for use about the house than the Virginia Creeper, (Ampelopsis quinquefolia). It is found almost everywhere at the north and is hardy. It grows rapidly, is easily transplanted, has beautiful foliage, and is a miracle of gorgeous coloring in autumn. After the leaves have fallen its purple berries are more ornamental than the flowers of many plants. It is, or should be, to us Americans, what the Ivy is to the Englishman. I you want something to drape the veranda, you can select nothing better. If you wish a vine to climb up to, and all along, the eaves and around the second-story windows, this is the plant to get. The Virginia creeper is a robust, self-reliant vine, and will take care of itself and delight all with its luxuriance if it is given half a chance.

Another very desirable vine is the Bittersweet (Celastrus scandens). It has beautiful, bright foliage, which is seldom infested with insects. During the later part of the season its clusters of scarlet berries, enclosed in orange husks, which part snd disclose the fruit within, are showy enough to suit any one. These berries hang on all winter if the birds let them alone. For verandas and porches the Bittersweet or Wax-work is quite equal to the Virginia creeper, and that is high praise.

Another most beautiful plant for those who do not consider that beauty depends on bright and vivid color is, our native Clematis, or Virgin's Bower. This vine has fine and vigorous foliage, and in July is covered with thousands of delicate, white flowers, of delicious fragrance. One of the finest effects that I have ever seen produced by growing two plants together on a trellis, was made by training a Clematis among climbing roses. The contrast of the pink and white flowers was simply exquisite, and the dainty grace of the Clematis added a greater charm to the roses. For use in vases in the house, the long sprays of Clematis, when in bloom, are finer to my mind than anything else to combine with flowers of vivid color. It is easily transplanted and, like the other two native climbers, will take care of itself.

How Animals Play.

Small birds chase each other about in play, but perhaps the conduct of the crane and the trumpeter is most extraordinary. The latter stands on one leg, hops around in the most eccentric manner, and throws somersaults. The Americans call it the mad bird, on account of these singularities. Water birds, such as ducks and geese, dive after each other, and clear the surface of the water with outstretched neck and flapping wings, throwing abundant spray around. Deer often engage in sham battle, or trial of strength, by twisting their horns together and

AGRICULTURAL.

Early Matured Beef.

All intelligent feeders know, from actual experiments, that the younger an animal is, the less food it takes to produce a pound growth in live weight, and they know that the amount of food increases regularly with the age of the animal. When the animal is full fed, it requires less food to put on a pound live weight the first six months than for the second six months, and less the second than the third, and so on; and the reason is, that the food of support constantly increases with age. Our fat stock shows have now proved, most conclusively, under cost of production, that the animal eighteen months old costs less than half as much per pound as the one thirty-six months old.

Early matured beef is becoming more and more popular every year. Three and four-year-old cattle will seldom be seen in market ten years from now, unless from the unfenced range. The lessons of the Fat Stock Show will be heeded, and very soon the old-style feeders will be compelled to change their system of alternate feeding and starving, or they will be obliged to quit the business of feeding. Feeding is now becoming an art, requiring expert knowledge of foods and their combination, and this knowledge cannot be disregarded without certain loss.—National Live-Stock Journal.

Petroleum for Farm Uses.

A correspondent of the Rural New Yorker writes as follows:—Crude petroleum is a wonderful preservative of wood, but it is in no sense a paint, and should have no pigment whatever mixed with it. It has none of the drying properties of linseed oil, and will never harden upon a surface. On the contrary, it will penetrate where water cannot, filling the pores of wood and completely excluding wet. There is nothing equal to it as a first application to buildings or fences, especially when rough and weather-beaten. I have so applied it, leaving it a few weeks to the action of the air and hot sun, then covering with lead and linseed oil. The wood-work of my farming tools is kept full of it. Applied hot to waggon felloes from time to time, the tires will never loosen. For years I have used it in a multitude of ways, and a barrel of light crude petroleum I should not like to be without. Almost any city has a refinery where it may be procured, and it costs me, per 50-gallon barrel, freight and all, about $5. But if you get any, get understanding with it, and don't try to make a paint of it. Don't grease your harness with it, and don't use it to kindle your fires.

Regular Feeding.

Irregularities as to the amount of rations for morning, noon, and night, will often serve to check all improvement, or even to induce loss of condition. In working horses this becomes especially manifest; those that are fed unequally, or at hap-hazard, consuming often an excessive amount of fodder, yet failing in condition, becoming languid, and easily fa-outward appearance, physical detriment to the trees results.

If you want early greens you may have them by setting out cabbage stumps, as soon as the frost leaves the ground, where they will not interfere with other crops.

There is no use in cleaning your poultry unless you burn the old nests. They will arbor more of the various kinds of poultry parasites than you can ever exterminate with a whitewash brush.

Garden lands, where level and heavily manured, are now too wet to work, but with a few more bright, warm days, pease, beets, turnips, carrots and onion seeds will be sown,

Keep a good kitchen garden, but occupy no more ground than you can heavily enrich and keep clean; and have it so laid out that you may cultivate most of it with a horse, at a small expense compared with hand-hoeing and finger-weeding.

Keep the quarters occupied by pigs clean and pure, and do not allow the animals which are to afford food for your nice and clean table to wallow in filth and manure. Pigs like cleanness if only allowed a fair chance and if not driven into the dirt by careless owners.

For celery, burn a bed as for tobacco, and, after sowing seed, press the ground firmly, cover with a few brush or old straw; watch closely, and gradually remove the covering after ten days or two weeks. Celery seed requires from two to three weeks in sprouting.

In setting cabbages, cauliflowers, tomatoes and other plants in gardens where there may be cut-worms, wind a small strip of paper around the plant so that it will be about one inch below the surface and two inches above. This is said by an old farmer to be a sure preventive.

Beans, carrots, celery, corns, onions, spinach, may be relied upon for two to three years; beets, lettuce, turnips, tomatoes, for three to four years; peas, radish, cabbage, for four to six years; cucumbers, melons, squashes, and similar seeds will germinate after ten years, and more.

To ensure a stand from asparagus seed, scald the seed with hot water and soak for twenty hours, then mix in a box with moist earth. In about ten days or two weeks they will begin to sprout, when you can sow in the open ground. It is very difficult to get a stand of asparagus from seed without this preliminary treatment.

Save a corner of the garden for a few aromatic herbs. They thrive nicely along the sunny side of the garden fence, but require a deep and fairly rich soil. Thyme, summer savory and sage are great additions to many soups and stews. Cut them just before they bloom on a bright sunny day. Tie them in bunches and hang up to dry.

In order to ascertain the depth to plough, it is recommended to find how deep the soil has been enriched, and do not go much below this point. Where the subsoil is poor, with only a few inches of rich ground on top, the result of deep ploughing would be to turn the poor soil uppermost. On land of ordinary richness a crop of Indian corn will grow better with the same care and manure if it be ploughing abundant spray around. Deer often engage in sham battle, or trial of strength, by twisting their horns together and pushing for the mastery. All animals pretending violence in their play stop short of exercising it; the dog takes the greatest precaution not to injure by his bite; and the ourang-outang in wrestling with his keeper, pretends to throw him, and makes feints of biting him. Some animals carry out in their play the semblance of catching their prey. Young cats, for instance, leap after every small and moving object, even to the leaves strewed by the autumn wind. They crouch and steal forward ready for the spring, the body quivering and the tail vibrating with emotion; they bound on the moving leaf, and again spring forward to another. Benger saw young cougars and jaguars playing with round substances like kittens. Birds of the magpie kind are the analogues of monkeys, full of mischief, play and mimicry. There is a story of a tame magpie that was seen busily employed in a garden gathering pebbles with much solemnity and a studied air, burying them in a hole made to recive a post. After each stone it cried "Cur-ack" triumphantly, and set off for another. On examining the spot a poor toad was found in the hole, which the magpie was stoning for his amusement.

The Hod Carriers in Germany.

As there are no hod carriers in Germany, for the simple reason that a hod carrier is as unknown there as an Irishman is, each brick must be passed from hand to hand again. The higher up the bricklayers are the more men are required to toss the bricks. Two men to a storey is about the average, with enough more to lead from the front of the building to the place where the bricks are needed. Thus I have seen three men on the ground, eight on the front of the building, and five on the top, making sixteen men through whose hands each brick passed before it reached its place of destination. I have frequently stood and watched a single brick go climbing up the front of the building leaping from hand to hand, and I have wondered every time why in the world hods, horse power, or steam engines were not used Potato Starch.

It takes two hundred and fifty bushel of potatoes to make a ton of potato starch. Its manufacture, which is very simple, is as follows: After being thoroughly washed and freed from dirt, the potatoes are reduced to pulp by means of a grater. The pulp, placed in a sieve, is washed by streams of falling water, the starch being carried through the sieve into a proper receptacle, and the fibres washed away as waste. The starch is carried with the water passing through the sieve into the stirring-tank, in which it is washed from the finer articles of waste, and being heavier than water sinks to the bottom. It is then further cleaned in other tanks by washing and stirring, until the water is clear, and is drawn off. The starch is then removed to a kiln, where is it dried and rendered fit for market.

The Walrus is after all the only true specimen of the regular horse marine.

at hap-hazard, consuming often an excessive amount of fodder, yet failing in condition, becoming languid, and easily fatigued in harness, and the subject of frequent attacks of colic and indigestion. In many such instances the remedy is to change the feeder; when upon a smaller ration, even, but in the hands of a careful, observant, and punctual man, the same horses will speedily recuperate, gain flesh, and perform their daily tasks with increasing energy. In other stock the effects may be less manifest, but they are no less real; and all the difference between the success of some stock-owners, and the failure of others, may be traced, in many cases, to this one subject of more or less care in the feeding, so as to adapt it to the wants of the individual beast.—National Live Stock Journal.

There are Lots of Them.

The farmer who is hardest to convince of his errors is the one who possesses a single instance within his own experience with which to combat your arguments. If you maintain that Jerseys are good butter cows, he once knew one that could not make a pound of butter. If you hold that roots are good for dairy cows, he once knew one to get chocked to death on them. His one swallow always makes a summer, and he forgets that though experience is a good teacher, it should be the experience of many who have tried several ways, rather than the experience of one, that always creates but a limited knowledge. The Good Book tells us not to be over wise in our own judgment. This should especially be the case in matters pertaining to farming, where every man's experience is so varied in different seasons. Then there are so many conflicting elements about farming, and especially that most fickle of all things, the weather, makes or mars a thousand fortunes every year, and nowhere is she more potent than on the farm.—American Dairyman.

FARM NOTES.

Onion seeds and cabbage plants should now be set out doors.

Coal ashes in limited applications will make the soil light and loose.

Lettuce can be set out-doors and seed sown for succession in hotbeds and cold frames.

Soapsuds, a valuable fertilizer for all forms of vegetation, is especially serviceable for small fruits.

The essentials to success in onion culture are plenty of manure, thorough fitting of the ground, good seed and clean cultivation.

The Rural New Yorker says sunflower seed is not good for horses or cattle, but it can be fed in small quantities to poultry.

Radishes can now be sown in open ground; grown under glass they are doing well, and a few are being brought to market.

If troubled with white worms in your flower pots, stick in the earth half a dozen or more unlighted matches, points down; it will kill them.

Decayed branches should not be allowed to remain on trees, for aside from the uppermost. On land of ordinary richness a crop of Indian corn will grow better with the same care and manure if it be ploughed only four or five inches deep, than if ploughed eight or ten inches deep

A hundred trees can be set at a cost of ten to twenty dollars, or for almost no cost, if one has spare time and saplings are easily available. These may in ten to fifteen years grow to be worth from $3 to $10 each for needed timber and fuel, or for the fruits or nuts produced. It would be greatly to the advantage of the country, its climate, and its beauty, if the sides of our public highways generally were planted with trees that furnish shade and ornament while growing, and supply at no distant period wood for various purposes.

Encounter With a Tiger.

An exciting incident is reported by the Georgetown Royal Gazette (British Guiana). It appears that Messrs. Creaves and Wookey, two overseers of a plantation on the east coast, took a trip into the interior with a black man as their guide, a couple of dogs, and being well armed with rifles, etc., started out on the 10th of March. They had capital sport for two days, shooting birds of various sizes and a deer, which they made many a good meal from. At night they camped out in hammocks slung to trees, with a fire burning to keep away any insects from them with which the interior abounds, also in case of emergencies. On the third night, soon after turning into their hammocks, and dozing off, they were startled by a fearful roar, and they immediately saw a tiger ready to spring. Greaves, who was nearest, kept his eyes fixed on the brute, as he crept out of his hammock with his rifle, and knelt down. When the animal was about to spring he fired. The rifle cap snapped, and in an instant the tiger had thrown Greaves flat. Wookey, who in the meantime crept out of his hammock a few yards distant from Greaves, seeing the fearful position his friend was placed in, fired at the brute and hit him just behind the shoulder, shooting him dead. What with excitement, smoke, etc., he did not know he had shot the tiger, but was much relieved n seeing Greaves creep out, besmeared with blood, and found that he was not injured save a few scratches and torn clothes. The guide who had, for some reason best known to himself, gone a short distance away, was much startled at finding his buckras in such a trim, and when they had settled themselves and got Greaves all square, which he very soon was after a schnappe, they examined there victim, and found him to be a fine specimen. It is needless to say that Messrs. Greaves and Wookey cut short their trip, and were thankful to reach home safe and sound with their prize after such a narrow escape.

An elegantly-dressed young lady recently entered a railway carriage in Paris, where there were three or four gentlemen, one of whom was lighting a cigar. Observing her, with the characteristic politeness of a Frenchman, he asked her if smoking would incommode her. She replied, "I do not know, sir; no gentleman has ever smoked in my presence."

WARREN LELAND, whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

HOW JUSTICE OFTEN MISCARRIES

Three Cases in Which Individual Liberty Proved a Sham.

Within the last few weeks three cases have occurred in France which illustrate in a very striking manner how completely individual liberty is, even under the beneficent regime of a republic, at the mercy of the police and the administrators of justice. The first case was that of a stableman in the employ of a large cab company in Paris. This man had been detected ill-treating a horse, and the manager of the stables remarked to the inspector of police that it was a pity the law did not admit of the offender being sentenced to more than a week's imprisonment. "Make your mind easy," replied the inspector; "I will keep him in prison for a few months before bringing him up for trial." The second case is that of the footman at the Rue Royale club, who has been in prison for two months on suspicion of having supplied marked packs of cards. He has now been liberated, as, after all the efforts of the police, he could not be induced to give any information as to his supposed accomplices. He has never gone through any form of trial whatever.

The third case is of a different kind. It appears that in the course of the past year a retired officer named St. Elme started a radical newspaper in Corsica. This journal, which attacked in very severe terms the republicans now in office, was naturally much disliked by the prefect of Corsica, by whose order letters addressed to the editor were seized in the postoffice. M. St. Elme, meeting the prefect at a cafe in the town of Ajaccio, taxed him with this, and, after some strong language had been used on both sides, the landlord of the cafe and his waiters set upon M. St. Elme and beat him unmercifully. For this offense M. St. Elme (not the landlord of the cafe) was summoned and sentenced to five months imprisonment. He appealed against the sentence, but a few days before the appeal was heard he was so badly beaten that he had to be brought into court upon a litter. The judgment pronounced by the court below was confirmed, though the term of imprisonment was reduced from five months to six weeks; but the unfortunate man will not undergo the sentence, because he died of his injuries the next day. His death comes as a very striking commentary upon the speech of the public prosecutor, who suggested that his injuries were very trifling, even if he were not "shamming" altogether.—London World.

The Flower Garden and Lawn.

It is late to expect the best results from sowing grass seeds, and if the lawn is of but moderate size it will be better to lay sods. The turf from a road-side or pasture should be beaten down to bring its roots in contact with the soil. If grass-seed is sown as late as this month, is is customary to add a sprinkling of oats—say a quart to a bushel of grass seed. The object of this is to afford shade to the young grass, and it is well enough if the oats are not allowed to go to seed. They should be cut early. The lawn should be mowed with a lawn mower, every week

CANADIAN NEWS.

Mr. C. Kirk, the boot and shoe merchant charged with incendiarism at Guelph, has been committed to stand his trial. He will appear before Judge Drew on Monday next. He was admitted to bail at $800.

In the Goderich small-pox case, which was tried at the London General Sessions recently, the jury returned a verdict of guilty against both Dr. Whitely and Little. Merely nominal penalties were inflicted in each case.

A branch of the White Cross Army is to be established in Hamilton. The main objects of this association is the maintainance of purity in word and action amongst men. It is under the auspices of the Church of England.

While Edward O'Donnell was driving a team of horses attached to a roller on the farm of Mr. John Gilbert in Sidney, the horses ran away and the roller passed over O'Donnell's body, breaking some of his ribs and inflicting other injuries of so serious a character that his death will probably result.

Senator McInnes, of Hamilton, was last week offered, by Mr. Geo. E. Tuckett, a marked cheque for $50,000 for Dundurn Castle and park. The amount was not large enough, but Mr. McInnes also refused when it was increased by $5,000. This beautiful and historic spot is held at about $65,000. A few years ago $40,000 would have bought it.

Mr. Wm. Taylor, an old and respected resident of the township of Booke, was killed suddenly, recently, while at his son's place. He was watching them putting down a well. When water was struck the auger was drawn up to the top of the derrick, where it swung round, breaking the chain, and fell on Mr. Taylor's head, killing him almost instantly.

A sad accident occurred at Parkdale, near Toronto, recently, by which Mrs. J. E. Frankish lost her life. It appears that the unfortunate lady had been in the habit of taking decoctions of herbs, and accidentally took an overdose of a narcotic herb. She at once realized that she had made a mistake and sent for a doctor, but she died before he arrived.

James Munn, a melter in the Malleable Iron Works, Hamilton, attempted suicide recently. He walked along Myles' Wharf until he was opposite deep water, when he jumped in. The would-be suicide was pulled out by the mate and a couple of hands from the schooner Gulnair, and handed over to the police. He has been drinking hard lately. He is very repentant now.

The London West Council Tuesday evening entertained the report of Engineer Talbott, suggesting the building of an extensive dyke, costing about $8,000, to protect the village from floods. D. Mackenzie, M.P.P., Reeve Platt, and Mr. Fitzgerald were appointed a deputation to visit Toronto and endeavor to secure assistance from the Government in borrowing that amount.

A few evenings ago a young lady named McFarlane engaged a carter to drive her mowed with a lawn mower, every week or ten days, until dry weather comes, and then the frequency should depend upon the growth. Do not cut up the lawn with too many beds. Place them near the drives or walks where they will be seen. They may be planted in masses one kind each, or in ribbons of contrasted colors. In either make the soil rich and keep the grass margin well defined.

This is the month in which nurserymen advise evergreens to be transplanted. Success with evergreens depends upon keeping the roots from drying. If the roots of a deciduous tree dry out, they can be restored. Not so with the conifers. If their roots are once allowed to dry, no moisture will restore them. Whether evergreens are to be removed from a nursery, or from pastures, keep the roots well covered. When they are set out, if several stones, as large as one can lift are laid over the roots, they will anchor the tree, and serve as an excellent mulch to keep the surface soil moist.

After the fall-planted bulbs—Tulips, Hyacinths, Narcissuses, etc., have bloomed, do not disturb them as long as the leaves remain green. When the foliage begins to turn yellow, the bulbs may be taken up, dried, and kept until time to plant next autumn. Gladioluses, Lilies, etc., may now be planted. Tuberoses may be left until the soil is well warmed, or they may be started in boxes of earth in a sunny window. If no hot-bed is at hand, place dahlia roots in a sunny corner, and cover them at night. When the buds start divide the roots.—American Agriculturist.

The Te of Diana.

One building at Ephesus surpassed all the rest in magnificence and in fame. This was the temple of Artemus or Diana, which glittered in brilliant beauty at the head of the harbor, and was reckoned by the ancients as one of the wonders of the world. The sun, it was said, saw nothing in his course more magnificent than Diana's temple. It consisted essentially in horizontal entablatures resting on vertical columns. These colonades were erected as subsidary decorations round the cell which contained the idol, and were, through a greater part of their space, open to the sky. The temple was 425 feet in length and 229 in breadth, and the columns were 60 feet high. The number of columns was 127, each of them the gift of a king; and 36 of them were enriched with ornament and color. All the great cities contributed to the structure. The national pride in the sanctuary was so great that, when Alexander offered the spoils of his eastern campaign if he might inscribe his name on the building, the honor was declined. The value and fame of the temple were enhanced by its being the treasury, in which a large portion of the wealth of Western Asia was stored up.

Question for a debating society out West—"if the Mormon who has eight wives buries one of them, how much of a widower does he become, if any?"

Mcfarlane engaged a carter to drive her to the falls of Montmorency. On arrival there she ordered the carter to stable his horse at Bureau's, as she intended making a stay in the vicinity of the falls. After waiting an hour and a half the carter became alarmed and informed Mr. Bureau of the circumstances, whereupon a thorough search was made. The only thing found was Miss McFarlane's bonnet and cape, which were found on a rock directly above the falls. It is supposed she committed suicide by entering the river above the falls, and was carried over the boiling surf. She has suffered from rheumatism and heart disease for several years. A thorough search was kept up but the body has not yet been recovered.

Lizzie Burdow, 18 years of age, who claimed that Amherstburg is her home, was recently discovered by an officer lying on the corner of McDougal-avenue and Croghan-street, Detroit, in an hysterical fit. She was conveyed to the Elmwood-avenue Station and cared for by Dr. Duff Stewart. She claimed to have come from Amherstburg to bury her mother, adding that her father, mother, sister, and brother had died within the past four months. She also represented that she had become separated from her friends who accompanied her from Amherstburg, and had wandered towards the cemetery. On reaching the point where she was found she lost consciousness. She further claimed to have been robbed while in that condition of a shawl, some rings, a watch, and between $4 and $5 in money. After arriving at the station she suffered from several additional attacks of hysteria. Subsequent investigation proved that the body of a woman named Burdow had been buried at the Elmwood Cemetery several days previous. It is supposed that the girl has been suffering from hysteria incident to grief. She was returned by the Poor Commissioners to Amherstburg.

"For men may come and men may go, but I go on for ever."—The gas-meter.

They talk about "the wisdom of the serpent," forgetting apparently, that it didn't require so very much sapiency to beguile one poor, unprotected woman, whose mind had never been disciplined by shopping or housekeeping.

When Archer, the first jockey of England, recently went to Thrisk, in Yorkshire, to ride, the town crier marched through the streets announcing that "Fred Archer—the wonder of the world—would certainly ride at the races."

On the way home, after his duel with O'Connell, in a hackney coach, Lord Alvanley said, "What a clumsy fellow O'Connell must be to miss such a fat fellow as I am. He ought to fire at a haystack and get his hand in." When the carriage drove up to Alvanley's door, he gave the coachman a sovereign. Jarvie was profuse in his thanks, and said "It's a great deal for only having taken your Lordship to Wimbledon." "No, my good man," said Alvanley, "I give it you, not for taking me, but for bringing me back."

LIVE HONEY BOTTLES.

A Wonderful Insect from Mexico — Ant Lore Reeled Off.

Thrusting his hand into a desk, the fruit dealer brought out a small box, uncovered it, and lifted out an insect of such curious shape that it seemed impossible that it could be a living reality. Putting his finger under it, the dealer lifted out an ant with a small, black head and an amber-hued abdomen, perfectly round and as large as two peas.

"She's a rouser, ain't she? and as full as a lord," said the fruit importer, gazing at the creature with the eye of an expert.

"Yes, it's a real ant," he continued, "and this isn't the first one that ever came here. I imported five hundred three years ago for a big dinner of some Mexican swell up-town. Do they eat them? Well, I should smile. . You've never been in Mexico, I take it? Well, this is a fair specimen of the honey-ant of Mexico, and there they are considered great delicacies, and are always served as dessert, just as your see shrimps here, only these are put on alive and kicking. My brother has one of the biggest collection of ants in the country. This was brought on for him, and they're trying to fix up some way to preserve it without putting it in alcohol. I reckon they'll put it in Canada balsam. You see those ants live in big families, and most of them don't look like this; but at a certain time of the year certain ones are selected by the others to act as bottles or storehouses for the rest. This being done, the other ants bring all the honey they can collect and give it to the ones selected, and they take it in until each one is as full as it can hold and looks like this. As fast as they are filled they are taken by the other ants to a dark room made for the purpose, where they cling to the wall. In fact, they are living bottles in which the ants store away their honey, and whenever they want it they go to the storehouse and take down a bottle, brush off the cobwebs, and make the ant give out a supply.

"This sounds like a yarn," said the ant authority, "but the story told by Jaegar, the naturalist, is a bigger one. He states that a Catholic missionary was sick in Congo when one of these armies came along, and it was by sheer luck that the natives got him up. As they carried him out of the house the floor was over a foot deep with the insects, and of a cow they forgot in the stable the bones alone told the story next morning.

Adolphustown Methodist Memorial Church.

The corner stone of the U. E. L. Memorial Methodist Church, Adolphustown, will be laid to-morrow at 2 o'clock, p.m. by Mrs. Allison, Sr. A grand lunch will be served by the ladies after the ceremony; tickets, 25c. An excursion per steamer "Reindeer" will leave Napanee at 10 a.m., calling at Deseronto at 11 a.m., Picton, at 12.30 p.m., arriving at Adolphustown at 1.30 p.m., returning after the ceremony. Tickets for the round trip 50c. On Sabbath centennial sermons will be preached in the district tent at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. by Rev. D. V. Lucas, M.A. of Montreal, and at 6.30 p.m. by Rev. M. L. Perrson of Napanee. Collection in aid of the building fund at the close of each service. All are invited to attend.

Card of Thanks from Rev. L. A. Betts.

On behalf of myself and wife, I most sincerely desire to thank the many friends of the Bay Circuit and of the town of Napanee, for the kind and Christian attention given me during my sickness for the past six months, for which time I have been consigned to the house and under the care of kind and attentive physicians. For the esteem and good will of all these kind friends I do feel deeply thankful to our common Father, and only hope that I may continue to be remembered by them in their affections and in their prayers. I desire also to give expression to my appreciation of the interest taken in my behalf by Ogden Hinch, Esq., C. Z. Perry, Esq., and others of Union Lodge No. 9, A. F. and A. M., the Rev, M. L. Pearson and many others I could here mention. But in conclusion I not only express my thankfulness but earnestly pray the blessing of the Trinity upon them all now and forever. L. A. BETTS.

Napanee, June 10, 1884.

Grand Jury Presentment.

We, the Grand Jury at the present General Sessions of the Peace for the County of Lennox and Addington, beg leave to report:

That we have visited the county jail and find it clean and well kept, and the prisoners seemed satisfied with their treatment and had no complaints to make.

We find one John Rikely committed to the common jail as a vagrant, by the then Reeve of Newburgh, and in the committal no time is mentioned for his imprisonment nor for his discharge, and we recommend that immediate steps should be taken by the proper authorities for his discharge.

We fully agree with the suggestions made to us by Your Worship, in your charge: That if possible an act should be passed prohibiting the sale of revolvers and spirituous liquors to minors. If this were done two great sources of crime would be checked or at least greatly ameliorated. All of which we humbly submit.

CYRUS B. HUFFMAN, Foreman.

Grand Jury Room, June 11, 1884.

Personals.

—Mr. J. W. Hough spent a few days in town last week.

ture of boats to or from the U. E. L. celebration at Adolphustown can be obtained from Mr. J. J. Perry, druggist.

—On Wednesday morning Messrs. Harris & Empey of the Brisco House sold their interest in the hotel to Mr. Thomas Empey who will hereafter conduct the business.

—Clarks Mills will celebrate Dominion Day by a grand demonstration. The usual programme of sports has been arranged and an enjoyable day is expected. All are invited to attend.

—Saturday evening last Wm. Evans of this town gave an exhibition of tumbling, etc., on the corner of John and Dundas-sts. His performance was very good. He raised a collection from the crowd for his own benefit.

—The laying of the track on the N., T. & Q. Railway was finished at Tamworth no Wednesday. The ballasting is being pushed forward rapidly, and the road will be finished and open for traffic about the 1st of July.

—The steamer "Deseronto" ran into the steamer "Reindeer" on her trip last Tuesday evening and stove a hole in her side. No serious damage was done, however, and the injury has since been repaired.

—The Picton hangman was, it is said, a man named Bendigo of Kingston, the same who bungled the execution of the Sharbot Lake murderer in Kingston. The fellow should not again be entrusted with such a service.

—The excursion of the 47th battalion band on Tuesday last to Picton was poorly attended by reason of the forbidding aspect of the weather. Those who patronized the excursion enjoyed themselves. The boat returned at half-past seven in the evening.

—The old valuable grocer, Mr. John Blewett, makes an announcement in another column of interest to purchasers. His family flour has become the favorite throughout the district, and the salt only requires a trial to give equal satisfaction. Give him a call.

—The members of the 47th battalion band having learned that their playing on Dundas-st. Thursday evening of last week annoyed the persons attending the I. O. O. F. concert apologize for the interruption. They assure the public and the members of Argyll Lodge No. 212, I. O. O. F., that it was far from their intention to interrupt the concert held that evening and that they stopped playing as soon as requested.

—We presume many of our citizens will take advantage of the celebration in Kingston on Dominion Day to visit the Limestone City. The citizens have arranged for a mammoth demonstration of which the following is the programme:—10 a.m., firemen's parade; 10.30 to 12 m., military review and parade; 1 p.m., baseball and quoit matches; 2 p.m., bicycle tournament; 4 p.m., athletic sports; 7.30 p.m., blowing up of a frigate; 8.30 p.m., fireworks.

—The Napanee lacrosse club will play a match on the Adolphustown grounds on Monday next with the Oka lacrosse club of Belleville. The prize will be a silver cup valued at $25. The following is the Napanee team: Goal, J. McNulty; Point, S. McCutcheon; Cover Point, Wm. Normile; Defence Field, Benj. Johnston, Ed. Hayes and Trav. Hosey; Centre, J. F. McAlister: Home Field, W. Doller, T. Boyes and D. Low. Outside Home, Fred. Bruton; Home, R. McNeill; Captain, J. H. Gallagher; Spare men, A. B. McCay and W. Busby. A practice match will be played on their grounds this (Friday) evening.

—Do not forget, you can exchange your wool at Perry's woollen mill, Napanee, for the very best tweeds and flannel, also get your spinning done for 10cts. and your roll carding for 5cts., or your carpet yarn twisted two or three ply. Next to Gibbard's on the canal.

A. Carscallen has opened out a new general store at Flinton. His stock comprises dry goods, groceries, provisions, etc., all of which is bought from the best dealers and is as fresh and good as any in the market. He sells as cheaply as Belleville dealers and will, we are sure, receive the public patronage. He takes farmers produce in exchange for goods, thus affording a ready market for every farmer and a chance to get the best goods at most reasonable terms. Give him a call.

—Last Sabbath while a party were visiting in Prince Edward County a laughable mistake occurred which the victims will not soon hear the last of. As the party were preparing to return home the gentlemen undertook to get the horse, but by mistake took one belonging to another person. The animal was harnessed by them and all were in readiness to start before the discovery was made. Since then the unfortunate young men have been the subject of a good many "rackets" on the subject. They can do better at playing lacrosse than harnessing horses.

—The Lennox and Addington Teachers' Association held their session on Friday and Saturday last. Owing to limited space we cannot give a report of the proceedings but merely state that the usual programme was fully carried out. On Friday evening Dr. McLellan delivered a lecture in the Town Hall. He was in his happiest vein and spoke for some time contrasting the former style of teaching with the present. Mr. A. L. Morden occupied the chair, and after the lecture the usual vote of thanks was tendered. The audience was very small there being a lamentable lack of interest on the part of parents in educational matters.

Ho! for the Adolphustown Celebration.

The steamer "Reindeer" will leave Downey's dock every morning during the Centennial celebration at Adolphustown at 7.30 (except Saturday at 10 a.m.) Returning home will leave Adolphustown about 5 p.m. Fares, single return ticket, 75c.; double ticket and return good for one day, $1. A boat has been put on the route to convey passengers over from yorts on the south side of the bay.

Napanee Court of Revision.

The Court of Revision was held in the Council Chamber on Monday last. Present —Mayor Joy, Reeve Wilson, Dep-Reeve Carscallen and Coun. Lane. Upon motion of Reeve Wilson, seconded by Coun. Lane, Dep-Reeve Carscallen was appointed chairman. The clerk submitted the list of appeals as follows:—J. G. Stewart to be entered on the roll as a tenant for lot 45, east side of Centre-st. Moved by Reeve Wilson, seconded by Coun. Lane, that the name of Henry Moss be struck off the roll and the name of J. G. Stewart be substituted as tenants for said lot.—Carried. Charles H. Schryver appealed to be entered as tenant jointly with Mrs. Andrew Fraser for the premises occupied by him on south side of Thomas-st. Moved by Reeve Wilson, seconded by Mayor Joy, that the name of John A. Fraser, assessed as owner, be erased and the name of Charles H. Schryver be substituted as tenant.—Carried. Henry Moss requested to be entered as a tenant of Robt. Boyes for west-half of lot 14 south side of Mill-st. Upon motion of Reeve Wilson, seconded by Mayor Joy, the name of John Wheeler was struck off and the name of Henry Moss was inserted as asked for. Moved by Reeve Wilson, seconded by Coun. Lane, that the assessment roll as revised be finally passed.—Carried. The court then adjourned.

—You will find at H. W. Perry's a very fine selection of Harvest tools, consisting of Scythes, Scythe Stones, Hay Forks, Grain Cradles, Hand Pokes, Sections, Section Rivets. All sold cheap for cash.

—Mrs. Kinsella, of Trenton, was visiting her sister, Mrs. A. McNeill, last week.

—Mr. Chas. Huffman, of Toronto, is in town visiting friends.

—We were pleased to receive a call on Monday from Mr. Wicks, of Prince Edward.

—Mr. A. P. Wickware, Reeve of Barrie, gave us a call on Tuesday. He was en route to Kingston to attend County Council.

—Mr. John Quigley, of Selby, left on Tuesday for Ernest, Dakota, to visit his son. We wish him a pleasant trip.

—Mr. Geo. Challes and family, of Toronto, have been spending a short time in town.

—Mr. Wm. Hanson, of Montreal, spent a few days in town last week.

—Alex. Henry, Esq., and his son Clarence, spent Sunday in Cobourg, visiting friends and Mrs. Henry, who has been in that town for some time.

—Mr. Ed. Dickens and wife spent Sunday and Monday in town, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Dickens.

—Miss Maggie Love has returned to her home in Picton, after a week's sojourn with friends in town.

—Mrs. W. H. Stevenson arrived in town this week, from Trinidad, Colorado, to join her husband.

—Dr. Day, of Trenton, Ont., has been elected president of the Medical Council of the Ontario College of Ppysicians and Surgeons.

—Mgr. Smeulders, the representative of Pope Leo XIII. arrived in Ottawa on Tuesday and attended the closing exercises of the college there.

—Rev. Dr. Potts will sail for Europe to-morrow. He still shows signs of his recent severe illness.

—Dr. Smith and daughter, of Cape Vincent, N. Y., and Miss Adams, of Watertown, N. Y., are guests of Dr. and Mrs. Leonard.

—Mess Carter, of Montreal, and Wm S. Daly, of Belleville, spent Sunday and Monday in town, the guests of Mr. Jas. Daly.

—We were pleased to receive a call from Messrs. J. A. Fraser and W. D. Mace, of Tamworth. They report business good.

—Mr. John Christie, of the Napanee Paper Co.'s office, left on Saturday last for a short visit to friends in Toronto. During his trip he will visit Fenelon Falls.

—Miss Bristol is absent this week attending the marriage of her brother, Mr. Geo. Bristol, of Hamilton, to Miss Maggie, daughter of the late Thos. White, Esq., of the same city. The wedding took place Tuesday.

—Mr. J. Rudd Perry left on Wednesday for the scene of his contract on the C. P. R. on the north shore of Lake Superior. He does not expect to return till fall. Mr. James Bogart accompanied him as time-keeper.

—Mr. J. R. Smith, of Odessa, left Tuesday, for Ernest, Dakota, on a three months' visit to his son, who resides near that place. He took the precaution of keeping himself posted on local affairs by calling and ordering THE EXPRESS to be sent to him. He expects to make a trip through Kansas and Nebraska before his return.

A Celebrated Case.

The remarkable case of W. A. Edgars, of Frankville, who suffered from disease of the liver and kidneys so badly that all hope of recovery was abandoned. He remained ten and thirteen days without action of the bowels. Four bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters restored him to perfect health, which he had not known for twenty years before.

Fluid Lightning

is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, Etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at T. A. Huffman's and A. W. Grange's drug stores.

Rest and Comfort to the Suffering.

"Brown's Household Panacea" has no equal for relieving pain, both internal and external. It cures Pain in the Side, Back or Bowels, Sore Throat, Rheumatism, Toothache, Lumbago, and any kind of a Pain or Ache. "It will most assuredly quicken the Blood and Heal, as its acting power is wonderful," "Brown's Household Panacea" being acknowledged as the great Pain Reliever, and of double the strength of any other Elixir or Liniment in the world, should be in every family handy for use when wanted, "as it really is the best remedy in the world for Cramps in the Stomach, and Pains and Aches of all kinds," and is for sale by all Druggists at 25 cents a bottle. 14-12-1y.

PRESENTATION TO R. A. HELLIWELL.

A Tribute of Esteem to a Worthy Gentleman.

There was a large gathering of the leading business men of the town in the office of the Dominion Bank here Monday afternoon last. They filled the large space outside the railing and even invaded the manager's private office. If a stranger had appeared on the scene at the time he would have suspected a run on the bank. Such, however, was not the case. The gathering was for the purpose of a formal leave-taking of the late manager, R. A. Helliwell, Esq., who has been promoted to the Inspectorship of the Bank with headquarters at Toronto, and for presenting him with a suitable testimonial. When all had assembled, John B. McGuin, Esq., read the following address :—

To Mr. R. A. Helliwell :

We, a few of your many friends in Napanee, having learned of your promotion to the important position of Inspector of the Dominion Bank, offer you our sincere congratulations, though we cannot but regret that the change involves your removal from our town.

In your discharge of the onerous duties as bank manager here, not only have you given entire satisfaction to your directors, as is evidenced by your promotion, but at the same time have, in no less degree won the esteem of all with whom you have had business or social relations.

As a token of our regard and good will, we ask you to accept this solid silver tea service, and we hope that in your new home, you and Mrs Helliwell may win as many and as sincere friends as you have in Napanee.

Signed on behalf of your Napanee friends,

Napanee, May, 1884.

The service consisted of five pieces of solid silver handsomely chased and bearing the inscription : "To R. A. Helliwell from his Napanee friends." The design is elegant and the workmanship excellent. The service was purchased from the manufacturer, through Mr. F. Chinneck, at a cost of over $300.

"MAY DEW"

The Great French Lotion for Beautifying the Face.

It conceals the evidence of age. One application will make the most stubbornly red and rough hands beautifully soft and white. Remember that "MAY DEW" is not a paint or powder that fills up the pores of the skin, and that is injurious to the skin, but a new and great discovery, a vegetable liquid, that causes the cheek to glow with health, the neck, arms and hands to rival the Lily in whiteness. Impossible to detect in the beauty it confers any artificial character. It cures Greasy Skin, Freckles, Wrinkles, Pimples, Black Heads, Crow's Feet, Blotches, Face Grubs, Sun Burn, Tan, Ringworm, Chapped Hands, Sore or Chapped Lips, Barber's Itch, Tetter, &c. It frees the pores, oil glands, and tubes from the injurious effects of powders and cosmetic washes. By its use all redness and roughness are prevented; it beautifies the skin, and will make it soft, smooth and white; imparting a delicious softness; producing a perfectly healthy, natural, and youthful appearance. The best face lotion that the world ever produced. We will send "A LARGE BOTTLE" to any address on receipt of price, $1. When ordering mention this paper.

lent. The service was purchased from the manufacturer, through Mr. F. Chinneck, at a cost of over $300.

When this presentation was made Dr. R. A. Leonard, M.W. of Napanee Lodge A. O. U. W., stepped forward and read the following address, while R. G. Wright, Esq., P. M. W. of the lodge, handed Mr. Helliwell a case containing a handsome locket bearing a shield on which was the ensignia of the order :—

R. A. Helliwell, Esq.

We, the officers and members of Napanee Lodge No. 194, Ancient Order of United Workmen, feel that we cannot allow you to depart from our midst without giving some slight token of the appreciation in which you are held by us. As a member of our society you have been unremitting in your efforts and untiring in zeal to increase the number of its members and further the interests of the Order in every possible way. On leaving, you vacate a position among us to which you have done honor, and the duties of which you have most efficiently discharged.

This small souvenir you will please accept from the members of our lodge in kind remembrance of the many pleasant evenings spent together and our esteem for you as a brother.

We understand that the duties of the high and responsible position you have attained in the Dominion Bank will necessitate your frequent appearance among us and we trust that our lodge room may often be graced by your presence. We also hope that your career in the future may ever continue to brighten as it has done in the past and that you may never forget the watchwords—Charity, Hope and Protection.

Signed on behalf of the lodge.

J. L. BOYES, Recorder. R. A. LEONARD, Master Workman.

Napanee, June 9, 1884.

Mr. HELLIWELL in making a reply spoke briefly and with much feeling. He said that his feelings would hardly permit him to give expression to the pleasure he experienced at this evidence of the good will and esteem entertained for him by the many gentlemen he had been associated with in business and social relations during his seven years' residence in Napanee. It seldom fell to the lot of a bank manager to meet with such a general expression of good will from those he had business connection with, and he appreciated it to the fullest extent. He assured the company that their kindly feelings were most cordially reciprocated by him and thanked them for the valuable assistance they had given him in building up a large and prosperous business for the bank. It was with feelings of deep regret that he recognized that his removal would to some extent sever those pleasant business and social relations, but he assured them that he would ever take a deep interest in the welfare of Napanee and its good people. It was here he first brought his wife and here his children were born, and this, if nothing more, should be a sufficient link to bind his affections to the town. In referring to Mr. Gamble, his successor, he most cordially recommended him to the patrons of the bank and the public generally. They would find him a most competent business man, obliging and genial. He was sure that Mr. Gamble would win their confidence and esteem. In closing, he thanked most sincerely his brethren of Napanee Lodge A. O. U. W., for their kind wishes and expressed the hope that the lodge and order would continue to prosper as in the past.

At the conclusion Mr. Helliwell was greeted with hearty applause. The company then gathered round him and each shook him warmly by the hand wishing him God speed. He left by the evening train for Toronto. The addresses and silver are now on exhibition in Mr. Chinneck's window.

Do Not be Discouraged

even if you have tried many remedies for your Kidney disease or Liver complaint without success it is no reason why you should think your disorder incurable. The most intractable cases readily yield to the potent virtues of Kidney-Wort. It is a purely vegetable compound which acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels at the same time and thus cleanses the whole system. Don't wait, but get a package to-day and cure yourself.

in Napanee and vicinity, has met with the greatest success; placing them in the position of a much coveted prize, for the gaining which, as has been seen, our "local crooks" have hazarded their carcases.

Thanks to the vigilance of Mr. Emberson, we have been left with a sufficient number to permit us present (within the short time at our disposal) each and every one of the purchasers of a suit of those of all sizes and styles, which we are still offering to the public and especially to those who desire to celebrate in a worthy manner, and in that happy and holiday spirit and attire, which animated and robed our noble ancestors on all such occasions as the coming

U.E. LOYALISTS' CENTENNIAL.

SUCCESSFUL CELEBRATION AT ADOLPHUSTOWN.

Glorious Weather—A Large Attendance—Patriotic Speeches.

The celebration of the landing of the U. E. Loyalists in Adolphustown opened on Monday last. For weeks a large and energetic committee composed mainly of residents of the township were actively engaged in completing arrangements, and considering that but few of them had any previous experience in the celebration line, they did remarkably well. The site selected was a part of the farm of D. W. Allison, Esq., M.P., adjoining his palatial residence. It was the spot on which Captain Vanalstine and his band of loyalists landed just one hundred years ago. A better site could hardly have been chosen—not only because of the associations connected therewith but on account of its adaptability. Ten acres, almost as smooth as a lawn, with the bay on one side and a long lagoon on the other, afforded ample space for the varied events on the programme. A grand stand had been erected from which floated many flags while encircling the grounds and dotted here and there were scores of refreshment and dining booths. The 15th battalion of Belleville arrived on Sunday and encamped on the grounds. This was all that was needed to complete the scene and give it an animated appearance, even before the thousands of visitors had arrived. Though the celebration proper did not commence till Monday, a very important event took place on the Saturday previous, and that was the

of the Methodist memorial church. The new edifice is to take the place of the first church erected in Adolphustown, as early as 1792, and is to be dedicated to God and the memory of the U. E. Loyalists in November next. The first Methodist preacher arrived in the settlement in 1788—one Lyon, a class leader whose exhortations drew around him many of the God-fearing pioneers. He was succeeded in 1789 by a Rev. Mr. McCarthy, but that being a time of oppression to all who openly espoused doctrines not in accordance with the established church, he was banished by the authorities to an island in the St. Lawrence and it is believed perished, his flock never hearing of him afterwards. Rev. Wm. Lossee was the next preacher, and it was under his pastorship that the first church was erected. We give below a copy of the subscription list taken from the original document by Rev. R. N. Adams, the present Superintendent of the Circuit:—

—OUR CENTENNIAL PATENT—

Self-Dump Horse Rake

Is meeting each year with greater success. A boy can operate it. No additional strength is required to discharge the heaviest loads; it immediately resumes its position to rake close to the windrows; it rakes perfectly clean; a lever holds the teeth to their work, or eleyates to move from field to field; it can be adjusted to rake stubble without injury to the clover roots; the teeth are of the best quality of oil-tempered steel and will stand a spring backwards of twenty inches without injury; dumping attachments for both wheels and can be used in turning. It is self or hand dumping, as may be preferred. It is the best, simplest, strongest, most convenient and the most durable. We advise all farmers to buy it. DEALERS do not use the rakes they sell, it does not, therefore, matter so much to them what they sell; but farmers who have to use them until they are worn out should never take anything but the best.

JOHN HERRING

DEAR FRIENDS AND BRETHREN,—As Almighty God has been pleased to visit us in this wilderness with the light of a preached Gospel, we think it requisite to build a meeting-house or church for the more convenient assembling of ourselves together for social worship before the Lord.

We do agree to build said church under the direction of William Losee, Methodist preacher, our brother who has labored with us this twelve months past, he following the directions of the discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, or, in his absence, under the direction of any Methodist preacher belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church in Great Britain or America, sent from there by proper authority, (such as the Bishop), to labor among us.

We do further agree that no other denomination or society of people shall have any privilege or liberty to preach or teach in the said Methodist Church, without the consent or leave of the assistant Methodist preacher then laboring with us. We do further agree to build said church thirty-six feet by thirty feet, two stories high, with a gallery in the upper story or second story, said house to be built on the north-west corner of Paul Huff's lot of land No. 18, Third concession, Fourth town.

We, the subscribers, do promise to pay or cause to be paid to the directors, towards the building of the said church, as it is wanting, the sums of money annexed to our names, underneath, where we have hereunto set our hands the date above written:—

It will be seen that the subscriptions were quite large for people so poor as these first settlers were and shows the great depth of their religious ardour. The new church will be built of brick and will cost about $5,000, the greater portion of which has been subscribed. The ceremony of laying the corner stone on Saturday was witnessed by a large crowd. It was performed by Mrs. J. B. Allison (mother of D. W. Allison, Esq., M. P.,) a lady of 85 years and the daughter of one of the original Loyalists. She performed the ceremony with a handsome silver trowel presented by the superintendent of the circuit, which bore the following inscription:—

"To Mrs. J. B. Allison on the occasion of laying the corner stone of the Methodist U. E. L. Centennial Church, June 14th, 1884."

The gathering then adjourned to the district tent where lunch was served by the ladies. After "the cloth had been removed" Rev. M. L. Pearson, chairman of the district, took the chair and addresses suitable to the occasion were given by Revs. Wm. Briden, Newburgh; J. J. Leach, Odessa; —Gibson, Wolfe Island, and D. V. Lucas of Montreal, the latter making the speech of the occasion. Mr. D. W. Allison, M.P., also made a few remarks.

SUNDAY ON THE GROUNDS.

The grounds were the resort of many sight-seers on Sunday as well as of many good people attracted by the services in the Methodist and Episcopalian churches. The 15th battalion arrived early in the morning and their encampment was all bustle and excitement. The vendors of refreshments were busy completing their arrangements for the morrow and the hammer and saw could be heard mingling with the sounds of preachers' voices.

THE OLD U. E. L. CEMETERY was the main centre of attraction. It is on the the celebration grounds and is marked by a cluster of oak and maple trees. Here many of the pioneers rest without a stone of any kind bearing their names. Some of the mounds are marked only by wooden slabs, all inscriptions upon which, if there ever were any, have been long since effaced. Over one grave, however, stands a stone slab bearing this inscription in letters as if cut with a knife by an amateur sculptor :—

"Here lies entombed Hannah Vandusen, who deceased March 8, 1791, aged 39 years, 10 months and 8 days. She was the wife of Conrad Vandusen, and faithfully discharged the duties of a companion, a parent, and a citizen. C. Shorts facit.'

Two grandchildren of Mrs. Vandusen were on the grounds on Monday—David Vandusen of Picton, aged 76, and his sister, aged 61. This spot was selected as a burying ground because it was here that the first interment after the landing of the pilgrims was made. While Major Vanalstine and his followers were in their tents a little child died and was buried under the trees. Soon afterwards Jasper Hoover, (ancestor of D. W. Allison, M.P.) was killed by a falling tree. Beside those of the little child the remains of this good man were laid. Others died, and soon the reposing ground of the dead was fenced, and thus was formed the "U. E. Loyalist burial ground." The resting place of eight Caseys and Ingersolls, and of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Allison, are enclosed by iron fences and stone posts. These are the only plots which have been cared for.

At three o'clock a military service was held on this spot, Rev. R. S. Forneri, B.A., rector of Adolphustown, giving an excellent sermon, while standing under the shade of the trees, the men sitting round on the mounds which covered the ashes of the pioneers. Services were also held in the large Methodist district tent by Rev. D. V. Lucas of Montreal and Rev. M. L. Pearson of Napanee. In the old English Church the morning service was conducted by Rev. C. E. Thompson of Weston, a U. E. Loyalist.

MONDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

At an early hour residents from the surrounding county commenced to arrive in all kinds of vehicles. About noon the steamers "Reindeer" and "Utica" from Napanee; "Hero" and "Deseronto" from Belleville and Picton, and the "Maud" from Kingston arrived bringing thousands of excursionists. They were landed at Allison's dock and escorted to the grounds by the splendid band of the 15th battalion. An admission fee of 25c. was charged and the rudely constructed turnstile was kept in active operation all day. Dinner was the first requisite of the visitors and this was supplied by the ladies of the Episcopalian and Methodist churches, who had made ample provision for the crowd. A bazaar was also held in the Episcopal booth and many beautiful and useful articles, the handwork of the young ladies of the church, were disposed of.

The programme was opened at noon by the band playing the National Anthem and prayer by Rev. D. V. Lucas. About two o'clock the speech-making commenced from the grand stand; above which floated the received but little attention, and many of the facts relating to their history have been irretrievably lost. No wonder then the U. E. Loyalists are not only mostly forgotten, but have had their conduct, their motives and their character misrepresented. The effort made by Rev. Dr. Ryerson to place before the world a more accurate estimate of the Loyalists, and the attempts by others, in later years, to rescue from oblivion facts honourable to them, have been received incredulously. During the two hundred years that the Loyalists have been engaged in converting the wilderness into comfortable homes, the press of the United States has occupied itself, educating the world to the effect that the American Tories of 1776 were the offscourings of the land. Even Canadians may be found who have nothing but praise for the rebels of 1776, and nothing but obloquy for those who did not think rebellion justifiable and British statesmen and the press of Great Britain have vied to offer to the screaming goddess the most profound adulation. It were amusing were it not humiliating to see bastard Canadians in a feeble way cast discredit upon the United Empire Loyalists. They mostly set out on the supposition that the Loyalists had no love of liberty, that they were willing to be almost, or quite, serfs to pay taxes to the Imperial Treasury without parliamentary representation. Vast numbers were indifferent about liberty. On the other hand there was a large number recognizing the evils existing in the relationship between England and America. But they did not see a grievance to justify rebellion. It is submitted that the United Empire Loyalists were not without a love of liberty, that the subsequent history of the British Provinces presented a steady and healthy development in liberal government, and to-day Canada has more liberty and the government of the people is really more democratic than the United States. But in drawing a comparison between our United Empire Loyalists' fathers and the fathers of the Republic I have no desire to belittle the people of that generation. The bitterness of the last century is all buried. We entertain toward them no feeling but that of good will. We even hope that their destiny may be as great as we believe ours is to be. But while the Canadian nation is on parallel lines in growth and development the lines cannot come together. We celebrate the settlement of this province with no narrow feeling of sectionalism. We are here as Canadians above all. Looking east, west and north over our rich heritage, we say Canada one and indivisible for ever—Canada for the Canadians and Canadians only.

LAYING THE CORNER STONE OF THE U. E. L. MONUMENT.

As Dr. Canniff concluded his address the 15th battalion, headed by their band, came down from the camp and made their way toward the spot where one of the principal events of the day was to take place, the laying with Masonic honours of the corner stone of the new monument to the U. E. Loyalists. Thither the people filed. The Masons, comprising members of Napanee, Belleville, Pic-if need be, to suffer or die for their convictions. It is of such men the salt of the earth is made (cheers), and we in Canada have a good right to be proud that we can look back upon such ancestors. (Renewed cheers.) You may deem these men foolish in their enthusiasm, but if you are worthy to be their descendants you will agree with me in saying that they dared greatly and succeeded greatly, and they have left behind lessons which we would do well to follow. (Cheers.) We ought, on an occasion like this, to understand what induced our forefathers to make the sacrifice they did. You must look back a little to see America during the course of the eighteenth century. Beginning in 1700 and ending in 1775, a great struggle was going on, waged in different parts of America, between the two greatest nations of Europe. In that struggle these men had many of them borne a part. The struggle was to decide whether England or France was to rule this great continent. Those who look back and consider how far the French pioneers had advanced, what their exertions were, how much blood and treasure England and France had spilled in the struggle, will understand in some degree why it was our forefathers desired not to show themselves ungrateful for the great sacrifices which the present country had made.

MONTCALM'S LETTER.

The other day I came upon a strange letter from that distinguished French General, Montcalm, who fell in the great battle which finally decided the fate of North America. I find that Montcalm was not only a great general but a very able statesman. He put on record a prediction of his own fall, declaring that he would be defeated and that he would not survive the loss of North America. He predicted also that ten years after Canada was conquered the other colonies would assert their independence. As you know, who have paid attention to history, this was fulfilled almost to the hour and day. Canada was ceded to Great Britain in 1763, and within twelve years thereafter the first blood was drawn in the struggle which resulted in the independence of the United States of America. The letter first predicts that if General Wolfe understands his trade that Montcalm must be defeated, and declares that as this defeat means the total loss of North America, and will not survive.

"I console myself, nevertheless, for the prospect of my own defeat, and of the loss of the colony, by my firm conviction that this defeat will prove in the long run better than a victory for France, and that the conqueror, England, will find a tomb in her own conquest. This may appear a pardox, but a little reflection and a glance at the political situation in North America will prove the correctness of my opinion. A large portion of the English colonists are the children of men who left England during the period of the civil war, and betook themselves to America to find a country where they might live and die in freedom and independence. I know them thoroughly, but by means of sure information and correspondence which I have arranged myself, and which if my life had been prolonged I had meant to turn to the advantage of France. In fact all the English colonists would have shaken off the yoke long ago, and the band playing the National Anthem and prayer by Rev. D. V. Lucas. About two o'clock the speech-making commenced from the grand stand; above which floated the fine flag of the Native Canadian Society of Belleville. Among the members of the press present were Mr. Campbell, Globe, Toronto; Mr. J. G. Elliott, Whig, Kingston; Mr. Magurn, Ontario, Belleville; Mr. Shannon, News, Kingston; Mr. Graham, Courier, Trenton; Mr. J. A. McDonald, Chronicle, Arnprior; Mr. W. M. O'Beirne, THE EXPRESS, and Mr. W. C. Scott, Beaver.

Mr. L. L. BOGERT, President, contented himself with congratulating the people upon the success of the celebration. Those who were running the affair had made him President because he was the oldest descendant of the U. E. Loyalists in the district. He was, however, a plain man, and would prefer to be in the crowd if he had his own way. He then introduced one of the Vice-Presidents,

Mr. A. L. MORDEN, of Napanee. He welcomed them on behalf of the people of Adolphustown to honour the memory of those whose brave deeds—in the words of that grand old man, William Ryerson—and unswerving Christian patriotism form a patent of nobility more to valued by their descendants than the coronets of many modern noblemen. The proud boast of the Roman was, "I am a Roman citizen." To-day to be able to say I am a British subject, meant that the person speaking was protected to the fullest extent in life, liberty and estate. The bravery and unswerving devotion to duty of the men whose lives they honoured had secured to Canadians their positions as British subjects which gallant Brock called upon them not to yield easily, for it was the grandest heritage in the world. (Applause.) He then gave way to Dr. Canniff of Toronto, who has taken an active part in the work of preparing the celebration.

Dr. CANNIFF began with a graphic description of a young couple, his ancestors on his mother's side, leaving Holland for the new world 200 years ago. The story was given not merely for his personal gratification, but to show the stern courage which characterized the first settlers of America. They were mainly descendants of these hardy pioneers of the 15th, who a century later became exiles from their father's homes and who penetrated to the wilderness of Upper Canada to found the noble Province of Ontario. This is not the time to fully discuss the events attending the great American rebellion of 1776. Neither is this the time to consider the reasons why the rebellion commenced in 1776 became a rebellion, why rebels became heroes and the British Empire became dismembered. At the commencement of the hostilities the rebels were in a minority throughout the thirteen colonies. In New England they predominated, but many of the other colonies, especially New York, from which so many of the Bay of Quinte settlers came were largely against the rebellion. Then there was a large number who were indifferent as to the result. There were even a considerable number of Whigs at first averse to independence and forced into accepting it. Then the mistakes on the part of the British officers led to disaster among the Loyalists. Finally, France gave substantial assistance, and at last the surrender of Cornwallis practically terminated the struggle. England recognized the independence of the colonies, and the loyal Americans found themselves without homes, and aliens to the land of their birth. They were subjects of persecution. Many would have become reconciled, but their lands were confiscated. How the Loyalists found their way into Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Canada, is a sad and touching story. While the Americans for a century have been engaged in writing up the Revolution from their point of view, the history of the American Loyalists has ing with Masonic honours of the corner stone of the new monument to the U. E. Loyalists. Thither the people filed. The Masons, comprising members of Napanee, Belleville, Picton, Adolphustown, Bath and Newburgh lodges, also formed in line and proceeded to the spot in a body. The stone, which was lying on the ground just at the edge of the plot used for the burial ground, was soon surrounded twenty deep by people anxious to witness the ceremony. All being ready, R. W. Bro. Arthur McGuinness, D.D.G.M., of Belleville, acting as G.M., made a brief address, in the course of which he eulogized the Loyalists, and said that the only reason why such men had not already had some such tribute as was now proposed to be erected to their memory must be found in the fact that such acknowledgments of the people's love and gratitude must come when there was time for the cultivation of the arts and wealth to accumulate. He and his brethren deemed it an honour to lay this corner stone of a monument to the memory of men who had sacrificed so much for their allegiance to the British flag. The mystic rites having been duly solemnized, a prayer was offered by Worshipful Bro. Rev. R. J. Craig of Deseronto as Grand Chaplain, and the stone was declared duly laid. The conclusion of the ceremony was announced by the National Anthem by the band, followed by a grand salute of the 15th battalion. "B" Battery band, Kingston, and the Picton silver cornet band, which had arrived on the grounds early in the afternoon, played some lively selections near the speakers' stand.

According to the programme Sir John Macdonald should have spoken next, but he did not put in an appearance.

Sir Richard Cartwright's Address.

Upon resuming—Sir Richard Cartwright was introduced and came forward amid applause. After greeting the audience among whom he recognized many old friends, he proceeded:—I do not believe you could be assembled for a more laudable or patriotic purpose than that which has brought you together to-day. We are here for the purpose of doing what honor we can to the memory of men to whom we owe it that not merely Ontario, but one half of the continent of America, remains to-day under British rule. (Cheers.) It is desirable, too, that we should endeavor to understand the magnitude of the sacrifice made by the noble band who one hundred years ago drew up their batteaux on the shores of Adolphustown. These men were not inconsiderate youths; they were men, most of them of mature years, and some advanced in life, who had won for themselves comfortable independence in a country south of us. At what they conceived to be the call of duty they were ready to sacrifice everything that men commonly hold dear; resign the wealth they had accumulated, forfeit their prospects—their own and their children's—for the sake of their loyalty to the flag under which they had served, and under which many of them had fought and bled. (Cheers.) That was not an ordinary act, and men who performed it were cast in no ordinary mould. Nowadays it is far too common to judge a man's acts by the standard of mere material success. These men had something nobler and loftier before them. Had it been worldly prosperity they looked for they would have cast their lot in with the Republic to the south of us; had they blenched from the trials before them; had they been frightened away from the task of carving a home out of the wilderness—a very few years would have passed before the American flag would have waved over the whole of this continent. The men who did these things possessed

THE COURAGE OF THEIR CONVICTIONS.

Where they thought they were right they were not afraid of being in the minority. (Cheers.) They were prepared to fight, and information and correspondence which I have arranged myself, and which if my life had been prolonged I had meant to turn to the advantage of France. In fact all the English colonies would have shaken off the yoke long ago, and every one of them would have become a little independent republic had it not been for the fear of France at their doors. As between two masters they preferred their own fellow countrymen to foreigners, taking care, meanwhile, to render no more obedience than they could help; but if Canada is conquered, and if the Canadians and English Colonists become one people the very first occasion on which England will appear and interfere with their interests, do you suppose the colonists will obey her? What have they to fear if they do revolt? I am so perfectly certain of the truth of what I have written that I will only allow ten years after the conquest of Canada to see my predictions accomplished. Now you see the reason which consoles me as a Frenchman for the imminent danger France is incurring of seeing Canada lost forever."

FOUGHT FOR SUPREMACY.

Most of the Loyalists whom we honor to-day fought for the supremacy of Great Britain and of the British race in North America, and they fought after such great sacrifices that had been made they were bound to see that the English race was not robbed of the price of the sovereignty of this continent. Remember, when in 1775 the colonies decided to break off their allegiance this struggle was of very recent date; that many of the men served under British generals in the armies which conquered Canada and took Quebec. There were men of different classes among the Loyalists. Some were impelled simply by honest and laudable instinct of loyalty to the flag to which they had owed allegiance, and they were prepared to make sacrifices for that loyalty. I would have you all make sacrifices where necessary for your convictions; but besides these, there were others among the band. These men, as their name, United Empire Loyalists showed, thoroughly appreciated the enormous future which awaited the English race in North America. It would be a mistake to suppose that they wholly approved of the course of the British Government. As their correspondence shows they objected, as Burke and Chatham objected, but they felt it would be a thousand pities and a disgrace to the race that after all that had passed, the English race should allow itself to be split into fragments, and we have numerous proofs of how powerfully these men's acts and feelings affected the whole destiny of this country. Gentlemen, the Loyalists builded better than they knew. They came a handful of men, perhaps four or five thousand souls, to the Province of Ontario, and yet they have given to a very great extent, impulse and direction to the feelings and destiny of four or five millions who now inhabit the Dominion. But for the effect of the example and traditions they left behind them, I believe you would not see yonder flag float from this ground to-day. (Loud applause.) If there be here as possibly there may be, a few of those veterans who recollect the war of 1812 and 1815, they will tell you how powerfully the example of the Loyalists strengthened their hands for the desperate struggle to preserve Canada to the British Crown. Cheers.

VASTNESS OF THE STRENGTH.

Look to history and you will not find a case in the whole range in which a handful of men maintained themselves successfully against desperate odds, which reflects more lustre on the people who did it than the struggle of our forefathers in that war. America placed along the frontier 20,000 men, a greater number than the whole male population of the province capable of bearing arms at that time. (Cheers.) All the aid the British Government could send during the first year was four companies of regulars. She also sent us Brock who alone was worth an army. (Applause.) Brock with eighteen hundred men reduced seven thousand Amer-

THAT DREADFUL MAN.

BY MRS. M. L. RAYNE.

Deacon Smith brought me a letter. It was from my nephew Tom, and read,

Dear old Aunty:

I've l st every cent of that money. Spec was n. g. What's to become of Hettie and the baby?

Your unlucky
TOM.

I leaned back from my half eaten supper, shoved my spectacles up on my intellectual forehead, and wrinkled my pug nose with disagreeable thoughts. It seemed that I had not escaped domestic troubles by refusing twenty years before to marry Hiram Grimwood. Single life had its vexations, too. Tom was my favorite nephew—my dead sister's only child—and from the hour I took him from his nurse's arms in petticoats and brought him home to be the joy and torment of my life he had kept me stirred up. Measles and mistakes were the principal themes of his baby days, and love and lawlessness attacked him in turn as he got older. I never drew a free breath till he was safely married to pretty little Hettie Maynard, our minister's daughter, who had half the sense of the family, and the good looks, too. I was most as much in love with her as Tom was, but she had one fault—she didn't see through Tom, and thought his wild goose chases were sensible, legitimate ways of making money. I always could take care of my money myself. Giving Tom money was like pouring water into a sieve. But Hettie believed that Tom was the greatest business man in the world. She believed everything that boy told her and even persuaded me into believing in him, too.

Now he had done it. I had advanced him $1,000 of the modest inheritance which would be his upon my death, on his sacred assurance that he would double the money and return the original sum. And he had gone and lost every dollar of it.

"The lame and the lazy are always provided for," I thought bitterly. "Of course Hettie and the baby can't starve. I'll go down to the city and bring them up till he gets something to do, the scamp."

Now I am an old maid, and live alone since Tom married, and it didn't take me long to shut the house up. I lent the cat to my next door neighbor, told her she might have him for his keep till I came back, and the bird I took with me for company and safe-keeping. Somehow, when I was getting ready to go, my heart grew light, and before I knew it I was singing an old love song, though what put it into my head I can't tell. It's twenty years since Hiram Grimwood went to California, and I reckon he's been dead the most of that time, or married, which is about the same.

When I had put on all my things with my back to the glass I turned around and there stood a strange woman. She gave me an awful start.

"Good mornin'," I said; "however did you get in?"

Then I saw it was myself and I laughed and laughed. I had on the same black bombazine dress and bonnet I wore when

"I-I didn't know many people," she said in her pretty bird like voice. "I went to school till my dear mother died and left me alone and pe-en-niless!"

She was crying then and the man in the seat before us turned straight round and stared at her. I gave him a look, I tell you, and he turned away again quicker

And she had to go at the next station I never felt so sorry to part with any one and she actually put her pretty arms about my neck and kissed me, just as if she had known me all her lif , sweet thing!

But what does that man do but insist on carrying her satchel out to the platform, and all the time the cars waited he stopped out there talking to her. I couldn't hear what they said, but I saw her give him something and her face was red and she was just as angry as she could be, as and the car moved off I called to her; but she never took any notice she was that vexed about something! I just made up my mind that he made her pay him for carrying that satchel out, and yet it didn't seem as if any man could be so mean.

After a while the man came back and sat down in the same seat he had occupied all along, and—would you believe it?—he had the audacity to try and start up a conversation with me.

"Have you the time?" he asked as impudent as you please.

"Of course I have the time," I answered, in a huff. "I never travel without it."

It was the first time I had been anywhere for ten years, but I didn't propose that he should know it.

"Would you mind telling me what time it is?" he asked, politely.

"Soft soap doesn't go down with me." I looked square at him as I answered.

"Why don't you carry a watch yourself and not trouble ladies?"

He actually smiled. Then I thought maybe he would suspicion that I didn't have any watch, nothing but a gold chain for show, so I took hold of it——

Goodness, gracious! My watch was gone!

I stood right up in the car and screamed at the top of my voice:

"Fire! murder! thieves! I've been robbed! Stop the cars!"

"Hush!" said the man in front of me in a stern voice. "Matilda Jane, sit down and keep quiet; it won't do any good to scream that way."

I nearly fainted. He called me Matilda Jane, and there never was but one person in the world that always gave me my full name, and that was Hiram Grimwood. I pinched myself to see if I was alive.

"That pretty girl took your watch," he said, and it was his voice this time.

"Never!" I said indignantly. "You may be Hiram Grimwood or his ghost, and if you are you have no right to come back here and tell lies. That poor child steal, indeed!"

"Matilda Jane, you haven't changed a bit," said that dreadful man. "You're just the same trusting, unsuspicious soul you used to be. That 'poor child' is an adventuress of 30. She came into this car on purpose to rob you."

"My purse is gone," I gasped, "and

FACTS AND FIGURES.

Robert Bonner, of the New York Ledger is sixty-two, and is worth $7,000,000.

A steamer which arrived from Mexico, recently brought up $17,000 worth of pearls.

There are 125,000 thousand miles of railroad in the United States, or seven times as many miles as there are in the United Kingdom of Great Britain.

An announcement was made a short time since before the Linnæan Society of New South Wales, by Mr. William Macleay, that the total number of fishes now amounts to 1,291 species.

Some idea of the immense business done by the elevated roads in New York City may be gathered from the fact that on March 29th, they carried 306,209 passengers, and received $21,004 in fares.

An establishment in Bavaria for the manufacture and preserving of railroad sleepers, is able to turn out 50,000 sleepers a year, which is about one-tenth of the number required annually for the maintenance of the German railroads.

In the City of New York alone, it is estimated that there are at present no fewer than 400 millionaires, thirty of whom own from $5,000,000 to $50,000,000 apiece; while there are about ten who possess from $50,000,000 to $150,000,000 each.

The official returns of the financial situation of Germany for 1883-84 are rather unfavorable. The revenue from customs and tobacco is 6,429,924 marks less than the estimate, while the total revenue from the imperial customs is about 11,750,000 marks below. In fact, unless a thorough change in the sugar industry takes place, a catastrophe is imminent. This is chiefly owing to the enormous overproduction that has been going on, and the consequent fall in prices.

The recently completed tunnel through the Voralberg, an Alpine outlier, situated on the confines of the Tyrol, Switzerland, and Bavaria, indicates the remarkable advance that has been made during the last four years in this department of engineering. The tunnel, whose maximum elevation above the sea is about 4,300 feet, is nearly seven miles in length, or somewhat longer than the Mont Cenis, the pioneer of Alpine tunnels, and yet the time consumed in its construction was only about three and a half years, or one and a half years less than the time permitted by contract. The rate of progress was about nine metres (30 feet) per day, or three times that in the case of the Mont Cenis, and double that of the St. Gothard tunnel. The number of persons employed on the service was upwards of 5,000, and the total cost involved in the enterprise, 40,000,000 francs, or somewhat less than $1,250,000 per mile. It is expected that the tunnel railway will be in operation about the middle of the present year.

Then I saw it was myself and I laughed and laughed. I had on the same black bombazine dress and bonnet I wore when Tom's mother died, and as that was about fourteen years ago they had come back to fashion and I looked quite stylish; and ever since I had the fever my hair has been short and curly, and it hung over my eyes just the way the girls wear it nowadays. I declare I looked so young I didn't know myself. Well! it's a true saying that there's no fools like old fools, and the Lord didn't make no exception of me.

When I got to the station everybody stared at me as if I was a show; I didn't take any baggage 'cause I warnt going to stay. So I only had a box with a clean calico in it, and a bundle of sweet herbs for the baby, and some new shirts for Tom, and the bird cage, and my umbrella, and a clock I wanted to get repaired in the city.

"All aboard!" yelled the conductor.

"I don't see any board,' I said, politely, and a man gripped me by the arm and pulled me on just as the cars started. Then I heard some one ask: "Who is the innocent old party?" But I didn't see no party, and I guess they got left.

Talk of adventures! I could write a book full of what happened to me on that trip, but it would sound like a romance and nobody would believe it. Ah! friends, truth is stranger than fiction, and I can prove it.

When I got my things settled in the car I felt kind of homesick and lonesome. There was the old cat left among strangers at one end of the journey, and Tom in distress at the other end, and I kind of swinging between the two, and I thought of the beautiful hymn that says—

"The world is all a floating shoe."

And—now, don't laugh—I just laid my head down on the back of the seat before me, and cried. I wouldn't have let Tom knew it for the world, but I did!

There was a man in that seat, but he did not take any notice of me. His face was covered with whiskers and he looked kind of stern, but a real good looking sort of chap, too. I thought it was him that touched me, and I jumped as if I was shot, but it was the prettiest little blonde girl of 16 I ever saw.

"Will you please let me sit with you?" she said, and her voice was just like a bird singing, aud she had a little white hand all cushiony and dimpled, on my black bombazine arm.

I'm a grumpy old thing myself, and I felt like saying as I heard the rest do, "this seat's engaged," but when she looked at me with her sweet violet eyes, I just gave in and said:

"Certainly, my dear, sit right down."

I suppose the sweet child saw I was crying, for she kind of snuggled up to me and wanted to see the bird, and praised him, and he chirped to her, and she told me her sad story, how she had come all the way from California and was an orphan going to seek a living in the great untried world.

I came near crying again then, but I remembered where I was and straightened up.

"Did you ever know a Mr. Grimwood in California?" I asked. Not that I cared to know what had become of Hiram, but I just did it to make talk.

adventuress of 30. She came into this car on purpose to rob you."

"My purse is gone," I gasped, "and every cent I had with me, and a check—Oh, Tom! Tom! there's another fool in the family! I'll just throw myself on the track."

I suppose I must have been temporarily deranged, as they say on juries, for the next thing I knew I was at the door of the car struggling with some one, who help my hands so I couldn't move, and then I broke down and cried, for this was what that dreadful man whispered in my ear:

"Matilda Jane, I have enough for us both, and if you love me as I love you no knife can cut our love in two."

We had hardly talked matters over, and accounted for each other through all these long years of parting, when we got to the town where Tom lived. We took a carriage; at least Hiram—ahem!—Mr. Grimwood did, and we drove right to the house—a little nest in the outlines—and got there just as Tom and Hettie were sitting down to a strawberry shortcake big enough for a dozen. They were laughing and carrying on like two children, and I declare, they were so glad to see me they nearly devoured me off-hand.

"Oh, Tom, Tom," I wailed, "here's your old aunt, who didn't know enough when the Lord rained common sense to hoist her umbrella—Tom the money's gone."

"Never mind the money," cried Tom. "Money's a fool to this! Give us another hug, old girl! Say, aunty, suppose you introduce your pal!"

That wicked boy! But I had forgotten all about having company.

"It's an old friend," I said blushing like a goose; "Mr. Grimwood, Tom."

'Oh, Uncle Hiram," said the wretch; "I've heard of you all my life. You're right welcome here," and he pinched my poor arm till the tears came.

I postponed telling about the robbery until we had eaten supper, but I had hardly said the first word, when Hiram took out my watch and purse and laid them in my lap.

"Why, then, Hiram, you—you are the robber!" was the next smart speech I made.

"Not quite, ma'am," and he didn't seem a bit vexed. "I said a few words to that 'sweet child' and she quietly handed me your property. I'd been watching her all the time, and she knew it. Now, Tom, your aunt is not fit to travel alone, is she?"

"Of course she isn't," said that mischievous Tom. "She needs some one to keep her from throwing her money away. By the way aunty, my little spec has turned out all right. You shall have that money for a wedding settlement if you're good."

"And you'll be married right here with us," said Hettie, giving me Tom's baby to kiss.

"Me first," said Hiram ducking his head.

"No fools like old fools," said I. "Don't muss my collar, Hiram."

"Bless you, my children," said Tom, but the tears shone in his bright eyes and his voice trembled.

And we were blessed!

Do they ever bury a dead calm?

Facts About them and their Undeveloped Possibilities of Romance.

"I wonder," said a Washington street commission merchant recently, "that clergymen never preach on the subject of eggs."

"Eggs. So simple a thing for a text?"

"And why not? What romances there are within their brittle shells! Romances of love, of life, of doubt, of disappointment and of death. The cyclopedias disclose the large variety and different sizes, and tell us the proportions of yolk and white; but these are only the dry facts to be made alive by imagination. The elegant and observant disciple of polite literature in Goldsmith's Bee, if he were to pass down Washington or Greenwich street any day, but especially on a Saturday, would find abundant food for reflection on the thousand and one things that everybody can think and so few write. The egg is so full of meat that it has become the basis of a proverb, and we can not neglect the accumulated wisdom of the ages."

"Can you give anything like an idea of the number of eggs consumed in a year?"

"Taking the aggregate sum of their value, which is placed at $300,000,000, an placing the average price per dozen at 20 cents, it would make the number of eggs consumed in the United States alone 1,500,000,000 dozen, or 18,000,000,000 eggs."

"But where do they all come from?"

"Hens."

"Naturally; but from what places?"

"From all over the country and from Europe. Merchants in Holland and Germand export hundreds of thousands of eggs every year. Don't you remember when the steamer Heimdal was run ashore off Bedloe's island a few months ago because she was on fire, that she had a cargo composed mainly of eggs brought from Hamburg? Eggs used to be shipped in barrels; they are now shipped in cases with paper compartments that allow the air to circulate around them, and it is wonderful to contemplate the length of time they can be kept fresh and sound. Some day when we have an extra rush on I'll send for you, and you will see that my idea of having eggs made the subject of more than a passing thought is something more than a whim.—New York Mail and Express.

The desert of Sahara, Africa, which it is now proposed to flood, is supposed to be a pre-historic sea, and covers an area of 2,000,000 square miles, equal to about three-fourths the United States and territories. The proposed flooding, the canal for which has been authorized by the bey of Tunis, will, however, cover an extent of but about 126,000 square miles, equal to the states of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and that section is broken by several spots of high ground that will appear as Islands, The result of the introduction of such a lake or sea in a hitherto barren country can not yet be definitely stated. It is thought, however, that it will cause great climatic changes, that will extend even into Europe.

Ashes from Corn Cobs

When I was a small boy living in the woods, 25 miles from a lemon and groceries of every kind, I importuned my mother to make some shortcake for supper, but she said she had no saleratus to make it light, but if I would burn some corn cobs and dissolve the saleratus out of the ash, she would make the desired shortcake. I established temporary alkali works for this purpose, and was proud of the ingenuity of my mother, who could thus extract "lightness" from cob ashes, for the shortcake was light as a puff. I asked her why cob ashes were better than other ashes for this purpose. "Because they are stronger." She measured the strength by the amount of carbonate of potash they contained.

Inquiring about the manurial value of cob ashes, and not finding a satisfactory analysis, I determined to ascertain for myself the strength of these ashes. I burned ten cobs just as they would be treated if burned for fuel and not as usually done for analysis, viz: to burn them white and thus remove all coal. I obtained the following results of analysis of these gray ashes:—

Alkaline salts, of which 45 per cent. was carbonnate of potash	54.00
Phosphate of lime	7.50
Carbonate of lime	2.20
Sulphate of lime.....	2.00
Carbonate of magnesia.....	8.00
Silica	20.00
Carbon	6.30
	100.00

The alkaline salts and phosphate of lime in one ton of such ashes are worth $58 at current rates for such salts. The value of barn yard manure in your neighborhood you can estimate better than I, but it would be only a fraction of the value of cob ashes.

To Keep Away Rats.

Mary Hadlem writes that rats have so strong an aversion to the odor of peppermint, they will not enter rooms or bins where it prevails. She says of the peppermint plant: "We place it in the oats, rye and corn, when they are brought in, and some goes under the pig-stye. Though we no longer have any rats, we continue to use the plant, for fear they may make us a visit." If this is so, in the absence of the plant, probably a few drops of the oil of peppermint would answer the same purpose.

FARM ITEMS

The New England Farmer a first-class journal, gives the following:

President Pierce, of the Western New York Agricultural Club, says that wheat bran, sifted upon cabbage heads, will destroy the cabbage worm. This may be better worth trying than the use of poison for even if it doesn't hurt the worm, it will not spoil the cabbage.

Sheep droppings, compressed into solid cakes two inches thick, are now prepared for florists' use. It is claimed that while it promotes growth in an extraordinary degree, it will not injure plants, even if for plucking, and hangs wasting its sweetness when it should be plucked.

Matters were brought to a climax with a rush at a certain farmer's residence. A young tiller of the soil had, for months, been paying the most assiduous attention to one of his daughters, but he was such a bashful, modest youth, never having been much in the company of girls, except this one, that he had never been able to raise his courage sufficiently high to pop the question.

He had gone to the house in which the lady lived on twenty different occasions resolved to know his fate, but when ushered into the presence of the fair one, in whose keeping he had placed his heart, his courage would invariably "go back on him," and he would return to his lonely room in greater suspense than before. Upon the evening in question he had determined that, come what would, he would tell his Mary that he loved her. He would once for all decide the matter; but, as upon all his former occasions, he could not get the proposal further than his throat. There it stuck, and he determined to gulp it down, and give up the siege, when the door opened and in walked the girl's father, who advanced to where they were sitting, and thus addressed them:—

"I came in to put a stop to this foolishness. It ain't courtin' expenses I'm lookin' at, for coal is cheap and wood can be had for the haulin', but I'm sick and tired of this billin' and cooin' like a pair of sick doves, keepin' me awake of nights; but it's got to be stopped right here. Do you love John Henry well enough to marry him?"

"Why, father, I—I—you must—"

"Stop that foolishness," cried the old man. "Answer yes or no, and quick, too. It's got to be settled now or never."

"Well—but, father, don't you know—if you'll only wait, and—"

"Answer yes or no! Speak up!" roared the old gent.

"Well, then, yes. There, now," and Mary hid her face.

"That's business; that's the way to talk. Now, John, look here—look up here or I'll shake you all to pieces. Do you want that gal of mine for a wife? Speak out like a man now."

"Why, Mr.——, ain't this rather a—I mean—can't you—"

"Speak it out, or out of this house you'll go head foremost. I won't wait a minute longer. There's the gal, and there ain't a likelier gal in the State, an' you just heard her say that she wanted you. Now, John, I won't stand a bit of foolin'. Once for all, yes or no?"

"Well yes, sir. I have been presumptuous enough to hope that I—"

"Oh, stop your soft soap talk! the thing is settled now. You two fools would have been six months more at the job that I have done in five minutes. I never saw such foolin' as there is among the young people now-a-days. Ain't like when I was young—an' now, good night. You can talk the thing over, an' you an' me, John, 'll go up to town and get the license to-morrow. Soon be time to get to plowin', no time for love makin' then. Good-night, good-night; I hope I wasn't too rough, but I was determined to fix the thing one way or t'other," and the old man went back to bed.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH'S TOMB

Thousands of Busy Feet Trampling Over His Bones in the Heart of London.

It was on an inclement spring afternoon. I had been at Smith's, the eminent maker of law-ventilating wigs, who dwells in the middle of the "Temple," and was hurrying toward Fleet street through the public way that lies between the Temple church and Goldsmith buildings. This is a somewhat curious alley. On one side is the old sanctuary, built by the Knights Templar in 1185 in commemoration of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. On the other side is an irregular line of houses, mostly occupied by the chambers of members of the legal profession. In one of these lived the author of the "Vicar of Wakefield," just above the apartment occupied by the learned Blackstone, whom he sorely disturbed by his loud lays, his games of blind-man's buff, and his dancing parties. It is there also that he died on the 4th of April, 1774, from too many James' powders.

The pavement of this thoroughfare is peculiar. It consists of tombs. The path has been traced through the old churchyard, and the ancestors' graves have been turned to profitable account by the unbiased ingenuity of the descendants. Worn out by the trampling of the passers by, the epitaphs are nearly effaced, and soon no signs will remain of the desecration. Other sights, however, will probably subsist and preserve for this singular spot its grim character. Inlaid in the external wall of one of the houses facing the church are two funeral monuments, also rapidly decaying in their wretched forlornness. As I was passing, beautiful but most mournful chants suddenly filled the air, and as suddenly stopped, to rise again more lamentable and despairing. I stopped by the railings which inclose the old round sanctuary. There was a minute of silence, and then the invisible voices resumed their plaintive strains. At my feet in the declivity of the ground, between the railings and the shrine, was something indescribably dismal—a yawning tomb. It had been dispossessed of its lid, a pair of dilapidated boards had been carelessly thrown across it, but the eye could penetrate through the gaps they left. Some hideous figures were carousing in the vacant place. I looked away. The disconsolate song still rent the air like a hymn of despair. No doubt it was some mournful hymn, sung with impressive earnestness by a fervent choir, yet it sounded to my ears as a supreme cry for help of the poor departed ones disturbed in their graves.

A little outside the public way formed by the large slabs of the tombs the ground slightly rises. A very unpretending monument lies there. No rails protect it. People pass by and don't look at it, it is so plain and unassuming. It rises only just above the ground. It wears signs of approaching decay. The stone is much chipped; yet it is not very old—only a few years more than the century—but no one evidently looks after it. Nothing is more sad than this humble sepulchre, ejected, as it were, from the churchyard, and thrown on the public road. No doubt the poor forgotten citizen pays the penalty of his obscurity. Unknown in life, he is it promotes growth in an extraordinary degree, it will not injure plants, even if used immoderately, and that the liquid from it does not form crusts and shelter for insects on the surface of the pots. A bag of 100 pounds is $3, and the same in powder $3.50.

In an address before the Maryland Horticultural Society William Saunders, Superintendent of Grounds and Gardens, Agricultural Department, Washington, D. C., said: "The blight on apple and pear trees is, in the aggregate, a source of much loss. I will not discuss the point as to whether this malady is caused by a low form of vegetable life, fungi, or by a low form of insect life, bacteria, but allude to it to mention the fact that no part of a tree coated with lime has ever been affected."

A western farmer manages the Canada thistle in this way: He keeps about 200 sheep, and whenever he discovers a patch of thistles he salts the sheep there, putting a small handful of salt in each thistle at the root. Besides the action of the salt, which tends to destroy them, the thistles are eaten by the sheep close to the ground, and after one or two saltings the grass among the thistles, as well as everything else that hides from view, has been eaten off so that each thistle is easy to be seen and to receive its handful of salt. After this treatment it is seldom that any thistles are seen the second year.

Sir. J. B. Lawer planted a plot of ground in mangels for forty consecutive years. The ground was well tilled, kept free of weeds, but had no manure in all this time. The yield on this plot the last year was found much better than the main crop, the ground for which had been heavily manured, but owing to the wet season a growth of weeds was allowed to spring up. This shows how nearly Jethro Tull was right when he declared that good tillage is manure, and also that it does not pay to manure for a crop of weeds.

A paint for floors, which economizes the use of oil colors and varnish, is described at much length in the Builder, as a recent German invention. For flooring, two and one-eighth ounces of good, clear joiners' glue is soaked over night in cold water, and, when dissolved, is added, while being stirred, to thickish milk of lime, heated to the boiling point, and prepared from one pound of quick lime. Into the boiling lime is poured—the stirring being continued—as much linseed oil as becomes united, by means of saponification, with the lime, and when the oil no longer mixes there is no more poured in. If there happens to be too much oil added, it must be combined by the addition of some fresh lime paste—about half a pound of oil for the quantity of lime just named. After this white, thickish, foundation paint has cooled, a color is added, which is not affected by lime, and, in case of need, the paint is diluted with water, or by the addition of a mixture of lime water with some linseed oil. The substance penetrates into the wood and renders it water-resisting.

A DASHING FRENCH GENERAL.

A Man who Captured Bacninh so Quickly as to Astonish his Commander.

Mœolein is the Annamite word for "quick." And that is the name the French soldiers have give to Gen. Negrier, who is at present looked upon as the most wideawake General in the French army. He commanded one of the brigades in the Tonquin expedition, and it was he who captured Bacninh. The commander-in-chief, Gen. Millot, came after him, much surprised to find the place already taken. Before that Negrier had sent three officers to report the fact to headquarters, but they did not succeed in reaching Millot's brigade. Uneasy at not hearing any news from Gen. Negrier, Gen. Millot sent Capt. de Vignacourt in the direction of Bacninh. On coming close to the place he found a flag flying over the forts, but the fog was so thick he could not see what flag it was. Turning in another direction he came upon another fort, and was surprised to find that the soldiers did not fire upon him. He advanced and saw that they were French troops. He politely asked them if they would be good enough to inform him where he could find Gen. Negrier.

"At Bacninh," was the reply. "He slept last night in the royal pagoda."

Vignacourt rode rapidly back, and arrived at Gen. Millot's headquarters just as the officers were finishing their breakfast.

"Bacninh is taken,' he cried "Gen. Negrier has been there since yesterday evening."

Gen. Millot was astonished, and the correspondent of the Temps says that some of the officers expressed dissatisfaction because Negrier did not wait for them to share the honor of taking the place. They said as much to Gen. Millot to whom they wished to give their sympathy for being late, but the general replied that he was delighted.

Negrier is described as a man whose face denotes great energy. He has splendid eyes, and a nose like the beak of an eagle. His beard is thick and bushy, the color being a strange mixture of black and red. He is young and thin, and has the air of a General of the older times.

It is said that just before a Hindoo woman dies a cow is brought in that she may take hold of its tail as her life passes away. Anybody who has been yanked over a two-acre lot of newly-plowed land, deathlessly gripping the tail of an impulsive cow, can understand how the heathen rite is supposed to typify the longing of a person to die.

"You look like a poet," laughed the funny editor, as the handsomely-dressed youngster entered. The boy smiled, and began fumbling in his pocket. "Maybe you write songs, too," suggested the newspaper man. "Yes, sometimes," was the answer. "Have you got one for me?" "Yes, I think I have." "Is it sung by long or short meter?" By this time the young man had fished out a document, which he threw down, yelling excitedly: "Neither, my friend; it is sung by the gas-meter." It was a gas bill for $10.

the poor forgotten citizen pays the penalty of his obscurity. Unknown in life, he is friendless in death, and no one cares to protest against the profanation of his grave.

This assumption is wrong. The ashes cast there under the curbstone are not those of an obscure citizen. Read the fast-fading inscription placed on the stone:

HERE LIES OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

The English nation is a great and grateful nation. How is such a thing possible? Note that this is to be seen, not in a lonely, ignorant, destitute village, but in the heart of the populous metropolis, in the middle of the wealthy and enlightened inns of court which Ben Johnson describes as "the noblest nurseries of humanity and liberty in the kingdom."

Goldsmith, I know, has a monument in Westminster. But what of that, since his remains lie on the public thoroughfare banished from the sacred ground of the churchyard, unprotected alike against injury and oblivion?—London Correspondence.

Sun Spots.

Everybody who watched the sun with a telescope last summer must have wondered at the great belt of sun spots lying across the southern part of the disk during the last half of July. Several of the spots and groups were of extraordinary size, and their arrangement very similar. When the belt extended completely across the sun, there was visible at one time almost every characteristic form that sun-spots present. There was the yawning black chasm with sharply defined yet ragged edges, vast enough to swallow up the whole earth, with room to spare, and surrounded by a regular penumbral border as evenly shaded as an artist could have made it; there was the double or triple spot whose black centres, though widely separated from one another, were tangled as it were, in one twisted and torn veil of penumbra, or connected by long and shadowy bands; there was the monstrous spot of grotesque form surrounded by smaller spots of still more fantastic shape, and enveloped in a regular penumbra as wonderful as the mighty sun-chasms enclosed in it; there was the great spot, often of singular outline, accompanied outside its shadowy borders by swarms of minute black specks pitting the white photosphere in the most extraordinary fashion; there was the huge group, visible even to the unaided eye, and consisting of half a dozen large intermingled with smaller ones whose number defied counting, and developed in a penumbral cloak of becoming amplitude; there, near the edge of the disk, were the crinkling lines and heaped-up masses of faculæ, the mountainous, hydrogen flames which marked the places where the intensest solar action was going on—in short, there was a panorama in which every variety of sun-spot passed in a gigantic procession across the disk. And what a procession it was!—long enough to reach from the earth to the moon and back again several times.

AYER'S
Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1857 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 62 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.
HORACE FAIRBROTHER."
Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours, MRS. EMMA GEDNEY."
159 West 128th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried. A. J. CRANE."
Lake Crystal, Minn., March 13, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. JOSEPH WALDEN."
Byhalia, Miss., April 5, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung troubles. E. BRAGDON."
Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

VALUABLE PROPERTIES FOR SALE

The undersigned having decided to retire from active business, will offer the following valuable properties for sale :—

Lot 26, 6th Con. N., Fredericksburgh, containing 167 acres; about 147 acres under cultivation. Situated on the York road within three miles of Napanee. Good stone house and excellent outbuildings; well watered by creek, spring and wells. A most desirable property.

West Half Lot 10, 2nd Con. Camden, containing 100 acres; 75 acres under cultivation, remainder pasture land. This property adjoins the village of Napanee Mills, five miles from Napanee and 1½ miles from Newburgh. There are on the premises a frame house, large barn with stone stables underneath.

☞ The Napanee Mills Lime Works, situated on Lots 10 and 11, 1st Con. Camden, on the banks of Napanee river and also adjoining the village of Napanee Mills. The property consists of 86 acres in a high state of cultivation. There are on the property two large lime kilns which supply the Napanee Cement Works; three or four dwellings and large out-

IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD OF 100 YEARS.

Asa Ayers, a veteran of the war of 1812, died on Sunday in Michigan City. He built the first brick house in Cleveland.

William H. Foster, of Salem, Mass., is the oldest bank cashier in the United States. He has been fifty-eight years in the service.

Mrs. Gordon, of Bluffton, S. C., is over 110 years of age, and still continues her habit of walking over four miles to church at least once a month.

A great lover of tobacco was Mrs. Sarah Smith, of Mattoon, Ill., who has just died at the age of 106. She continued its use to the very last.

Mrs. Polly Shoulders, of Jasper, Ind., is 87 years of age, yet she recently walked a distance of fourteen miles one day, and home again the next day.

Henry Wheeler, of Hickory Flat, Ga., has never seen a city and is 94 years old. He has 122 grandchildren and great-grandchildren. He never used rum or tobacco.

Two sisters and a brother named Plonk, living near Lincoln, N. C., cling to life remarkably. The brother is still called "the baby," although 96 years old. One of the sisters, Mrs. Sallie Weaver, is 99 years old, and the other, Mrs. Jane Toutheron, is 98.

A curious wedding has just taken place in Ekatevinoslay, Russia. Both bride and bridegroom have great grandchildren by former marriages. The groom's father, 103 years old, and the bride's mother who is in her 96th year, were both present at the wedding. The bride is 67 years old, and the groom 65.

James Smith, of Kosciusko, Miss., has been married 47 years, and death has never yet visited his household. He and his wife have had twelve children, all of whom live and are married. They have eighty grandchildren. The entire family live within a radius of twenty-eight miles in thirteen residences.

Spencer on Government Charity

"Yes, truly; your principle in derived from the lives of brutes, and is a brutal principle. You will not persuade me that men are to be under the discipline which animals are under. I care nothing for your natural history arguments. My conscience shows me that the feeble and the suffering must be helped; and, if selfish people won't help them, they must be forced by law to help them. Don't tell me that the milk of human kindness is to be reserved for the relations between individuals, and that governments must be the administrators of nothing but hard justice. Every man with sympathy in him must feel that hunger and pain and squalor must be prevented, and that, if private agents do not suffice, then public agencies must be established."

Such is the kind of response which I expect to be made by nine out of ten. In some of them it will doubtless result from a fellow-feeling so acute that they can not contemplate human misery without an impatience which excludes all thought of remote results. Concerning the susceptibilities of the rest, we may, however, be somewhat skeptical. Persons who,

The Terrible Abatis.

Let a regiment move out of the shelter of a piece of woods to charge a breastwork defended by infantry and artillery, and one man out of every ten will be killed or wounded by shell or round-shot while the lines are forming. Within one minute from the time the nearest man comes within range of the musketry and grape forty men will drop. During the rush at least twenty more will go down, and as the troops reach the works they will meet with such a fire as will break up all organization. One time in forty the works will be carried. Thirty-nine times out of forty the attacking troops are driven back with a loss of from 200 to 450 men.

Take that same breastwork, having a headlog to fire under, and run an abatis along its front, and it is nothing short of murder to send men against it. Let the abatis be simply a winrow of small trees and brush, and no column can pass it without a halt. Men must lay down their muskets and drag at the obstruction, and the broken lines must be reformed, and that within thirty feet of the muskets having a dead rest. Make the abatis of sharpened stakes, with their butt ends driven deep into the earth and the center firmly fastened to a rail running parallel with the works, and five hundred men behind the works can hold them against five thousand. Let telegraph wires be strung from tree to tree or post to post, as was sometimes done, and unless the attacking party bring axes their dead will be piled up three feet deep all along the wire fences.

An Expensive Boot-Jack.

A Belgian hotel-keeper is especially "sweet" on Russian customers. "They are large, see you," he states; "they dispute not the accounts. Once lodged himself with me a Count ——," he relates. "When he arrived I was not in; I returned home from my circle; my wife was all frightened. She cry to me, 'Go speak to Mister Russian; he beat all the waiters; he is in anger; but what an anger?' I asked of what it is question. One tells me the Count he insist that the waiters take him off his boots. They are brave Belgians; they would not. He strike them and say stern follies. I had courage; I; I feared me not of him. I go to his room, and say, 'Mr. the Count, I am the proprietor; what will you; 'Sir,' he say, 'I will thank you pull me off my boots!' My first sentiment is de lui allonger une claque—to give him a smack; bnt I master myself, and say, 'Wait only two minutes, Mr. the Count; I have an order to give.' So I run to my wife, and tell her to give me my dress coat, my gloves gray-pearl, my gibus, my pantaloons black. In two minutes behold me, of great tenue. I go back to the Count; I say him, 'Only in dress of gala can the proprietor of this hotel take off your boots,' and, my faith, I take him them off in one, two! He raise himself, bow himself, and thank me very politely. By-and-by, in three weeks, he ask for his bill. I inscribe on it as extra, 'To taking off Mr. the Count's boots by the proprietor in a dress coat and gray-pearl gloves, one hundred francs.' He frown his eyebrows when he read that, but he not say one word. He pay that addition integrally. Never he ask me more to impatience which excludes all thought of remote results. Concerning the susceptibilities of the rest, we may, however, be somewhat skeptical. Persons who, now in this case, now in that, are angry if, to maintain our supposed national "interests" or national "prestige,", those in authority do not promptly send out some thousands of men to be partially destroyed while destroying other thousands of men whose intentions we suspect, or whose intentions we think dangerous to us, or whose territory our colonists want, can not after all be so tender in feeling that contemplating the hardships of the poor is intolerable to them. Little admiration need be felt for the professed sympathies of men who urge on a policy which breaks up progressing societies, and who then look on with cynical indifference at the weltering confusion left behind, with all its entailed sufferings and death.

Electricity in Vineyards.

M. Henri de Parville, in his Scientific Review, calls the attention of wine-growers to the services electricity might render them in protecting their vines from the disastrous effects caused by a sudden fall in the temperature. For several years vines in France have been protected from the effects of cold winds or sudden changes in the temperature by artificial clouds of smoke, produced by the burning of tarred straw and other combustibles. Vine-growers have learned to appreciate the benefits of this system; but it has a drawback which M. de Parville points out—namely, tha to light the fires at the right moment in the night time, it is indispensible to have a thoroughly reliable watcher to whom drowsiness is unknown, and who is ever ready to consult the theremometer. By the aid of electricity a new order of things would, he remarks, be introduced, and safety of the vines would no longer depend on the night watcher. A vine-grower has only to place in his vineyard one or more electric batteries similar to those used to fire mines, the wires being connected with the fires prepared at regular distances. When the theremometer falls towards zero, by means of a very simple arrangement it causes the electric current to pass along the wires; the fires are lighted, the air being filled with the protecting smoke clouds. M. de Parville cites one or two instances in which his system has been most successfully employed with very little outlay to the vine-grower. The plan might be worth a trial. —London Standard.

The "bull in the china shop" is generally the proprietor, who endeavours to exalt the price of his wares.

Here is a piece of German repartee. A Frenchman said to a Berliner: "Your Iron Cross, the highest Prussian order, is simply ridiculous—it has an intrinsic value of scarce 5 sous." To which the native of the Prussian capital replied; "I don't deny it, but it has nevertheless cost you two Napoleons."

Why is it that a man never thinks of winding the clock up at night until after he has put the light out and jumped into bed?

Oh! how tired and weak I feel, I don't believe I will ever get through this Spring house-cleaning! Oh yes you will if you take a bottle or two of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters to purify your blood and tone up the system. In large bottles 50 cents.

his eyebrows when he read that, but he not say one word. He pay that addition integrally. Never he ask me more to serve him as a pull-boot."

Honors to Pepys.

In addition to the honors already conferred on him, Pepys is to receive the crowning distinction of having his diary and correspondence enshrined in an edition de luxe. It is just such a compliment as one fancies would have been appreciated by so genuine a lover of books—willing as he was to pay good prices, and looking to the outside as well as the inside of a purchase. Such an entry as that of April 8, 1667, reveals the genuine bibliophile: "Away to the Temple, to my new bookseller's; and there I did agree for Rycaut's late 'History of the Turkish policy,' which cost me 55 shillings; whereas it was sold plain before the late fire for 8 shillings, and bound and colored as this is for 20 shillings; for I have bought it fully bound and truly colored all the figures of which there was but six books done so, whereof the king and duke of York and duke of Monmoth and Lord Arlington had four. The fifth was sold and I have bought the sixth." As to his appreciation of the contents of the volumes he acquired, it must be acknowledged he was at least an honest critic. There must be a good many persons for instance, who have derived little enjoyment from "Hudibras," though not many who have had the courage to say so. Such a judgment as the following, however, takes away one's breath: "To Depford by water, reading 'Othello, Moore of Venice,' which I have heretofore esteemed a mighty good play, but having so lately read 'The Adventures of Five Houres,' it seems a mean thing." But it is fair to remember that the play was a translation from Calderon, and that Shakspeare was not always considered above comparison. —St. James's Gazette.

The Overwork of the Present Day.

"To have as much work to do as one can do, and a little more," has been given as the best receipt for cheerfulness and contentment; but while readily concurring in the first part of the sentiment, we cannot but suggest that it may be, perchance, that very "little more" which is at the root of half the ill-health, pale faces, and fractious nerves of the present day. It is that last drop in the already full cup, that last straw on the already well-laden back, which is too much, just one degree too much, for the sorely pressed men and women who are fighting in the fight of life, and it is that overplus from which they ought if they can to abstain. They will not see it; they will not do it. Each allows that in the case of another, that other's duty in the matter is plain enough; but for him or herself—and then follow excuses, arguments, and obstinancy not to be shaken. Everybody, it would seem, must attempt something over and above what he or she can possibly accomplish; everybody must drain a little more out of their worrying, feverish brains than can be yielded consistently with only wholesome effort or energy; everybody must fly at game beyond their reach, if only it be within their sight.—Good Words.

The Red Man's Foot Marks.

No one can see Indian trails now without his attention becoming suddenly wakened. There is no real difference between any one of those pathways and an ordinary cattle track except, perhaps, they may be worn a little deeper; yet no one can enter upon them for the first time without being in some measure startled, and conscious that this is a roadway distinct from any he has ever seen before. They cannot have been made by cattle. Cattle paths are generally single, or if more than one, they run independent of each other. These are exactly parallel, and there are perhaps half a dozen of them. They do not look as if they had been made by settlers. A white man's road would have followed a straighter line. these are full of curves, and bend from one side to the other, turning with every minor undulation of the ground, as though when they were laid out the distance travelled was of no importance compared with the regularity of the grade. Their curves are always concentric. They all turn as if by one impulse, and they dip down into a valley together, or disappear behind a hill at the same time, constantly maintaining the same distance from each other

This is the first sight of an Indian trail. But at its sudden revelation one seems to have come into a strange world. It may still be the same valley, but with the obliteration of other signs of civilization, the way has taken on an entirely different character. Beyond the last vestige of white activity and noisy struggle, everything seems to grow quiet. All disposition to break the stillness has gone. There is no living thing in sight, but instinctively one hesitates, whether a hunter or not, to raise his voice lest he should frighten the game, of which the woods have now become the home. Silence is the natural condition of existence. A shot would be a sacrilege. The land seems given back to belong to its first inhabitants, who have been content to let it rest in a state of nature. The only marks of men are these pathways, but their easy and unresisting curves are filled with nature's spirits, and they nowhere interrupt her repose.

These simple paths have been made by horses travelling several abreast as close together as horses with their riders can go. They have been there for hundreds, perhaps thousands, of years. They were part of a long highway which once ended only with the limits of the Indian's wanderings; and for centuries they have been traversed by savage bands of warriors, hunters, or horse thieves.

The Coronation Chair of Great Britain.

The other night in the House of Commons, Mr. Kenny complained that the public notice attached to the coronation chair in Westminster Abbey had been altered by the omission of all reference to the legend that the coronation stone (in Irish, Lia Fail) was first used for the coronation of the Irish kings, and was only carried to Scotland by Fergus, the Irish King, who subdued that country. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre in reply offered to show the honorable member a letter of explanation he had received from the dean The legend to which the honorable member referred was not admitted to be accurate by honorable member a letter of explanation he had received from the dean The legend to which the honorable member referred was not admitted to be accurate by many of the best Irish authorities. The explanation furnished by Dean Badley was to the following effect: Among the interesting features of Westminster Abbey the coronation stone has always been popular. Many years ago an inscription in Latin was attached to it stating that the stone was the pillow on which Jacob rested his head at Bethel, and the legend went on to say that it was carried from Palestine to Egypt, and thence to Spain. From Spain it was said to have been conveyed to the Hill of Tara, in Ireland.

In the year 1851, in order to meet the convenience of the visitors to the Great Exhibition, the head guide wrote on a label a notice to the effect that the stone had been used at the coronation of the ancient kings of Scotland and Ireland, but omitted all reference to the legend relating to Jacob's pillow, while retaining the closing part referring to Ireland. The label having become dusty and dirty, the guide, who has considerable antiquarian knowledge, turned it over recently, and on the back wrote simply the historical fact with regard to Scotland, and ignored the legend entirely. Dean Bradley adds that geologists have conclusively shown that the chair is of Scotch limestone, and that no stone of the kind is to be found in Palestine or Egypt. He has, however, in contemplation the addition of a separate inscription, setting forth the curious legend of its travels in the Holy Land as distinct from the authenticated history of the stone.

The Affection of Mocking Birds.

Some years ago there was a young physician who was loved by all on account of his gentle, loving disposition. Among his more humble but not less devoted admirers was a mocking-bird that had been born and raised in his garden. The bird took the greatest fancy to him, and when he returned home in the evening would hop round his front steps and then fly to a tree near by and sing for hours at a time. The bird appeared to be in an ecstasy of delight whenever the doctor was at home. Finally the yellow fever broke out here, and, among others, the doctor was stricken down. He lingered for four days, and then died. On the night before his death three watchers by his bedside had their attention attracted by the mournful, sobbing notes that the "doctor's bird" (as they called it) uttered throughout the night. The next day the doctor died and that night the bird was silent. After the funeral the family opened the room to air it, and when the bed was drawn aside the first thing seen was the mocking-bird lying at the head of the bed, dead. How it got there no one knew, but there it was, dead, as though it could not survive one it loved so well.

There are lots of people going around grumbling, and half sick at the Stomach all the time; who might be well and happy, if they only used Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters occasionally. It is a splendid Blood Purifier All Druggists 50 cents.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, JUNE 20, 1884.

MR. WILSON "WHITEWASHED."

As will be seen by the report of the County Council proceedings in other columns the Council have fully and absolutely exonerated and acquitted—that is the language of the report—Mr. Uriah Wilson of and from all blame in the matter of the debenture sale. The investigation occupied the whole week and the whitewashing operation was performed in the dying hours of the session on Saturday. We are not at all surprised that the gentlemen who have been hand and glove with Mr. Wilson in the council and elsewhere should go in so heartily for the whitewash. That is in their line. They have got to look upon it as the correct thing—the result of having been forced by their leaders to condone its application to cabinet ministers and the experience some of them had in daubing up a defaulting county treasurer. They were, therefore, not to be expected to wince at such an undertaking as this. But there were others who voted for the report, who not having been intimately associated with Mr. Wilson had no such bad example set before them, and it is the course of these gentlemen we cannot understand. They no doubt have some reason for voting as they did, and we trust, for their sakes, that it will be sufficient to satisfy the ratepayers. For our part we fail to see what excuse they have to offer. The matter of receiving tenders for the debentures was referred to the Finance Committee, and upon the chairman of that committee, Mr. Wilson, devolved the duty of supplying applicants with the necessary information upon which to base their tenders. The advertisement clearly stated this. Now, the correspondence submitted, showed that Mr. Wilson shirked his duty and placed it without instruc-

Machar's standing and a gentleman whose honour has never before been publicly assailed would be guilty of so reprehensible an act, especially in a case like this, where he had nothing to gain? The Beaver will find very few, if any, who will endorse the bad opinion it has given of Mr. Machar, and that gentleman can well afford to let insinuations coming from such a source pass unnoticed.

—The charges of unprofessional conduct some time ago preferred against ex-Vice-Chancellor Blake by J. A. McDonnell were investigated by the Law Society last week with the result that they were found wholly without foundation. The decision does not satisfy the Mail and we may soon expect to hear it bellowing "The Law Society must go."

LENNOX AND ADDINGTON COUNTY COUNCIL.

The June Session.

(Coutinued from last week.)

Moved by Mr. J. C. CARSCALLEN, seconded by Mr. DAVIS, that in accordance with the statutes of Ontario the county judge is authorized to equalize the assessment, and that the Warden be instructed to attend the court and call any member of the council to attend said court.—Carried.

The Council went into committee of the whole on the report of the U. E. L. Monument Committee.

Moved by Mr. T. G. CARSCALLEN, seconded by Mr. LANE, that the report be adopted with the last clause omitted.—Carried.

The committee rose and reported the adoption of the report as amended. This report was laid over till the December session on the following division:—Yeas—Messrs. Bosleay, Brown, J. C. Carscallen, Davis, Denison, Diamond, Ham, Johnston, Reid, Sexsmith and Wagar. Nays—Messrs. Ball, T. G. Carscallen, Lane, Lloyd, Mallory, Polley, Perry, Parks, Sharp and Wilson.

The Council then adjourned till Friday morning.

[We are compelled to hold over Friday's proceedings. The report will appear next week.]

SATURDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment, the Warden in the chair.

The minutes of yesterday's proceedings were read and approved.

The account of Messrs. Downey & Co., coal, $159.50, was ordered to be paid.

The report of the Special Committee was read as follows:—

The report of the Special Committee to whom the charges were referred, made in THE NAPANEE EXPRESS, against Uriah Wilson, Esq., in respect to the sale of county debentures, your Committee beg leave to report as follows:—That they have heard the statements of Mr. O'Beirne and of Mr. A. H. Roe, and all the other evidence adduced before them. That from the said statements and evidence they fully and absolutely exonerate and acquit Uriah Wilson, Esq., of and from any blame whatever in connection with the sale of the said debentures. All of which is respectfully submitted.

Signed B. C. LLOYD,
JOHN D. HAM.
JAMES LANE.

The minority report was then read on motion of Mr. PARKS, seconded by Capt. POLLY, as follows:—

Report on the investigation of the sale of certain debentures of the County of Lennox and Addington, to Dr. McKenzie, of Kingston at 103½ and the comments of hundred dollars towards the U. E. Monument.—Ordered to be filed.

Mr. REID moved, seconded by Mr. BROWN, that the report of the Equalization Committee be re-considered.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. REID, seconded by Mr. BROWN, that the Council go into Committee of the whole on the report.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. SEXSMITH, seconded by Mr. REID, that C. E. George be paid $1,50 per day for services during the session.—Carried.

The Council went into committee of the whole on the report of the Equalization Committee, Mr. Ham in the chair.

Moved by Mr. WILSON, seconded by Mr. DIAMOND that Adolphustown be equalized at $365,762.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. WILSON, seconded by Mr. SHARP, that Bath be equalized to $95,000.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. BALL, seconded by Mr. LLOYD, that Camden be equalized at $1,700,000.

Moved by Mr. BROWN, seconded by Mr. WAGAR, that Sheffield be lowered on equalization $50,000.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. WILSON, seconded by Mr. J. C. CARSCALLEN, that Camden be equalized at $1,717,3 30; Sheffield at $538,930.—Carried.

The Committee rose and reported the adoption of the report as amended.

Mr. Wickware, Reeve of Barrie, was heard in reference to joining the townships of Barrie and Kennebec to the County of Lennox and Addington.

The Council went into committee of the whole on the second reading of the by-law to strike the county rate.

Moved by Mr. J. C. CARSCALLEN, seconded by Mr SHARP, that the blank be filled up with the rate of 4 mills in the dollar.—Carried.

The Committee rose and reported on the second reading.

The by-law was then read the third time, signed, sealed and finally passed.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, seconded by Mr. PARKS, the matter relating to the union of Barrie and Kennebec with Lennox and Addington, was referred to the Warden and Mr. J. D. Ham.

The Council then adjourned to meet on the second Tuesday in December.

THE CONFERENCE.

The Bay of Quinte Conference of the United Methodist Church opened here yesterday in the East Methodist Church. Rev. Dr. Carmon, one of the General Superintendants, presided and made a fine opening address. On the first ballot Rev. James Curts was elected President and Rev. Mr. Briden Secretary. The following is the list of stations for these districts:—

I.—BELLEVILLE DISTRICT.

Belleville Centre—John B. Clarkson, M.A., Wellington Jeffers, D.D., Superannuated. Tabernacle—John J. Leach, J. R. Jacques, D.D., Principal of Albert College; W. P. Dyer, Prof. of Natural Sciences; A. Campbell, Bursar; Wm. Bird, S. W. Ladu, superannuated. Belleville West—J. J. Rice. Belleville North—George Leach. Trenton West—Charles Fish; William Young, superannuated. Trenton East—George W. Dewey, Wm. E. Norman, A. C. Maybee, superannuated. Sidney—Wm. H. Cook, Hiram Williams; Alex. Wright, superannuated. Foxboro—E. E. Howard, R. H. Leitch. Canifton—Foster McAmmond, B. A., Hiram Allen. Shannonville—Wm. H. Peake, R. L. Edwards. Frankford—Robert M. Pope, Henry Thomas. T. O'Donahue goes to College.

II.—NAPANEE DISTRICT.

Napanee East—M. L. Pearson; L. A. Betts, superannuated. Napanee West—J. P. Wilson; D. Wilson, superannuated. Deseronto—D. O. Crosley. Morven, George Robinson. Newburgh, Wm. Briden, Wm. Elliott, B.A. Wilton, Thos. Cleworth. Odessa—John A. Jewell, B.A. Bath, R. N. Adams. Adolphustown—S. McCauley. Bay—J. E. Robinson. Selby, John A. McCamcessary information upon which to base their tenders. The advertisement clearly stated this. Now, the correspondence submitted, showed that Mr. Wilson shirked his duty and placed it without instructions from the council on the shoulders of the clerk. The result is that the necessary information was not supplied to one of the parties who wished to tender and the county suffers a loss of $630 at least. How the members of the council could conscientiously, in the in the face of this evidence, exonerate Mr. Wilson from blame we cannot imagine. If this loose system is to be introduced into municipal matters the sooner the services of the council are dispensed with the better, and all the business relegated to the clerk. Want of space prevents a further reference to this matter in this issue. We will next week go into further details.

A LAME DEFENCE.

After many weeks of silence, notwithstanding our repeated challenges to discuss the matter, Mr. Wilson's organ at the west end has at last devoted a column to an attempted defence of its patron's course in the debenture deal, and it no doubt now thinks, in its maudlin way, that it has settled the question. We have not the space at our disposal this week to make a long reply to the organ's statements, if, indeed, we considered such was necessary. Had the Beaver published Mr. Machar's letter, which was laid before the committee of enquiry, as any honorable journal would have done before making comments thereon, the article would then have furnished its own reply, and further remarks on our part would have been superfluous. But it suppressed this document because it knew its suppression was necessary to a doctored defence. That letter clearly stated (1) that Mr. Machar had made several unsuccessful efforts to obtain the information which the advertisement stated Mr. Wilson would supply; and (2) that had the desired information been obtained his client would have tendered 105 at least, which is 3½ per cent. more premium than that paid by Dr. Mackenzie, and which would amount to a total gain to the county of $630. To any fair-minded journal this would be sufficient evidence that Mr. Wilson was derelict in his duty in not furnishing the information, and it would have been far from exonerated him from blame on his flimsy statement that the letter had been handed to the Clerk to attend to and that the latter had written accordingly. But the Beaver is never fair-minded in such cases, for the reason that it never takes a stand on a public matter from purely disinterested motives. It always has "an axe to grind" and it is not at all particular how the operation is performed so long as the end is attained. To get over the difficulty in which it finds itself in this instance, it has been compelled to censure Mr. Machar, who, it broadly insinuates, wrote a falsehood in stating that he never received a reply to his letter of 11th February, and that he is stirring the matter up to "re-establish himself with a client for a serious dereliction of duty." Could anything be more infamous? And this is the journal that prates about honor! Is it not the height of improbability that a lawyer of Mr.

as follows:—

Report on the investigation of the sale of certain debentures of the County of Lennox and Addington, to Dr. McKenzie, of Kingston at 103¼ and the comments of THE EXPRESS on said sale, claiming that a better offer was at hand. On an investigation of the matter, and having heard the statements of those who had any particular knowledge of the facts, we beg leave to report that we have read the articles censuring Mr. Wilson published in THE EXPRESS, and also the statement of Mr. Wilson and find that the whole matter hinges on Mr. Machar, of Kingston, not having received a reply to his letter of the 11th February to Mr. Wilson, asking for information on which to base a tender, which reply Mr. Roe states he made at the request of Mr. Wilson and had it mailed by one of the pages at the Legislative Chambers, Toronto.

We believe it would have relieved Mr. Wilson from any great censure it Mr. Roe had answered Mr. Machar in Mr. Wilson's name and had attached his own initials to it.

We believe it was the duty of Mr. Wilson to have answered Mr. Machar's letter himself as he had advertised to do, as he was the only person responsible or could be held responsible for correct information. We also regret very much that Mr. Machar did not receive the desired information, as from a letter written by Mr. Machar and submitted to the Committee, he says he was prepared to give 105 at least, which would have been a gain to the county of about $610. For the information of the Council we submit a copy of the minutes of the Committee.

THOS. POLLEY,
IRVINE PARKS.

Moved by Mr. PARKS, seconded by Mr. PERRY, that the minutes of the Special Committee be read.—Carried.

The minutes of the Committee were read.

Mr. WILSON raised an objection to the minutes.

Moved by Mr. WILSON, seconded by Mr. J. C. CARSCALLEN, that it be inserted in the minutes that Mr. O'Beirne said that he did not accuse Mr. Wilson of putting up a job; he only asked "Was it a job?"—Carried.

The clerk was instructed to enter this on the minutes.

Mr. WILSON also wished it inserted in the minutes that he had stated before the Committee this morning that he had no word from Mr. Machar, that no answer had been received to his letter of the 11th of February until the 11th of March and which was read to the Council on 11th March, before the Committee's report was adopted.—This was done.

Capt. POLLY, desiring to reach home, was relieved.

Mr. T. G. CARSCALLEN wished to know why Mr. Polley had not signed the report, as he had stated he exonerated Mr. Wilson and every one else.

Capt. POLLEY stated that he said this conditionally, on it being shown that Mr. Roe answered the letter in Mr. Wilson's name.

Moved by Mr. REID, seconded by Mr. BALL, that the report of the Committee be received and adopted.—Carried.

Mr. PARKS called for the yeas and nays, but the motion was sustained on the following division:—

YEAS—Messrs. Ball, Bosleay, Brown, J. C. Carscallen, T. G. Carscallen, Davis, Denison, Diamond, Ham, Johnston, Lane, Lloyd, Mallory, Reid, Sexsmith, Sharp, Wagar—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Perry and Parks—2.

Moved by Mr. REID, seconded by Mr. BROWN, that the report on equalization be re-considered.—Carried.

Adjourned till 2 p. m.

The Coe Land Sale.

[From the Ottawa Free Press.]

The latest bubble freighted with Tory hopes for Mr. Mowat's discomfiture has been cruelly pricked. The Attorney-General was specifically charged with bribing the wicked Mr. Coe, in return for opposing the election of the virtuous Mackenzie Bowell in North Hastings. The party which defends at Ottawa, the wholesale bestowal of North-West wheat lands upon Tory partizan or foreign speculators, was virtuously indignant at an alleged similar profligacy in Toronto. Liberals who know the unscrupulousness of the Tories in making charges and their innate horror of all kinds of bribery and corruption, refrained from passing judgment until the accused had been heard. The hearing has now been given and the explanation is satisfactory. It appears that Mr. Coe and several other capitalists constructed, at the cost of two million dollars, the Ontario Central Railway from Weller's Bay on Lake Ontario to the mining region of North Hastings. They did so without receiving one dollar for subsidies. The object of this road was to develop the mining resources of the region tapped. The same capitalists contemplate smelting the magnetic ore of the townships so opened with charcoal and producing a superior quality of iron. It was necessary in order to warrant the investment of a large sum of money that a permanent supply of charcoal be guaranteed. To do this the company applied to the Ontario Government for a grant of one hundred thousand acres of timber lands in the district. After two years consideration, an exhaustive survey of the country affected, the Government agreed to sell the company, under the Mining Act, 51,538 acres of wooded lands which are pronounced to be unfit for settlement. It is believed that this sale will tend to promote the settlement of the remaining district land, which are good for agricultural purposes.

icans to capitulation. (Cheers.) In the face of the great European wars the deeds of heroism on the frontier of Canada were lost sight of, but it is not for any patriotic Canadian to forget them. (Cheers. I have said elsewhere and I now repeat that the Colony of Ontario has a proud pre-eminence among the colonies of Britain for this reason. All the other colonies have been founded by men who sought to better their condition or were founded by the government of Britain or obtained by conquest, but Ontario stands alone as the colony founded by men making great sacrifices to maintain their allegiance to Great Britain. (Cheers.) I know of but one community in America or elsewhere, perhaps—that founded by the Puritan fathers in New England. I am not going to make a political harangue, but I have ventured in another place to point out how I thought we descendants of the U. E. Loyalists might best act in the spirit of our forefathers.

FRANCE'S OBJECT.

Bear in mind that what these men sought to prevent was a division which France sought to foster between the great portions of English races. I believe the Loyalists, and the people of Canada who derive their inspiration from them, can best do justice to the spirit of their forefathers by doing all they can to bring together in a union all the English speaking races in the world. (Applause.) I state that as a man loyal to Britain and British institutions. (Renewed applause.) I believe I know whereof I speak when I say no better service can be rendered to the people of Great Britain and of the whole world than to remove all chance of hostility between the two great branches of the English race. As a descendant of a Loyalist, I say it would be a work to which any man might be proud to consecrate his life. It is the part of wisdom for us to do what we can to fulfil the object for which our forefathers sacrificed so much, to bring together as a united people, if not under one sovereign, at any rate in one alliance offensive and defensive, two great nations, which, to the misfortune of the world, have been severed and alienated. You may call this a dream—Cavour was called a dreamer when he hoped for a united Italy; Bismarck was condemned as a visionary when he saw in the future a German Federation. The English speaking people are not inferior to the Italians or Germans when the real welfare of their race is at stake. (Loud applause.) In closing, he urged upon the Canadians to imitate the heroism of their ancestors, because the nation could never become great unless some citizens were willing to sacrifice themselves for the general good, and Canada at the time needed such men. Before concluding he stated that he had in his possession the warrant calling his grandfather to the first Legislative Council of Upper Canada and fixing the place of meeting at the town of Lennox in Adolphustown—the little village yonder—but the meeting place was afterwards changed to Niagara.

Rev. D. V. Lucas, M. A., of Montreal, and the descendant of a U. E. Loyalist in Halton county, said he came to honor the pilgrim fathers who laid the foundations of civilization in Upper Canada by the laws of association. They were carried back for 100 years to the events immediately preceding the time when England lost her colonies, and still further to those epochs in English history when the people slowly but surely emerged from the condition of partial serfdom to the condition of freemen. One of the most successful struggles was that between the depotism of kings and the love of true freedom in the minds of the British people. Before the struggle ended, some kings lost their crowns and others lost their heads, but "Dominions" and a picked team of the Sillsville and Bath clubs, was next played. The match continued three days. The close of the first day showed Napanee in the rear. The syndicate team had the drop on them from the outset.

This concluded the events of the day. The boats took the majority of the visitors to their homes in the evening, but many remained all night, the residents in the vicinity extending hospitable entertainment. Apart from the oppressively warm weather the day was most enjoyable.

TUESDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The second day opened with equally fine weather. The day was known as "Governor's Day," the Lieut. Governor of Ontario having been announced to be present, and as a result, there was a large influx of visitors. All the boats were heavily laden and some of the vessels had to make double trips to ports on the bay to accommodate the people who wished to be present. It was estimated that 10,000 people were on the grounds during the day. The first event was the arrival of the Lieut. Governor, who came by steamer Utica from Napanee. He was met at the wharf by a guard of honor of the 15th Battalion, under Adjt. T. C. Lazier and a troup of 4th Light Cavalry, under Capt. Griffiths, together with the bands of the 15th and 25th Battalions, and conducted to the residence of J. J. Watson, Esq., where refreshments were served. Shortly afterwards the ceremony was commenced by service being opened in St. Paul's church, after which a procession of clergymen was formed in order of rank, and followed by the Lieut. Governor, marched to the site of the new church singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers." Upon arriving at the appointed place the processionists took up their position around a carpeted dais on which stood the Lieut. Governor, the rector, Rev. R. S. Forneri, and Ven. Archdeacon T. Bedford-Jones, who conducted the services from the beginning. After singing and prayer the Archdeacon read an appropriate address, which was elegantly illuminated, and presented His Honor with a silver trowel.

His Honor then read a reply expressing his sentiments in fitting language. [The address and reply will appear next week.]

The stone having then been swung into position, His Honor took the silver trowel and tapping it, declared it properly laid, accompanied by the following words:—"We lay this stone of foundation to the honor and glory of God, and in memory of the United Empire Loyalists, who one hundred years ago laid the corner stone of our Province in peace and righteousness and in loyalty to the British Crown and Empire."

The ceremony was then concluded by the churchwardens taking up a collection. Immediately afterwards short addresses were given by His Honor and Dean Lister, of Kingston, the latter's remarks being specially pertinent to the occasion. He argued that the fact of their having been U. E. Loyalists was due to the perverse policy of Lord North's Administration in dealing with the thirteen American colonies. Had Lord Chatham's (Pitt) counsels prevailed there would have been no rebellion. He also said that many of the U. E. Loyalists, notwithstanding their attachment to the motherland, were in full sympathy with the colonists in resisting the odious taxes placed upon them. Among the clergymen present were the following:—Rural Dean Burke and Rev. D. F. Bogart, Belleville; Revs. C. E. Cartwright and Cook, of Kingston. At the conclusion the party returned to Mr. Watson's residence.

ON THE GROUNDS.

In the meantime the large crowds on the celebration grounds were moving about, sixth generation, and grandson of the man who had established the first militia in Canada.

Mr. G. E. Henderson, Q. C., Belleville, County Crown Attorney, spoke next.

Lieutenant-Governor Robinson, who had been awaited with some impatience, was then announced. He expressed regret that he had kept them waiting, but surely he was hardly responsible for the great hospitality of the gentlemen of the militia who had entertained him. Considering all that the militia had done in defence of Canada he was proud to be a guest of their representatives in this district. He was of U. E. Loyalist stock, and therefore might be expected to not give all of his time to business, but to devote a little of it to pleasure as well. (Applause.) He had been most kindly entertained also by the clergy at whose instance he had first come here to lay the corner stone of the church to be built in memory of U. E. Loyalists. An American once discussing the Canadian form of Government expressed himself much in its favour on the ground that while the people paid all the expenses the Governor had all the fun. (Laughter.) Part of his fun was to meet so many kind friends at such a gathering as this. Up to a certain point the acts of the English Government in reference to the thirteen colonies were oppressive. U. E. Loyalists did not uphold that oppression, but when it came to revolt, and they saw that something more than redress of grievances was to be demanded, they, through years of war, showed heroism and devotion to their convictions seldom equalled in the history of any country. He recognized old names, having heard them from youth. They were names first known here by the arrival of the heroic band who landed on this point one hundred years ago. If we had a grand country we owe it to them. He had heard the question discussed as to whether the time has come when our political status should be changed; it was not for him as Lieutenant-Governor to discuss these matters, but he would say to Loyalists that while others, be they gentlemen of the press or politicians, discuss that question—the descendants of Loyalist can afford, knowing what they knew of old times, to mark time and listen to the discussions. They must recollect that if medicine is given hurriedly the physician must take good care that the death of the patient does not follow. (Applause.) He hoped that the young people would mark this day, and that when fifty, or sixty, or seventy years hence they went over memory's records they would think that this great celebration took place in the regime of Governor Robinson. (Loud applause. A voice—old John B's son. Renewed applause.) Governor Robinson, proceeding, eulogized the great resources of Canada, and added: Knowing the blessings we have received under the British Constitution we can afford to remain some time longer at any rate without changing our position. (A voice—hundreds of years.) He regretted that he had not before visited the lovely scenes through which he passed to-day. He regretted that he had not before had the opportunity of making the acquaintance of the people of this district, but he hoped this would not be his last visit. He hoped they would make this day a grand and permanent success. He hoped they would testify in a substantial way their regard for the Loyalists by subscribing liberally to the monument to be raised to their memory. (Loud applause.)

Mr. D. W. Allison, M. P., though suffering from temporary illness, consented at the earnest request of many to address the meeting. He dwelt with feeling upon the scene which this point had witnessed a hundred years ago yesterday, when the pilgrim band of loyalists landed at the outskirts of an unbroken wilderness, which Ontario was, and contrasted that with the scene of life and luxury which the place presented to-day. He dwelt also upon the strong contrast between the condition of the Loyalists and of their descendants of to-day. The first were victims of persecution, leaving all for the sake of their loyalty to their country and to duty, braving hardships and privations that they might have the flag they loved float over them. Their descendants possessed the land which they had redeemed from the encumbering forests, and in that land peace and plenty regined, so that even the poorest enjoy advantages which the best of their forefathers could not hope to secure. The colonists of these days, instead of coming in the face

Before the struggle ended, some kings lost their crowns and others lost their heads, but the people went steadily on till the great end was gained—permanent constitutional liberty. So far as the introduction of the true principles of liberty into the British constitution was concerned the struggle may be said to have ended when William, Prince of Orange, and his queen signed the famous Bill of Rights. Just at this period in British history a vast continent was opened in the western hemisphere, opened by divine providence for civilization and settlement. Here all those great principles for which the purest and noblest of the English race had contended and suffered were to appear as the golden grain appears after a long and toilsome seed sowing. This continent is to-day reaping the benefit of their labours. If a portion of the early settlers of the continent proved recreant and dishonored the flag which has given all they have that is really good we are glad that there were those who were true and loyal to the British crown. We are proud of our ancestry and thankful to God that they were loyal to those principles which are to-day so highly prized and esteemed. The speaker here quoted the following from Dr. Ryerson's work on the U. E. Loyalists of North America: "Canada has a parentage, the remembrance of which its inhabitants may well cherish with respect, affection and pride, for Canada owes much to these loyalists, not only for union with the British Empire, but for the origin of constitutionol representative government." We are proud also of the prosperity which has characterized the LAND OF THEIR ADOPTION.

One hundred years ago there were but 10,000 people in Upper Canada, where there are to-day very nearly or quite 2,000,000. We are equally gratified if we consider the growth of Canada enterprise as marked by the growth of its commerce, the facilities for educating our youth, the extension of all those enlightening and civilizing influences which distinguish the older nations of the world. "Annexation to the United States is so impossible as not to be considered at all. Independence, involving separation from the old land, is equally impossible. Like that angel which John saw standing in the sun I think I see standing on this earth a mighty giant, made mighty by the God of nations, his head resting upon those glorious and wonderful British isles; his feet on the golden sands of Australia, his left arm upon India, now being redeemed from the wheels of a Juggernaut and the superstitions of past ages, his right arm, Canada, now being rescued from the whoop of the untutored savage and the growl of the wild beast. I think I see Canada populated with 100,000,000 of true British subjects, and the British Empire, correspondingly great, exercising her mighty influence in the extension of civilizing and Christian principles throughout the whole earth. Anything which looks in the direction of the dismemberment of the vast empire will not only be impossible but unwise."

LACROSSE AND BASE BALL MATCHES.

A lively dispute took place immediately after the speeches commenced between the captains of the lacrosse and base ball clubs as to who should have first use of the grounds and an appeal was made to the committee of management who did not seem to know how to get over the difficulty. The wrangling caused considerable interruption. Finally the lacrosse men got possession and the Napanee and Belleville clubs took the field, but two of the Napanee men refusing to play because they thought the base ball clubs badly used, the teams only numbered 10 each. The match resulted in a victory for Belleville by three straight games.

The base ball match between the Napanee celebration grounds were moving about, seeking the best means of enjoying themselves and to find protection from the blazing sun. Both were difficult to obtain, as the games had all fallen through, owing to rough grounds and lack of competition, while the trees around the graves afforded but indifferent shade. A great deal of dissatisfaction was expressed at the failure of these arrangements.

The speechmaking was, however, resumed, and a large crowd assembled around the grand stand.

President Bogart opened the proceedings by congratulating those present on the large attendance, and on the success which had so far marked the occasion. He introduced Chief Sampson Green, of the Mohawk Indians, of Tyendinaga, Bay of Quinte reserve, who was announced to speak on the federation of the Six Nations. The Chief came forward, dressed in a handsome native costume of black velvet, profusely ornamented with bead work, his head being decked with eagle plumes. He was accompanied by several of his braves, also in native dress. He gave a brief history of the formation of the Six Nations, and explained their present system of government. Any proposition to be brought forward must come from the Mohawks, and was discussed by each tribe in turn, till at last it was discussed by the firekeepers, the Onondagas. There was now no council-fire as in old times, but the man who represented the Onondagas made an opening speech in the council and this was called building the fire. The Mohawks had the right of veto in every proposition. Four of the Indian tribes had been Christianized but all were religious. As Christians offered thanks to God for the harvest, so the Pagans would offer thanks to the Great Spirit for pure water, for the ripening grain, for the fruit of the ground. Still it was the duty of the Christians to spread religion among the pagans of their own country. He glorified the memory of his forefathers for the stand they had taken when the crucial test came—whether they would stand by their allegiance to the Queen, or go with the majority. In 1812, too, the Mohawks, chief and men, fought side by side with the British troups, and in 1837 his own father went to the front to fight against the invaders. In 1866 he himself and others offered themselves as a band to meet the Fenians, but were not required; but they were not satisfied with that, and he and seventeen others joined the 47th Battalion, ready to be called upon. (Cheers.) They were not called but were ready, and were ready still should occasion arise. When the Mohawks left their home in Mohawk Valley and left all their fields and cattle, they were given a grant from George III. in any place they chose to select. John Deseronto, who was the leader of fifteen families, chose the Bay of Quinte Reserve, and Brant went further west to Grand River. The fifteen families here had swollen to a thousand souls, and they had their farms, their schools and their church, as well as a sum of money in the hands of the Indian Department at Ottawa, with the interest of which the affairs of the reserve is carried on. He thanked the committee for having honored the Indians with an invitation to be present, and closed by calling for three cheers for the Queen, which were royally given.

Mr. Parker Allen dwelt upon hardships suffered by the U. E. Loyalists as contrasted with the comfort enjoyed by the people he represented. It was necessary that the committee should have money to proceed with the monument, and he asked that liberal subscriptions be given.

Capt. GRACE, of Lindsay, was called upon. He spoke as one of the youngest representatives of the U. E. Loyalists, being of the forefathers could not hope to secure. The colonists of these days, instead of coming in the face of all hardships, had colonial roads and railways provided in advance of them in the wilderness. The first apples grown here were from seed brought over by the first party when they came. When the first crop was ripe the man who grew them called all the people of the settlement—men, women and children—together, and the apples were shared equally. Had that been in this day the man who had the apples would have been governed by the law of supply and demand and would have sold the apples to his neighbors at the highest price. (Cheers and laughter.) It had been stated that there was a settlement at Kingston before here, but those people did not leave the States till after Independence was declared, and the date given for the Kingston settlement was too early for that. He contended this was the first settlement and that the first line of this township of Adolphustown was the first line ever run by a surveyor in Ontario. He closed by expressing pleasure at the large turn out to do honor to the memory of Loyalists.

Mr. J. S. McQUAIG, Ex-M.P., of Prince Edward, then made a few remarks, after which Mr. J. J. Watson, Corresponding Secretary of the Celebration Committee, read letters of regret from the Hon. G. A. Kirkpatrick, Mr. A. F. Wood, M. P.P., and others, who had expected to be present, but were unable to do so. He explained also Sir John Macdonald's absence by stating that he had a letter from the Premier stating that owing to ill-health and press of work at home he would be unable to attend. This concluded the afternoon proceedings.

THE EVENING CELEBRATION.

The evening was to have been occupied with a torchlight procession in which "physiogs" were expected to cause great amusement, but owing apparently to want of executive staff the procession soon degenerated into a mob with torches, which they moved hither and thither all over the village. There were some fireworks; also some addresses by local speakers on the grounds. It was not until near midnight that the last of the excursionists were taken to their homes.

WEDNESDAY.

The third day's celebration was attended by about a thousand people. The only event of interest was a fine address by Dr. Sangster of Port Perry.

NOTES.

—Miss Vanalstine of Picton, grand daughter of Major Vanalstine, was on the grounds during the centennial as a guest of J. J. Watson, Esq. She is the only living relative who bears the name of the Major who led the Loyalists to those shores. Among others on the ground were Mr. E. W. Ruttan, grandson of the man who walked to Montreal for the first bushel of wheat sown in the settlement, paid a guinea for it and walked back with it; and E. L. Bogart, now eighty years of age, the oldest living descendant of the Loyalists, who for this reason was chosen President of the Celebration Committee.

—Several of the men of the 15th Battalion on the guard of honour were overcome by heat and had to be placed under the care of surgeons. The men were well cared for and will soon recover.

—A number of relics of the early settlement were shown in the Secretary's booth. They were laid out on the table of the first court house of the province in which Judge Hagerman and other able jurists prepared their briefs. There is a rude wooden table painted red. Among the relics was a pewter platter 200 years old, owned by Mrs. J. B. Allison, which in its time did service for the whole colony in making pot-pie. A number of old bibles were shown and a collection of old coins by Mr. G. W. Goodwin of Napanee, who had the misfortune to have too rare ones stolen.

The Negro in Virginia.

Emancipation tried them sorely. Exaggerated ideas of freedom drove some from homes that under other circumstances they would have been loth to leave; while others refused to leave their old master even when he told them there were no dollars in the till to recompense their services. This same emancipation found them without surnames—a difficulty which was got over by their adopting with some reluctance the names of the families to whom they had belonged. All this righted itself after a time, for it was natural that the freeman of Virginia should be less averse to labor than his brother of the extreme South or the West Indies, where a warmer climate made it easier to maintain life with a minimum of work, and where the recollections of serfdom were, upon the whole, far less pleasant. Since the war the Virginia negro, considering his training, and traditions, has behaved himself well. A temperate climate has, we have already said, compelled him to work, and if he has done that work in a fashion peculiar to his race, he has, upon the whole, given fair satisfaction. A few have bought small farms, though these have, as a general thing, been low-priced, and consequently indifferent, land. A frequent inability to pay cash for their purchases and a system of deferred payments has hampered many of such small proprietors with a debt, and it is a question whether they are in as good a position as many of their landless brethren. Others work as laborers at wages varying from $8 to $12 a month and rations of bacon and corn-meal. The greater proportion, however, live as tenants upon estates and inhabit, for the most part, fairly comfortable log or frame houses, with garden attached, and the right to cut firewood, with pasture for cow and pigs. —Macmillan's Magazine.

The Vastness of London.

London has a population placing it on a level with states of the third order, and almost of the second. According to the return of the registrar-general in 1881, London proper had then a population of 3,816,483 souls; and, if the outer circle be taken into account, "Greater London" as he calls it, had a population of 4,766,661. Compare these figures with those afforded by a few European states and British self-governing colonies, and by Scotland and Ireland. In round numbers, the population of Sweden is 4,160,000; of Switzerland, 2,846,000; of Holland, 4,178,000; of Belgium, 5,520,000; of Portugal 4,160,000; of Denmark, 1,469,000. Ireland has 5,412,000 souls; Scotland, 3,735,000; the entire Dominion of Canada, 4,350,000; the Cape (of all races), 1,250,000; Victoria, 862,000; New South Wales 751,000. If variety of situation and social character be necessary to a nation, London, in its eastern and western portions, contains bodies of citizens as different from one another as the Swiss of the French cantons; as the Belgian Flemings and the Belgian Walloons; as the Lowlanders and Highlanders of Scotland. In wealth and commerce the British metropolitan area stands far at the head of all existing states and communities, with the exception of the United States and France, London is the bank of the world, its treasure house and its clearing house. This statement has been foolishly criticis-all existing states and communities, with the exception of the United States and France, London is the bank of the world, its treasure house and its clearing house. This statement has been foolishly criticised, but it is literally true. London is also the emporium of civilization. Of the fabulous mass of commodities stored in its warehouses, docks, and shipping, a great portion belongs to mankind at large; and has been consigned to what has hitherto been considered the securest spot in the world, and the spot least likely to be invaded by human follies. London has further become of late years a manufacturing city, very nearly of the first order. If we must compare London to any one of the smaller states of Europe, it should be Belgium; but the financial, industrial, and mercantile importance of Belgium is not to be named in the same breath with that of the British metropolis.

A Nuisance which should be Abated

According to the Cincinnati Times, a citizen of that place recently fell dead in a street car, being poisoned by the dense fumes of tobacco smoke with which the car was filled. "He was an occasional sufferer from heart disease, and the trouble was so aggravated by the suffocating smoke of the car that he died after breathing it a few minutes. The car in which he rode had only one compartment for men, women and children, and the smokers were allowed full sway in it. Two other passengers were overcome by the tobacco fumes."

Every non-smoking traveller constantly encounters this same nuisance in railway cars, omnibuses, street cars, hotels, and wherever he goes. The universal presence of the sickening vapor of this vile weed is one of the charact ristics of civilization. If human beings possess one inalienable right more sacred than any other it is the right to breathe the atmosphere of heaven pure, free, and unadulterated. No man has any better right to puff tobacco smoke into the air I am about to breathe than to sit down beside me at a hotel table and sprinkle upon the food I am about to eat, vile and loathsome substances, obnexious to the senses and deleterious to health. If smokers will persist in defiling themselves, and spoiling the pure air, adulterating its life-giving oxygen with a deadly vapor, offensive to the natural instincts of man and beast, let them be compelled to indulge their precious poison by themselves, apart from the rest of human kind. Let them together enjoy the pleasures of the pipe, cigar, and cigarette. Perchance this plan might result in the annihilation of the whole race of smokers, and rid the world of a vice which originated among savages, and is worthy only of an uncivilized and barbarous race.—Good Health.

Little son of a bill broker to his papa: "Papa, what is business honor?" "Business honor? Well, Alphonse, my boy, suppose one of our customers sends a thousand francs too much." "Yes, papa." "Well, I give Mr. Ratipeau, my partner, five hundred of it."

Ah, what stores and stores of solid comfort are embodied in the tender reflection that last year's straw hat is as good as ever, and will do first rate for another season,—after a new band is put on, that one's friends may not recognize it.

Pasteur's School-Days.

Louis Pasteur passed his childhood in a small tannery which his father had bought in the city of Arbois, in the department of the Jura, to which he removed from the ancient city of Dole, in the same department, where he was born. When Louis became of suitable age, he was sent to the communal school, and was so proud of the fact that, though he was the smallest of the pupils, he went on the first day with his arms full of dictionaries away beyond his years. He does not appear, as yet, to have been a particularly diligent student. He was as likely to be found drawing a portrait or a sketch—and the walls of several Arboisan houses bear testimonies of his skill in this art—as studying his lesson, and to go ahunting or afishing as to take the direct way to the school. Yet the principal of the college was ready to predict that it was no small school like this one, but some great royal institution, that was destined to enjoy his services as a professor. As there was no professor of philosophy in the college at Arbois, young Pasteur went to Besancon to continue his studies. Here in the chemistry class, he so vexed Prof. Darlay with his frequent and searching questions, that the old gentleman was disconcerted, and declared it was his business to question the pupil, not Pasteur's to question him. Pasteur then had recourse to a pharmacist in the town who had gained some distinction in science and took private lessons in chemistry from him. He fared better at the Ecole Normale, where he had Balard for a teacher, and also enjoyed the instructions of Dumas, with whom he formed a lifelong friendship at the Sorbonne.

Fresh Paint.

The current belief among householders, that the smell of fresh lead paint is noxious, is founded on pretty general experience but is opposed by the opinion equally current among chemists, that lead compounds are not volatile. A fact recently brought to the notice of our excellent contemporary, the Lancet, supports the domestic theory. The basis of the useful and popular luminous paint is known to be sulphide of calcium. Now, this compound, when unprotected by varnish, glass, or some other impervious substance, is slowly acted on by the acids of the air, and sulphuretted hydrogen is evolved, which blackens lead paint. But the curious thing is that unprotected luminous paint is found to be perceptibly blackened by the fumes from fresh lead paint. There seems to be only one possible explanation of this; namely, that a surface freshly-covered with lead paint does actually emit some volatile compound of lead. We believe that many physicians could confirm this view from their own observations in regard to newly painted houses.—Hall's Journal.

AYER'S Hair Vigor

restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray hair to a natural, rich brown color, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use light or red hair may be darkened, thin hair thickened, and baldness often, though not always, cured.

It checks falling of the hair, and stimulates a weak and sickly growth to vigor. It prevents and cures scurf and dandruff, and heals nearly every disease peculiar to the scalp. As a Ladies' Hair Dressing, the VIGOR is unequalled; it contains neither oil nor dye, renders the hair soft, glossy, and silken in appearance, and imparts a delicate, agreeable, and lasting perfume.

MR. C. P. BRICHER writes from Kirby, O., July 3, 1882: "Last fall my hair commenced falling out, and in a short time I became nearly bald. I used part of a bottle of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, which stopped the falling of the hair, and started a new growth. I have now a full head of hair growing vigorously, and am convinced that but for the use of your preparation I should have been entirely bald."

J. W. BOWEN, proprietor of the McArthur (Ohio) Enquirer, says: "AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair, and makes it glossy and soft. The VIGOR is also a sure cure for dandruff. Not within my knowledge has the preparation ever failed to give entire satisfaction."

MR. ANGUS FAIRBAIRN, leader of the celebrated "Fairbairn Family" of Scottish Vocalists, writes from Boston, Mass., Feb. 6, 1880: "Ever since my hair began to give silvery evidence of the change which fleeting time procureth, I have used AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, and so have been able to maintain an appearance of youthfulness—a matter of considerable consequence to ministers, orators, actors, and in fact every one who lives in the eyes of the public."

MRS. O. A. PRESCOTT, writing from 8 Elm St., Charlestown, Mass., April 14, 1882, says: "Two years ago about two-thirds of my hair came off. It thinned very rapidly, and I was fast growing bald. On using AYER'S HAIR VIGOR the falling stopped and a new growth commenced, and in about a month my head was completely covered with short hair. It has continued to grow, and is now as good as before it fell. I regularly used but one bottle of the VIGOR, but now use it occasionally as a dressing."

We have hundreds of similar testimonials to the efficacy of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. It needs but a trial to convince the most skeptical of its value.

SEASON OF 1884

dian during a single season has been known to kill as many as six hundred buffalo. Wolves were also very numerous, and when out on a hunting expedition they had to place a strong guard all around their camp to keep the voracious animals away, and sometimes the entire camp had to be aroused to fight them off. They would eat up a horse, harness, bridle, and saddle, or anything else left outside within their reach, and the Indians killed them by thousands. Foxes were plenty and numerous and other large game roamed over the rich rolling pairie. The furs of all the animals were packed and hauled to Fargo and one or two other points where there was a market for them, and they made the Indians' wealth. Of late years, however, the large game to a great extent disappeared, though there are still many foxes and wolves in the mountain region.

ROBBING STAGES OUT WEST.

Two stage-robbers in jail here for operations in the Yosemite valley have been visited by many people and questioned as to their career on the roads, says a letter from Madeira, Cal. Both men are fully identified as the individuals who stopped a coach last fall and relieved the passengers of their valuables, Both claim that this is the only robbery of the kind they ever participated in, but under the influence of free cigars they confessed that they had certain friends and acquaintances who had had some very queer experiences as road-agents, some of them on the Yosemite trail.

"For a man who wants a real good business and an easy sort of life," said Tolman Terhune, one of the prisoners, "I would advise him to go to work on the Yosemite route. Living is comparatively cheap and good in that vicinity, and stages are just plenty enough. You don't want to tackle every stage that comes along, for that would spoil the whole thing. People would not ride, and after a while there would be no stage at all. You must let the recollection of one 'hold up' kinder fade out of mind before you spring another on them. When a 'hold up' hasn't occurred in two or three months drivers get kinder careless and passengers take greater risks.

"My observations have convinced me that there isn't anything in this world that the majority of people fear more than a road-agent. It's all moonshine, but it is a fact, nevertheless, and the boys in the business have to be very careful or they will stampede all the game.

"There is more or less science in doing up a stage, I can tell you. Your mind must be on things present and things prospective. You must work it so you can eat your cake, or a good part of it, and have it, too.

"Now, I had a friend that once did business on the Calaveras road. He was a hog. He wanted everything that came his way, and he took it. The result was that before many weeks elapsed the stages were all taken off but one or two, and the drivers of them used to go over the route alone very often. One time my friend sprang out in front of the stage and ordered the driver to throw up his hands, which he did. Then my friend went around to the side of the coach to interview the passengers, and found that THERE WASN T A SOUL ON THE RIG.

It made him mad, of course,. So he went back to the horses, and, noticing that the driver was smiling, he remarked: 'I've a notion to slice you up for playing this trick upon me.'

"'Why didn't you tell me that you hadn't anybody aboard?'

"'Because you didn't ask me.'

"'Well, what have you got?' said my friend to the driver; come, now, 'shell out.'

"The driver didn't have anything but a little whiskey, and he gave the agent some and took some himself. Then they got to talking, and after awhile my friend got up on the box and rode five or ten miles with the driver, just to keep him company, and to hear what he had to say. The driver was one of those observing fellows, and he gave the agent some good advice. Says he:

believe that if, when he was going through a stage load, somebody had fired off a gun he would have fainted away, not so much from fright as from surprise.

"My cousin was considered a very good man in his day. He had an air of authority about him, and a voice that could be heard a mile in the mountain air. When he said 'hands up!' hands went up, and no driver ever dared move a peg when he heard him remonstrating. Yet he was downed once, and by a woman, too. He stopped a stage-load of people from New England, and there was a schoolma'am in the crowd who wore spectacles and was a good deal more angular than any of the women they raise out here. When he ordered 'hands up' he didn't notice that she refused to obey, because she was down at the foot of the line, and he didn't pay much attention to her anyway. As he proceeded along the line, working the different victims as he went along, he noticed that her arms were behind her, and that she was a slender old girl. So he said nothing until he came to her. Then, throwing all his power into his lungs, he yelled 'Hands up!' Well,

SHE PUT HER HANDS UP.

She had one of those Cape Cod umbrellas, with whalebone ribs as big as your finger, and when she raised her hands she clutched that umbrella with the grip of death, and down it came on my cousin's head. He told me he saw double for a week after that, and for the time being he was nearly knocked out.

"It was a mighty ticklish moment. As I have said, you work a coach load easily by terrifying them and getting away before they recover their self-possession. Now, here was a woman who had not lost hers at all, and if the men at the other end of the line had had an opportunity to think for a moment they would have been on top of me—I should say on top of my cousin—before he could get out of the way. But he was a clever chap. He just drew a big gun and sailed up to the other end of the line looking very ferocious, and muttered something to the men about never robbing a woman. They took on a fresh fright, and did not understand fully what had happened. He then gave the order to mount, and covered the crowd as they got into the coach. The schoolma'am was the last one in, and she was the only one who was not robbed. Now, I'll bet those fellows felt cheap when they heard her story and found that she had not lost anything.

"That's the whole secret of this staging business. No stage-robber who is fit to follow the road ever kills anybody. He may shoot at times, but not to kill. Whenever you hear of a stage being fired into and lots of people hurt, you may make up your mind that some gang of hard men are at work. No professional does anything of the kind.

"I'm sorry I've got into this difficulty just now. The season opens in about two weeks."

A Dead Shot.

A lot of summer tourists were on the beach at Los Angeles the other day watching some fancy rifle shooting by a party of professional otter hunters who had come over from the Channel Islands for a Sunday lark. These really wonderful

A LOST YOUNG WOMAN.

The Wonderful Travels of a Young Woman Who Got Lost.

Among the passengers on the steamship City of Augusta, on her way to New York, was a young lady whose singular adventure in travelling from Jacksonville to Savannah recently won for herself the title of the lost woman. On Wednesday night last Miss Martha Howes, accompanied by her sister, left Jacksonville, occupying a section in the Savannah Sleeper. They were destined for Boston, and expected to sail by the steamer Gate City on Thursday afternoon.

Some time after leaving Jacksonville Miss Howes asked a porter to escort her to the Cincinnati sleeper, in which were several friends destined to Cincinnati by tha way of Savannah, as they supposed. Leaving her hand-baggage, bonnet, purse, and tickets with her sister, she stepped into the car where her friends, were and sat down. After a pleasant chat she called the porter, this time of the car in which she was riding, and asked him to lead her back to the Savannah sleeper. "The Savannah sleeper ma'am? Why there's no Savannah car on this train!" A look of surprise came over the young lady as she realized her situation, and her friends were equally surprised, as they supposed they were bound for Savannah, also. The porter explained that the Savannah sleeper had been left at Waycross to be taken by the night train, and that they were being whirled on toward Albany. What to do the young lady did not know. The train was some distance beyond Waycross, and too far to ride back by carriage in the night. She was and, knowing that her sister was unaware of her whereabouts, and would be concerned for her safety, she explained the circumstances to the conductor, and at the first stop a telegram was sent back to Waycross saying that she would return by the first train. The telegram was not received by her sister, who came on to Savannah and related the circumstances so far as she knew to Messrs. Barnard & Richardson, agents of the Boston line of steamers. Mr. Barnared at once became interested, and set out to find the young lady. A telegraph was sent in her name to Waycross, and to insure its delivery another was sent to the operator stating the circumstances, and asking that the message be placed in Miss Howes' hand as quick as possible. An hour later a reply was received that there was no such person in town. This aroused Mr. Barnard's interest still further, and he determined to find the young lady without fail. Being wholly unaware of her movements after she left her sister below Waycross, he surmised that she had been carried past on the Cincinnati sleeper, and would reach Savannah by the way of Macon and the Central road. The ship by which she expected to sail was to leave at 4 o'clock, and in the hope of her arrival by the 3:25 from Macon, Mr. Barnard made preparations to meet her upon her arrival at the Central depot with a carriage, so that she might reach the ship without delay. He told the story to Maj. Whitehead, of the Central, who, with a significant shake of the head, looked at Mr. Barnard to see if he was in earnest.

"She's skipped! There's a young man

The driver was one of those observing fellows, and he gave the agent some good advice. Says he:

"'You have ruined the business on this road, ruined yourself, and ruined the company. Nobody travels here any more. You have scared them all off. Now you might as well git yourself, too. There is no money here, and won't be till you restore confidence. You can't work a stage line without confidence any more than you can a banking institution. You must clear out of here and stay out, and when the arteries of trade open up once more then you can come back if you want to, but you mustn't be too enthusiastic. You must hold up a stage and then take a rest. Go over to San Francisco for a few weeks and enjoy yourself. Mingle in society, and seek diversion. Then when you feel like it come out and take another crack.

"Well, when I left the stage-driver—I mean when my friend left him—he knew a good deal more than he did before, and I have heard that he profited by it to some extent. At any rate he made fewer hauls, but they were bigger, and he had a good deal less wear and tear.

"Now, there is no danger in stopping a coach. Did you ever hear of a stage-robber being killed? I never did, and I have been on the coast for thirty years. Nobody kills a road-agent. In the first place the passengers are too scared, and in the next they are so almighty anxious to have the thing over with that they do not think of anything but complying with the demands made upon them. It is as safe a business as preaching, and safer than preaching in some towns that I know of. I have heard an acquaintance of mine, who operated in the northern part of Oregon, say time and again that some of the gentlemen whom he invited to shell out made him feel ashamed of himself by giving up things that he would never have thought of asking for. One man, I remember, he told me about in particular. He was standing in the row with and when my friend came up to him and pulled out of his vest pocket a little wad of money, not over $6, the fellow, evidently fearing that some dire punishment would be inflicted upon him in case he did not pan out as well as the others, told the robber that he had more money in his trunk, which was strapped on behind. Well, of course my friend had to get that money, and that took time, but he found it right where the fellow told him it was. He would a good deal rather have gone on without overhauling the trunk, but since the man had told him that there was money in it, he would never have rested easy after that if he had not got it.

"I know dozens of just such experiences. I had a cousin operating on the Yosemite road over near where I was rounded up, who took more pleasure in the business than any man I ever heard of. He enjoyed the fun of the thing, and he often used to say to me that as between robbing a stage and going to a minstrel show, he would take the former every time. Now, that, you see, was because there was absolutely no danger in it. He was an experienced man, and knew that the thing was safe. I honestly of professional otter hunters who had come over from the Channel Islands for a Sunday lark. These really wonderful marksmen, most of them native Californians, were killing gulls on the water, breaking bottles and hitting dollars thrown in the air, with great eclat, when a dudish-looking young man from Frisco yawned in a bored manner, and remarked in a very audible voice to a companion that he didn't see anything wonderful in that sort of shooting.

This produced a series of sarcastically polite retorts on the part of the original lords of the soil.

"Perhaps the gentleman could show them something better?"

"Well, I don't know," replied the young man, languidly taking one of the hunters' Winchesters. "I might if somebody would hold a cork or something on his head for me."

The riflemen showed their white teeth with amusement.

"Doubtless," said one of them, winking at his companions, "doubtless the gentleman's friend would oblige him."

"Why, to be sure," drawled the dude, looking around. But his fellow dude had sauntered off, and was standing some three hundred yards further along the beach, meditatively smoking a very long nine.

"Ah! there's Cholly," said the languid party, cocking the gun. "Let me see. You observe that cigar he has in his mouth. Very well, I'll put a hole through that," and taking a careless aim he fired. At the report the smoker gave a sudden start, took out and examined his Havana, and then shook his fist angrily.

The entire crowd ran towards him. Sure enough, there was a hole right through the centre of the cigar, almost cutting it in half.

"That's the fourth cigar you've spoiled for me," said the smoking dude, in a vexed tone. "I wish you'd stop that sort of thing!"

As for the other hunters, they looked at each other in mortified silence for a few minutes, then climbed into their boat and set sail.

"That's the most wonderful shot I ever saw," said an old gentleman to the shooter the next morning. "Such a terrible risk, too."

"Nothing wonderful about it," said the California Tell, confidentially. "All you have to do is to have your confederate cut a hole in the cigar with a penknife before hand. It's a boss scheme!"

Rajevsdy, the archpriest of the Russian embassy in Vienna, died suddenly a few days ago at the age of 73. He played a very large part in the Pan-Slavist movement, and owing to his connection with the highest circles in Russia he possessed more influence than many ambassadors; and, in fact, during many years contributed more than any other man to the estrangement of the two empires. He was the agent in Austria for Pan-Slavist committees in Moscow and elsewhere, and had large means at his disposal.

"What kind of sauce will you have with your steak?" asked a waiter of a diner in a restaurant where the condiments were served with the orders. "If the steak is as tough as yesterday's, send me in a couple of circular saws."

the head, looked at Mr. Barnard to see if he was in earnest.

"She's skipped! There's a young man in the case," replied the Major

Mr. Barnard assured him that this could not be, and a telegram was sent to the conductor of the Macon train at Millen to find out if Miss Howes was on board. The reply came back. "Not on train."

Baffled in this move, Agent Knapp, at Macon, was telegraphed a full description of the lady, and asked to keep a lookout for her. Mr. Knapp searched the city, and replied that there was no person answering to Miss Howes' description to be found.

The ship was by this time ready to sail and the young lady's sister was that might lead to her recovery. Upon the receipt of Mr. Knapp's reply that he had been unable to gain any information of her whereabouts in Macon or along the road, the case began to look mysterious. Mr. Barnard assured her sister that every effort would be made to reach Miss Howes, and that she would be sent by the next steamer. With this assurance the sister left for Boston. Mr. Barnard at once continued his efforts to find the young lady, and by repeated telegrams succeeded in over hauling the Cincinnati sleeper at Chattanooga, where it was learned from the conductor that Miss Howes had been sent back to Waycross that morning. In the meantime the interest of those engaged in the search for the young lady had heightened, and various theories were advanced. It was thought by some she had fallen or jumped from the train and was killed, and by others that the matter had been prearranged, and that she had voluntarily left her sister and eloped. The telegram from the conductor at Chattanooga was not wholly satisfactory to those who believed that such was the case, and it was not until more definite information had been obtained that they were convinced of the young lady's discovery.

Col. Haines, of the Savannah, Florida and Western railway, who had been acquainted with the case, telegraphed the operator at Waycross and learned that Miss Howes had been there, but had gone on to Brunswick, where she had friends. Later a telegram was received from Brunswick announcing her arrival there, and that she would reach Savannah on Friday morning. The Friday morning brought her to the city in company with a gallant young German, who, upon learning of her adventure, assumed the role of protector until he had placed her in Mr. Barnard's care. She had been provided with money by her friends, and further than being wearied by a long day's travel was as unconcerned about her safety as though she had been in her home. The anxiety of her friends had been greater than her own. While tracking her the short distance she had travelled, the telegraph had clicked her name over thousands of miles of wire, and at the offices where inquiry had been made, and on board the trains where the porters inquired, "Miss Howes on board?" she became known as "the lost woman." There are probably few incidents in travel which better illustrate the possibilities of an error, and which show more clearly the wonderful progress of invention than the one just told. The long night ride of Miss Howes from Waycross to Albany and return, her trip to Jesup and Brunswick and on to Savannah was made without the slightest embarrassment, and she was given the most courteous attention by the train officials by whom she was passed to her destination. Upon arriving here she was driven to the Pulaski house, and in the afternoon was placed on board the City of Augusta en route to her home in the old Bay state. —Savannah (Ga.) News.

DISTILLING ATTAR OF ROSES.

The Rose Farms in India where the Planters Get $100 an Ounce for their Product.

"Genuine attar of roses," remarked a chemist, "which is made in India and Australia, costs $100 an ounce at the places of distillation. It takes 50,000 rose blooms to yield an ounce of attar. They are the common roses, and grow in great profusion in California, where the distillation of attar could be made a very profitable industry. I have seen hedge rows near Samana, in that State, so dense with these roses that the odor from them on a warm, sultry day caused a feeling of peculiar faintness and oppression in the passer by. This is the effect of the attar that is distilled by the heat and moist air, and is held suspended, as it were, in the atmosphere.

"There is money in that cause of faintness and indolence, but in this country not only the sweetness, but the great value of the flowers, is wasted on the desert air. In northern India the roses are regularly cultivated. They are planted in rows in fields, and require no particular care. When they begin to bloom they are picked before mid-day. The work is done by women and children, who seem to regard it as more as a pleasure than a pursuit of labor. The rose leaves are distilled in twice their weight of water, which is drawn off into open vessels. These are allowed to stand over night, being covered up with cloths to keep out dirt and insects. In the morning the water is coated with a thin oily film. This is the rare attar of rose. It is skimmed off with a fine feather and dropped into vials. The process continued daily until the bushes cease to bloom. So it may well be imagined that any essence or oil that requires the distilling of 50,000 roses to fill an ounce vial has a right to have a good price set upon it."

A Curious Custom.

I once had what I then considered a singular experience with a wealthy Mexican to whom I had sold a ranch. He invited me to visit him at his home, and I accepted. At the end of the railway journey I found a travelling carriage, drawn by six horses, and accompanied by a number of mounted servitors, awaiting me. Inside were receptacles containing choice wines, ice—a scarce commodity—table ware, and a variety of viands. Arrived at my host's house, he greeted me most cordially, assuring me again and again of his friendship, and conducted me to a school room to see his daughters. There were five, all pretty, the eldest lovable. They ranged in age from eight to seventeen years. They stood in line, in school

NEW GUINEA.

The Island Soon to be Explored by an American.

J. W. Buel, who explored Russia and Siberia, and who has written a work on "Russian Nihilism," recently visited the state department in company with Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, to ask the protection of this government in his proposed exploration of New Guinea. He stated that he would like to be commissioned without pay, the idea being to use the commission as a credential. It was finally arranged that Mr. Buel should go as the accredited representative of the Smithsonian institute. This was perfectly satisfactory, and Mr. Buel left for his home in St. Louis.

"The island of New Guinea," said Mr. Buel to a Post reporter just before he left, "is the largest island in the world. It is the only spot on the earth to-day which is really an unknown region. Its area is 25,000 square miles larger than Texas. Although situated under the equator its mountains, as seen from the straits of Torrey, are snow-capped, showing that they must be immensely high. It is known to have two great rivers. In 1876 Prof. Stone of the Royal Geographical society, ascended the Fly river for 150 miles, and is the only person who has written anything accurate about the island. The natives believe in nothing, and, contrary to the general rule, worship nothing. They are not cannibals, nor do I believe they are hostile in their nature."

"When do you start?"

"The expedition will leave next spring, its expenses being borne by a New York millionaire, whose name will not be known until the expedition departs. A schooner will be bought, chartered, and fully equipped. There will be about fifty men in the party, including scientists. I expect to be gone about eighteeen months. I have already travelled through Russia and Siberia, and I have selected New Guinea, first, because so little is known of it, and, secondly, because it will not be many years before it will be a centre of interest. It was first claimed by the Dutch, but their garrison died of malarial fevers, and now England and France have their eyes upon it. But I think it will be annexed to Australia, and make a part of the South Sea republic, which will be formed when the Australian colonies revolt and cut loose, as the United States did, from the mother country.—Washington Post.

Grafted Teeth.

Transplanting sound teeth from the jaws of healthy persons who could spare them to those who needed them has been practised by advanced dentists for some time. The mode was as follows: The individual with the superfluous sound tooth and he with the decayed molar were mated together, and the freshly drawn good tooth immediately placed in the cavity made by extracting the other. But it often happens to be necessary to remove a sound tooth from a patient at a time when no person of whom the dentist had any knowledge needed just such a one. It would therefore be lost, for only "living" teeth could be made to grow in a strange mouth, and they died very Small Economies.

The housewife who desires to practice small economies finds that she has two opposing elements to deal with—her husband and the cook. Of the two, the cook is the frankest. She is under no delusion about her opinions, her principles, or her practice. She does not hesitate for a moment in saying that one method of administration is laudable and becoming to a lady, and the other is mean and not to be encouraged by any co-operation. The two are alike in their opinion of desirable results. Both the cook and the husband like the liberal, well-spread table, but they disagree about the means of reaching these results. The husband believes in the traditional soup made out of almost nothing; the cook likes a good standing-rib, well boiled down, and properly seasoned. The husband agrees with the cook in believing the soup ought to be good, but they misapprehend each other about the means of making it so. To him the merit of the soup is two-fold. It ought to be excellent and cheap. To her the cheapness is the disadvantage, and she gallantly brings the larder to the rescue. He looks to the wife to have the soup answer his just demands. The cook looks to her for her rescources. The two are alike in another respect—they believe in the feast and have no regard for the consequent famine. Nothing so irritates a cook as to have to keep things on hand. What is left from breakfast she wants to use for lunch, and if anything remains from dinner that cannot be used for breakfast, she wants to put it in the slop pail or give it away at the back gate. She hates to have preserves and pickles and canned goods put away as if they were never to be used. She would have plum preserves three times a day if she had her way, and her rule is to empty the jar without regard to the fact that it holds two quarts, and there are but two to eat them. The husband has the same idea. "Why don't you have the strawberries and the watermelon pickle?" he says; and then he adds that he doesn't see the use in putting up things to spoil. They also agree in then expecting the house mistress to be ready for any emergencies, and always have something in the house. Her bricks must be made without straw.

As a Summer Resort.

A few years ago the St. Lawrence and Saguenay rivers were supposed to comprise the only Canadian excursion routes which repaid the tourists the trouble and expense of traversing them. Since then however, Muskoka has claimed a share of the summer holiday seekers; and still more recently Algoma has found favour with those who can afford a few week' vacation during the heated term. Although late in having its claims recognized certain it is that this District will for years to come be the great centre of attraction for tourists.

Those who have but a week or two to spare can spend it most profitably in Eastern Algoma. Nothing could be more invigorating than a trip from Collingwood to the Sault. The fresh breezes from these northern latitudes which swept down the Georgian Bay lend a vigor to

They ranged in age from eight to seventeen years. They stood in line, in school girl fashion, as if about to make a recitation. Blushes suffused their countenances, but they cast at me many a coquettish glance. The father locked at them a moment proudly, and then introduced me, after which he astounded me by saying that I must make a choice of one of his daughters for betrothal to her. I thought he was joking, and made some remark in pleasantry, when he repeated his statement, and demeaned himself so gravely the while, that I was convinced he was in earnest. I scarcely knew how the scene terminated, for I was very much confused, and I am afraid told a falsehood by stating that I had a wife and children. The next day he informed me the betrothal was an act of courtesy toward an ultra-favored guest, was extended to highly distinguished persons only as a rule, and signified nothing more than that the person so honored had the freedom of the house. The granting of this privilege is indeed an honor, for no one but a near relative, can enter any part of an aristocrat's residence, where the females of the household resort. Even the parlor, therefore, is sacred from intrusion, unless one be accepted on the intimate footing accorded to one betrothed, who then becomes as a brother. Should he violate the trust reposed in him, nothing on earth would be more condemned. His punishment would be sure, and his life would be the price of his wrong.

Brazilian Notes.

Many times during a visit to Brazil one will see specimens of that queer mechanical appliance, monjula, the only labor-saving machine Portugal ever introduced into her South American dependency. At almost every fazenda one will see the heavy beams of these cumbersome machines lazily working, operated by a little stream of water, which, by its weight and subsequent overflow, causes the triphammer to rise and fall, every blow helping to crush the corn or mandioca roots in the mortar beneath the heavy pestle. Here, too, one finds the most primitive of all primitive vehicles, the native Brazilian cart, rudely made of heaviest timber, and with massive solid wheels formed of thick plank and heavily mounted with iron. This is the only style of vehicle to be found in Brazil, outside of the coast cities. The ungainly, cumbersome carts, unimproved since the beginning of the Christian era, are drawn over the campas, where the topographical features of the country will permit, by any number of oxen from four to twelve. The empty cart alone is a load for a yoke of oxen, and when loaded requires four, five or six yoke with an equal number of drivers armed with wicked whips and cruel goads. When these carts are in transit they emit a loud squeak that is the delight of the dusky cargeiros, whose musical education is not of the highest order, and who could not, for any consideration, be induced to lubricate the working parts and thus do away with the squeak.

one. It would therefore be lost, for only "living" teeth could be made to grow in a strange mouth, and they died very soon after being torn from their parent gums. Teeth are "living" so long as the membrane covering the roots has any vitality. It has been a problem of great interest to dentists throughout America to devise some means by which the sound extracted teeth could be kept alive indefinitely, until they should be needed, and to a San Francisco dentist belongs the honor of solving the problem. Dr. W. J. Younger, says the Call, has been conducting a series of experiments, which have resulted in the discovery of a means of preserving the life of extracted teeth. It is nothing more or less than "grafting" it as soon as it is drawn, upon the engorged comb of a healthy rooster, and leaving it there properly secured until it is wanted. Then it is cut away, the cock being placed under the influence of chloroform, washed, and everything removed down to the membrane and placed in the freshly made cavity where it it is needed. A representative of the Call was permitted recently to examine the mouth of a gentleman in which there was a tooth that had been planted there a week or so before, and which was apparently as firm as those which had always been there. It had been kept alive on a cock's comb for ten days, and had been taken from the mouth of a young lady, whose looks were benefitted by the removal.

A Dutch Doctor's Views of Cholera

A writer in Good Cheer tells a quaint story of an old Dutch doctor on whom he called for advice about a friend as follows:—

Ah, mine vriend, pe seated. So? ah yes, your vriend has der Yankee cholera. Vell, it is not tangerous; he must rest a vew days, and eat very little; dat is enough.

Do you know vat I call the Yankee cholera?

Vell, I tells you; you Yankees eats and trinks everydings, and pyeundpye der inflammation sets in, und bains comes on, und der tocter says: "Ah this is Asiatic cholera. Carry der man to der hospital;" and der man dies of fright.

You Yankees live too vell. Look at der Irish girl vat comes here. She never knows vat sickness pees. She lives at home on puttermilk and botatoes der year round. Vell, she comes here, und eats der meat and trinks der ice-vater, und soon she feels sick and veak, und she say: "Oh, der chlimaat; it is killun me." Ah, ha! it is not der climate at all, it is der goot living. Let her eat nodings put puttermilk und botatoes, und all vill pe well. Der Ameaican climate is der pest in der vorld.

One of the reasons urged by the advocates of the postal delivery system, in a small city, was that the office should seek the man, not the man the office.

Theodore Thomas responded to a Cincinnati call for an encore by setting the orchestra at once at work on an instrumental piece. The audience cheered for fifteen minutes, but Thomas did not relent, and the brass of the band finally beat the brass of the audience.

these northern latitudes which swept down the Georgian Bay lend a vigor to the invalid or business worn traveller and prepare him to enter with full zest into the enjoyment of the unrivalled scenery in the land-locked and island sheltered waters between Killarney and the Sault.

But the chief pleasure is not attained while on the steamboat; it is in forming a party and coasting around our bays and exploring the rivers of the North Shore. In this way you get the full benefit of our unrivalled scenery; you have an opportunity of climbing the bluffs at Ten Mile Point, West Bay, or Lacloche Mountains, from any of which points of vantage you have spread out before you a vast stretch of water, woodland and waving fields.

Our lakes and creeks also afford abundance of fishing where all who love such sport can indulge this propensity to their hearts' content.

Should the visitor have a month to spare we would advise an extension of this trip in one of the boats which will this year take in the C.P.R. local sports along the north shore of Lake Superior. For sublime grandeur of scenery we defy anything to surpass that rock bound bay indented coast.

But be your time long or short you cannot spend it to better advantage anywhere than in this same District of Algoma.—Manitoulin Expositor.

Health Items

Some people prefer hot lemonade to the usual form, but it is only recently that we have seen it recommended in diarrhœa. Dr. Vigouroux recommends a glass of hot lemonade every hour, or half hour, as an easy, agreeable, and efficient treatment for diarrhœa.

A writer in the Medical Times and Gazette recommends the use of hot milk as a restorative. Milk when heated above 100 deg. F. loses its sweetness and density, but has a most beneficial influence over mind and body when exhausted by labor or mental strain. Its effects are more invigorating and enduring than those of alcoholic stimulants.

The hard fact, recently so often brought to the notice of English scientific societies, that 2,000,000 of bodies have been interred during the past twenty-five years within the limits of the London postal circle has very greatly changed the popular view of cremation. Two years ago three of the scientific papers said that cremation was "unnatural" and "against human feeling," but they now think that self-preservation is the first and strongest of laws.

Marriage Licenses

C. Z. PERRY, Issuer of Marriage Licenses. Office—Hinch, Perry & Co., Dundas street.

ROUND TOWN.

—For sale a piano, cheap. Apply at this office.

—The fences around the Bridge-st. Methodist churches have been repaired and painted. They present a much neater appearance.

—The bicycle club are devoting themselves to practice and some of the members are trying fancy riding. They bid fair before long to become as proficient as Barnum's professionals.

—The much needed plank walk in front of the Cartwaight block has at last been built. It is highly creditable to the Chief. There are several other places in town which need new plankwalks badly.

—In the report of the County Council in our last issue we referred to a man having been committed to gaol for an indefinite period by the reeve of Newburgh. It is desirable to state that this is not Mr. Ham, the present reeve, but a former one.

—The 47th battalion band, in accordance with their agreement with the citizens, played on Dundas st. Saturday evening last. Their playing was admired by all. The band will not play on Saturday evening, 28th inst., owing to the absence of the leader, but will play some evening during the week instead.

Annual R. C. Pic-nic.

The annual pic-nic of the R. C. Church of Napanee and Deseronto, will be held in Black's Grove, Deseronto, on 1st July. An attractive programme has been prepared and the pic-nic will be conducted in in the usually first-class style which characterizes the entertainments given by these congregations.

Arrest of Swindlers.

Mr. J. S. Hulett accompanied by Chief McKinnon of Belleville, last week went to Hamilton and arrested there Jno. M. Webber and Walter Webber, Vice President and Secretary of the Mutual Marriage Aid Association, on the charge of fraud. An investigation was held and an adjournment procured for two weeks. Mr. Hulett had paid into the concern over $950 and since the exposure has received letters from several persons who have paid in amounts varying from $200 to $2,000. This gigantic fraud has been going on for some time. It is probable the Government will take up the prosecution. Mr. R. J. Perry of this town is also a victim to the extent of some $900.

N. T. & Q. Railway Notes.

The new contractors for ballasting the northern section, Messrs Chisholm, Macdonald & Co., will finish the line from Yarker to Tamworth. They will put fifty men on immediately and fifty more on Monday.

Mr. Fred Miller has been appointed assistant to Mr. M. J. Butler, the engineer of the line, and will take charge of the Northern section.

Three gangs of men are now kept busy day and night lifting the track, ballasting and distributing.

A workman was struck the other day by a plough used in levelling ballast, and hurled into space escaping with a few bruises.

Daring Burglary.

On Tuesday night a most daring burglary was perpetrated at the residence of H. M. Deroche, Esq. After eleven o'clock, the family having retired, it is supposed the rascals entered the front door and made their way to the room where Mr. Deroche was sleeping. They took his gold watch and chain from his vest, which hung at the head of the bed and also his clothes lying on a chair. They also took from his room a box in which were a necklace belonging to Mrs. Deroche, a pair of silver bracelets, a ring or two, some shirt studs and trinkets. They then proceeded to the library from which they took a small desk. The dining room was the next place visited and from the sideboards there they extracted a box containing silver spoons, knives and forks. This was all they took and must have soon left the house. A dog was on the premises, but had been drugged. Mr. Deroche also believes the burglars administered choloform to him. Traces of the rascals were discovered next morning in the broken flowers on the lawn. A small stand was found under the kitchen window as if they had first tried to make entrance there. The number of Mr. Deroche's watch was 80,145. It was highly prized by him as it was a present from his Newburgh friends after his return from the conflict at Ridgeway as a Dominion Day at Bath.

The good people of Bath, not to be outdone by surrounding towns, have arranged for a grand celebration to be held in that village on Dominion Day. The committee offer two hundred dollars in prizes for competition in the various games and sports which will constitute a part of the day's programme. The steamer Pioneer will make excursions every half hour on the bay. A base ball match will be played at 2 p.m. Dancing platforms are to be erected and first-class music will be furnished. The day's proceedings will conclude with a grand torch light procession and a physiog exhibition. The programme, which is replete with interesting events, will be carried out to the minutest detail, and a most enjoyable time is promised. The people of this district should, in justice to themselves and the people of Bath, and assemble enmasse for a good day's sport.

Eastern Methodist Church.

The following are the services for Sunday next:—Love feast at 9 a. m. It is specially requested that people be prompt at this service to avoid interruption. Regular service at 11, when Rev. Dr. Carman will preach. In the afternoon Sunday School addresses will be delivered by leading members of the Conference. Evening services at 7 p. m.; sermon by Rev. Wm. Jolliffe, of Peterboro.

Strawberry and Ice Cream Festival.

The ladies of the Presbyterian congregation in this town will give a strawberry and ice cream festival in the basement of the church, on the evening of Thursday, 26th inst. Beside the refreshments, which the ladies of this church always provide in great abundance and of the best quality, there will be an intellectual and musical treat of rare excellence, consisting of addresses, readings and music by the choir. The doors will be opened at 7.30 o.clock and the price of admission only 20 cents. The public are cordially invited.

POLICE COURT.

[Before Mayor Joy.]

WEDNESDAY, June 18.—John Shanley, an Irishman hailing from New Hampshire, was up before His Worship on Wednesday, charged with vagrancy and being disorderly. His Worship intends being a terror to tramps, and gave him 21 days in gaol.

THURSDAY, June 19.—Geo. Bates, a Kingstonian, was brought up by Nightwatchman Emberson, charged with drunkenness, and using abusive language. His Worship took pity on him and let him go, upon paying the cost.

OBITUARY.

On Sunday there passed away at her residence on East-st, after a protracted illness, Sarah Catherine Lockwood, wife of Mr. Alex. Hosey. Deceased was born in Camden East in 1828, and was at the time of her decease, fifty-six years of age. She resided a great portion of her time before her marriage with the late Mrs. John W. Perry, and about thirty years ago was united in marriage to Mr. Hosey. Since then she has resided in Napanee. For a number of years she has been in very delicate health, but a short time ago sank into the severe illness from which she never rallied. A remarkable incident occurred just before her death. The Ven. Archdeacon Jones had been sent for on Sunday and during devotional service was just at the commendatory prayer when the last change was noticed. She expired almost instantly after the prayers were finished. The funeral took place on Tuesday, a large number of relations and friends following the remains to St. Mary Magdalene's Church and thence to the cemetery. The pall-bearers were Messrs. Geo. Wilson R. G. Wright, Henry Douglas, Uriah Wilson, T. S. Henry and H. T. Forward. Rev. Mr. Foster, of Selby, in the absence of the Archdeacon, conducted the services. She leaves a husband, son and two daughters, as well as a large circle of acquaintances to mourn his loss.

BRIEF LOCAL ITEMS.

—One of the young alligators brought by Mr. Geo. Fox from Florida, died recently.

—A three year old child of James Cole, blacksmith, was bitten on the arm by a dog, but not severely, one day last week.

—Survival of the fittest. Downs' Elixir has outlived every other cough remedy simply because owing to the absence of the leader, but will play some evening during the week instead.

—Last Saturday evening as Miss McConnell, who lives near Deseronto, was driving down Dundas street, her horse took fright and ran upon the sidewalk near Grange's drug store. The lady held on the reins pluckily and prevented what might have been a serious accident.

—The County Council closed their session last Saturday. A motion was made that they meet on Monday instead of Tuesday, as is the custom. The motion was lost, the opposers of it saying that if they did some work during the first part of the session and not leave it until the last they would not be pressed for time. All who have attended the sessions will concur in this opinion.

—The people of Deseronto are going to celebrate Dominion Day in a manner befitting that enterprising town. The Committee promise a grand entertainment. The programme will consist of the usual sports and games; a tug of war between the different establishments of the Rathbun Company, boat, canoe and yacht races, torchlight procession with physiogs and fireworks. An interesting feature will be the entrance at noon of the Queen of Beauty, attended by maids of honor, selected from the prettiest girls in the district. She will be accompanied by an imposing pageant, to surpass anything seen in this district. Prof. Hand guarantees a fac simile of the pyrotechnic exhibition given at the semi-centennialin Toronto. The people of the adjoining district are cordially invited to attend.

—His Honor John Beverley Robinson, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, accompanied by his aide-de-camp, Capt. Geddes, arrived in town on Monday by the fast express train. They were met at the station by Judge Wilkison, Ven. Archdeacon T. Bedford-Jones, Dr. Ruttan and others and by the 47th battalion band. They were at once escorted to the residence of Judge Wilkison, whose guests they were during their stay in town. In the afternoon they drove out to Napanee Mills and watched the process of paper-making with great interest. In the evening Judge Wilkison invited a number of prominent gentlemen to dinner and a very pleasant time was spent. The Lieut.-Governor returned from Adolphustown Tuesday evening and left Wednesday morning for Toronto.

—As there was no quorum at the Town Council last Monday evening it stands adjourned until the next regular night for meeting. The celebration at Adolphustown attracted a good many of the town fathers away.

—Persons who have occasion to visit some streets in West ward at night complain of the conduct of some boys who injure people by throwing stones. On several occasions people have been struck in this way. The police should put a stop to the nuisance.

—Mr. James Emberson, our efficient nightwatchman, has a book in which he has copied each night's happenings as long as he has held his present position. He also submits a fortnightly report to the Council. He evidently does not fear investigation of his work.

—The str. Alexandria struck a rock as she was passing through the Lachine Rapids about six o'clock Wednesday evening andas the officers of the steamer noticed she had sprang a leak they grounded her at the foot of the rapids, the passengers and crew getting off in safety. The boat was grounded on level and it is expected that no difficulty will be experienced in getting her off and ready for her regular trips without delay.

turn from the conflict at Ridgeway as a member of the Queen's Own Rifles. The chain was also a present to him and several of the pieces of silver were valued heirlooms in Mr. Deroche's family for several generations. The total value of the articles taken was upwards of $200. The police have been unable to obtain any trace of the thieves. It is believed that the series of robberies recently committed in town was planned by parties residing in town and carried out by skilled burglars from a distance. The police are exercising greater vigilance and the gang may yet be captured.

—The same night the house of Mr. Jas. Brandon, broker, Piety Hill, was visited by burglars, but nothing was taken. The door was found open in the morning.

HYMENEAL.

SWITZER—LEWIS.

A most interesting event took place on Wednesday evening at the residence of Mr. James Lewis, Wilton, being the occasion of the marriage of his only daughter, Minnie, to Mr. N. B. Switzer of Switzerville. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. J. Leach of Odessa. The bride was attended by Miss Switzer, sister of the groom, while he was supported by Mr. John M. Spafford. After the ceremony the guests sat down to a sumptuous repast, after which the happy couple left on a midnight train for Ottawa and other points of interest. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and costly presents. We tender our congratulations and best wishes.

RICKELY—GILBERT.

A very happy time was enjoyed in this neighborhood on Thursday, June 12th, 1884, at 11 a. m., when Rev. S. A. Dupraw joined in holy wedlock Mr. Donald Rickely and Miss Minerva Jane, eldest daughter of Daniel Gilbert, Esq. The ceremony was performed at the residence of the bride's father, after which a sumptuous dinner was served to a number of invited guests. The happy couple took the train at Napanee at 5 p. m., en route for Toronto, Niagara etc., returning for the Centennial. The following is a list of presents to the bride :

Bridegroom, large silver cruet; Herbert C. Gilbert, (groomsman) silver butter cooler and handsome glass water pitcher; Wm. P. and Miss Phœbe Miller, (bridesmaid) set china dishes (costly); Miss Delia Sharp, silver butter cooler (very handsome); bride's parents, one dozen silver knives, forks and tea spoons; Mr. and Mrs. Rickely, beautiful set of glass ware (complete); Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Charters, parlor lamp (extra handsome); Mr. and Mrs. Martin Hough, silver pickle cruet; Mr. and Mrs. James Rennie, pickle castor and tongs; Miss Agnes Gilbert, silver sugar bowl; Mr. and Mrs. David Youngs, two large glass dishes (covered); Mrs. White, large glass fruit dish; Mrs. A. Lucas, very handsome pair vases; Miss Emma Lucas, card basket; Mr. and Mrs. Wilmot Gilbert, fruit plate and molasses pitcher; Miss Gertrude Gilbert, cheese plate and pepper castor (glass).

May their happiness through life be as genuine as the gold that cemented their union—and that paid the minister.

It will be held in one of the charming groves on the Bay shore, and it is intended to make it first-class in every particular.

—The Lake Shore House at the Sandbanks has been re-opened under the management of Messrs. McDonald & Hyatt. People find the Sandbanks a most popular summer resort and a well appointed hotel adds infinitely to tourists. They will find this house first-class in every respect and worthy of patronage.

—On Saturday last a lad named Richardson, living across the river, was displaying feats of diving in the river. While on one of these submarine trips his head came in violent contact with a rock, which resulted in a severe wound of the scalp and injury to the lad's neck. He might easily have drowned while sufferingfrom the stunning effects of the blow. So much for Sunday swimming.

—Further particulars of the loss of the schooner "Nellie P. Downey" have been received. It seems that in a dense fog she ran across the tow-line of the tug Glide and was run into by the barge "Oswego." All parties are exonerated from blame in the matter. Mrs. D. C. Jennings, of Napanee, and another lady, were on board at the time, but were saved, as were all the crew. All the property of Capt. Bartley and the crew was lost.

—A grand pic-nic will be held in Carroll's Grove, near the R. C. Church, Chippewa, four miles east of Enterprise, on Tuesday, July 8th. This is to be the first of a series of annual picnics to be given by the Catholic congregation of Chippewa. Refreshments will be served during the day by the ladies of the congregation. A first-class string band has been engaged for the occasion. Special prizes will be offered for running, jumping, &c. Nothing will be left undone to make the day a most enjoyable one. A cordial invitation is extended to the public. Admission to the grounds 25c.

—Monumental Work. Mr. V. —Mr. Irvine Junkin, of Bobcaygeon, is in town in connection with the Methodist Conference.

—Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Walton left on Tuesday for their home in Belleville. They carry with them a host of good wishes.

—Mrs. F. H. Howard, of Montreal, was in town this week attending the funeral of her mother, Mrs. Alex. Hosey.

—Mr. Bruce Robinson has about recovered from the severe burning he received some time ago by the explosion of a spirit lamp.

—Mr. P. O'Brien, caretaker of the Parliament Buildings, Toronto, formerly of Belleville and well known in this town, is dangerously ill.

—Mr. E. H. Curlett, of New York, son of Mr. Charles Curlett, of this place, came home on Monday evening to spend a month with his parents and friends.

—Mr. James H. Gallagher has resigned the captaincy of the Napanee Lacrosse Club. This is a matter of surprise to many and regret to all, as he has been zealous in making the club a permanent and successful organization.

—We were pleased to see Sydney Warner, Esq., of Wilton in town to-day, after an absence of two years. He looks exceedingly well after his long and severe illness. He was warmly greeted by many friends. He is attending the Methodist Conference.

IN MEMORIAM.

In Loving Remembrance of Alma E. Benn, Wife of Rufus E. Jackson, who Died May 24th, 1884.

Gone, and forever, strange words and mysterious!
Bearing their burden of misery and woe,
Filling fond hearts with unspeakable weariness,
Leaving them wondering why it is so.

Backward we look as if 'twere but yesterday,
Through bitterest tears that will not be stayed
See her so joyous and fair on her bridal day,
Now in death's slumbers so solemnly laid.

How fair was the dawn of her life's early morning,
Heralding clearly a glorious day,
Vanished is the light in the flush of its dawning,
Gone where no clouds e'er darken the way.

Loved ones left sorrowing. Oh! Death, thou destroyer
Of life and of hope in the heart and in home,
Hastened to claim what was thine, and hast taken her,
Leaving one loving heart dark and alone.

Leaving a father and mother to grieve for her,
Brother and sister to miss her glad smile,
Many a heart feeling lone and bereaved for her,
Though she has left us at most but awhile.

God gave, and he taketh with His wisdom infinite,
At life's early morn or at set of its sun.
And we with bowed heads and in sorrow resign to it,
Murmuring, "Not my will but Thine," Lord, be done.

For God knoweth, tho to us whose short-seeing,
His ways often-times are dark and unknown,
Yet thro'the darkness drear, gloriously gleaming,
Shines forth the radiance of her spirit home.

There she waits us, Oh! glad thought and comforting,
With many a loved one passed on before,
She'll be the messenger Angel who sent to bring Summons to meet her on that Golden Shore.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The adjourned meeting of the School Board was held in the Council Chamber on Thursday evening, the 17th inst., Mr. Morden in the chair. Present—Messrs. McNeil, Strong, Russell, Henry, Perry and McCay.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

A petition was read from Messrs. John Lawrence, Alex. Smith and T. A. Huffman, asking for the use of the West Ward School, for the purpose of holding a convention of the Brethren, in the month of July for two weeks.

Moved by Mr. PERRY, seconded by Mr. MCNEIL, that the prayer of the petition be granted and that the Chairman and Secretary be a Committee to see the terms and conditions upon which the brethren may occupy the building.—Carried.

The Secretary submitted tenders from Messrs. Rathbun & Co., and Downey & Co., to deliver coal.

Moved by Mr. MCCAY, seconded by Mr. MCNEIL, that action on tenders for coal be deferred until the next meeting.—Carried.

The visiting committee made an elaborate report in reference to their visit to the public and high schools.—Consideration of the report was deferred until next meeting.

The Committee for High School were instructed to examine the school grounds and report to the Council on the advisability of fencing them.

The following accounts were disposed of:

W. D. Madden, $11.40, referred to Committee on Printing with power to act; I. J. Lockwood, $11.72, passed; John Vanalstine, wood and coal carting, $2.30, ordered to be paid.

The Board then adjourned.

Adventures of an Insurance Agent.

[Communicated to THE EXPRESS.]

DEAR SISTER,—I left Yarker on Wednesday morning for Colebrook, and was escorted a short distance up the street by several of the leading citizens, or to use a different form of expression, I was helped out of the village, and I am now taking my meals in an erect position.

Colebrook is beautifully located on both sides of the Napanee River and at the foot of a lovely sheet of water, which is prolific of mudcats and other small fry. Occasionally a pike is gathered in to assist in satisfying the craving the inhabitants have for food. Ever since the first settlement of this lovely spot the people have been noted for the enormous quantities of eatables they can make way with in a very short time.

It is an unusual thing to see the Colebrook people absent from church on the Sabbath day, and the sober earnestness that characterizes their actions in a place of worship is worthy of imitation.

Honesty is the prevailing characteristic among the people and a man, even if he be a stranger, is as free from molestation on the public thoroughfares as he would be in New York or Amsterdam.

Some of the inhabitants are proud of their lineage, for like the majority of people in America, they had ancestors on board the illustrious Mayflower. Colebrook has reason to be proud of its hotel, which is conducted on the American plan and situated near the bank of the beautiful river. The table is replete with delicacies and in pie it has no equal.

Mr. Woodruff has expended a large amount of capital in placing his grist mill in a thorough state of repair. He proposes to turn out as good flour as any mill in the country.

There are two good stores in this place and the people have reason to rejoice that they live where they can buy goods so cheap and of such a superior quality.

They are loud in their praises of their public school instructions and claim the children are making rapid strides in paths of learning. In manufactories and handsome private residences Colebrook ranks second to Yarker but in piety and pumps it heads the list.

Only a few miles from Colebrook, at the head of Walroth's Bay, Petworth, lives a celebrated writer of ancient history, who informs us that before the destruction of Sodom, Lot and his family fled from the city. I think it was a good thing for George that he pursued the same course and left Petworth. It is to be hoped nothing of a saline nature interfered with his departure.

This village reminds me of a man who has taken an active part in a free fight and come out of the engagement in a dilapidated condition. Its grist mill in its present state looks as though there had been a Fenian raid on the place and after the flight of the inhabitants, the marauders had amused themselves by peppering away at what was once a splendid mill.

There are some fine farms around here and the soil is especially adapted for the growth of cereals.

Your affectionate brother, WILLIAM.

—Monday morning at Kingston an ex-artillerist named James Wingfield, lately in the insurance business, cut his throat with a razor and bled to death. He lingered from one until ten a. m. He has lately been in great financial and domestic trouble.

—More people, adults and children, are troubled with costiveness than with any other ailment. Dr. Henry Baxter's Mandrake Bitters will cure costiveness and prevent the diseases which result from it.

—A corporal in "B" Battery lately died in the Catholic Hotel Dieu, and Rev. H. F. Bland, in public correspondence, intimated that his faith had been tampered with. Father Fleming explains that he only administered to the dying man, at his own request, the last sacrament.

—For constitutional or scrofulous Catarrh, and for consumption induced by the scrofulous taint, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the true remedy. It has cured numberless cases. It will stop the nauseous catarrhal discharges, and remove the sickening odor of the breath, which are indications of scrofulous origin.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver, and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the market, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to T. A. Huffman and A. W. Grange's drug stores and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents and one dollar.

Wilton does not offer many points for a man to linger over in description. It requires something like a wedding or musical entertainment to awaken his dormant energies, and were it not for the rich musical treat the choir occasionally gives us and the interesting sermons we hear we would have to revel altogether in imagination to satisfy your rapacious appetite for communications.

We have fortunately been favored with the presence of some ladies from a distance, who, having an eye for the beautiful, love to visit this remote spot and take in the general surroundings.

They express their admiration in glowing terms and are especially pleased with the manner in which our educational institutions are managed and the care evinced by those having the offspring in charge.

We expected to have had the pleasure on Sunday of listening to a sermon by the Rev. Mr. Drew, but Conference duties prevented his occupying the pulpit on that day. He delivers his farewell sermon on Sunday next and it is expected there will be a large crowd in attend-

NOTICE is hereby given that I have transmitted or delivered to the persons mentioned in the third and fourth sections of the Voters' List Act, the copies required by said section to be so transmitted or delivered of the list, made pursuant to said Act, of all persons appearing by the last revised assessment roll of the said municipality to be entitled to vote in the said municipality, at elections for members of the Legislative Assembly and at municipal elections; and that said list was first posted up at my office, at Hay Bay, on the 26th day of June, 1884, and remains there for inspection.

Electors are called upon to examine the said list, and, if any omissions or any other errors are found therein, to take immediate proceedings to have the said errors corrected according to law.

Self-Dump Horse Rake

Is meeting each year with greater success. A boy can operate it. No additional strength is required to discharge the heaviest loads; it immediately resumes its position to rake close to the windrows; it rakes perfectly clean; a lever holds the teeth to their work, or eleyates to move from field to field; it can be adjusted to rake stubble without injury to the clover roots; the teeth are of the best quality of oil-tempered steel and will stand a spring backwards of twenty inches without injury; dumping attachments for both wheels and can be used in turning. It is self or hand dumping, as may be preferred. It is the best, simplest, strongest, most convenient and the most durable. We advise all farmers to buy it. DEALERS do not use the rakes they sell, it does not, therefore, matter so much to them what they sell; but farmers who have to use them until they are worn out should never take anything but the best.

—Pleasant weather.

—The crops are looking well.

—Road work has commenced.

—A sugar social was held in the church on the 11th inst., for the benefit of the Rev. Mr. Dafoe, and as usual scored another success.

—Rev. W. J. Sanders, of this mission, has returned from the conference. His many friends congratulate him on having passed a successful examination in the ministry.

—Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Sweetnam have returned home, after spending two weeks with friends in Uncle Sam's domain, and judging from the loads of goods that are going to his store, we cannot but think he combined business with pleasure. "Uncle George is always on the "git up and git" side of everything.

—Mr. Samuel Churchill has disposed of his property near this place, to Mr. Charles Bebee, and has removed to the States.

—Mr. Wallace Mallory is erecting a large drive house for convenience sake. Good idea. Boys follow suit.

—Death has again visited us and relieved another old veteran from the cares of this world, in the person of Jacob Terry, who died at his residence on Wednesday 16th inst. The deceased was in his 74th year. He came to this back country about twenty years ago and up to the time of his death was a hard working and industrious man highly respected by all who knew him. The family have the sympathy of the whole community in their sad affliction. The Rev. W. J. Sanders preached an excellent sermon after which the remains were taken to Denbigh for interment.

—The long looked for day has at last dawned; the last rail on the N. T. & Q. has been laid and the train is making its daily appearance. The sidings are being laid down and the switches put in place and the whole thing begins to look business like.

The first accident on our end of the road occurred yesterday (Sunday.) Mr. Charles Jones, who had just recovered from a broken leg so as to be able to get around without a cane, somehow missed the church and got down on the track, and while riding on the hand-car, got the same leg broken again. Singular, too, for the church is quite a bit larger than the hand car.

PERSONAL.—Messrs. Henry, Williams, Sherwood and VanLuven, officials of the N. T. & Q., have been in town during the past week. Mr. M. J. Butler, engineer of the road, is here locating the station and switches. Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Wartman have left for Glenvale camp-meeting. Rev. M. J. Bates has returned from the laying of the corner stone of the Centennial Methodist Church, at Adolphustown.

—J. M. Smith is again to the fore with agricultural implements; the machinery he sells gives the best of satisfaction.

—Mr. D. E. Rose's telephone does not work very well yet.

—Cupid has again been about his pranks in our town. It is said he selected two arrows from his quiver and with unerring aim, imbedded them in the hearts of a couple of his victims. I am told that one of the arrows was as sharp as the point of a Singer sewing machine needle. It is quite improbable that the wounded ones can live in their present condition longer than 20th inst. There is some talk that a breach of promise case may arise out of the affair, but we hope not. I would just say—

Boys, when you court, you should deport
Yourselves with circumspection,
For 'tis a sin to seek to ruin,
And trifle with affection.

—Another accident occurred on Sunday. Mr. Griffin, from Parham, with a young lady, Miss Ward, left the town, but before they got fairly started, their horse became unmanagable and upset the buggy, throwing the occupants out, and breaking the young lady's arm. I expect the driver was partially "paralyzed" or something of that sort.

—We now have a tri-weekly mail between here and Arden, on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays. ANON.

The Adolphustown Base Ball Match.

[To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.]

SIR,-In the last issue of THE EXPRESS I noticed that the Napanee Base Ball Club is said to have been defeated by a syndicate club, composed of the best men of the Bath and Sillsville clubs. It was Bath base ball club that defeated the Napanee club. The captain of the Bath team and another man being absent, their places were filled by two members of the Sillsville club. In the Napanee club, we are told, were two men from Deseronto. You will therefore see that the Bath base club is fully entitled to the victory. By inserting this in your valuable columns, you will greatly oblige. A. MARTYN, —The weather in this region of country is very dry, and crops are suffering very much for want of rain.

—Our village is still enlarging. Mr. George Clark has commenced the erection of a new dwelling house.

PERSONAL.—Mr. A. Clark, a young man from Toronto, has been appointed to take charge of the Arden R.R. station. It is fondly hoped he has not come for a little while and then to migrate with the summer birds. He is a person whom all would like very much to remain. On his first Sabbath amongst us he set all the youth of our community a good example by finding his way to divine service.

—A number from here attended the lawn social held at Mr. Israel Stewart's and were all pleased with the evening's entertainment. Much credit is due Mr. Stewart and family for the deep interest shown in the finances of the Wilton circuit fund.

—Business in Mr. George Garrison's cheese factory shows quite an increase this season, Mr. Peters, his cheese-maker, giving general satisfaction.

—A station 24x60 feet is in course of erection. A hand-car load of twenty-eight, from Enterprise paid us a visit last week. Come again when you can stay longer.

PERSONAL.—Mr. Jas. Whittle and sister spent a week with their brother John at Rochester, N. Y...Dr. H. A. Evans, of Picton, and smiling Ben, of Yarker, were calling on friends here last week..Mr. Hiram Johnston, after spending two months in Dakota and Manitoba, returned home on Thursday last, accompanied by his sister, Mrs. Cyrus Asselstine, of Hamilton, Dak. He took eight horses with him, on which we are pleased to learn he had a net profit of about $600. He looks well after his long journey but we are sorry to say Mrs. Asselstine is in poor health...Mrs. Levi Huffman is visiting her brother, G. W. THE U. E. LOYALISTS.

A RONDEAU.

They left their farms, they sped their flight
Through pathless woods, in death's despite,
They feared not man, they feared but God,
Pleased, if He willed, to leave the sod,
Which their strong hands had tilled aright,
Won from the woods by ploughshare bright
And gleaming axe, and logs alight,
Content as exiles sad to plod
They left their farms,
Nor cared for love or home's delight,
Their most prized treasures holding slight,
Where hemlocks dark above them nod,
Thro' swamp and tangled brake they trod,
When Duty called they held the right;

Only a Woman's Heart.

Lovers of the theatrical will hail with delight the appearance of Newton Beers, on Monday night, in his impersonation of "Old Roger," the tramp, in "Only a Woman's Heart." His conception of the part of "Old Roger" is as nearly perfect as can be. The Toronto Daily News says:—"No new play that has been presented this season has created more interest than "Only a Woman's Heart" which was presented at the Grand last night. The leading character is Old Roger (Newton Beers) a tramp and ex-convict, who has nevertheless, good spots in his character. The scoundrel of the piece, a designing adventurer, engages Roger to assist him in the plot to abduct the adopted daughter of a wealthy judge. The plotters succeed in their plans, but Roger discovers that the abducted girl is his own daughter, whom he had lost sight of years before. The tramp then sets to work to undo the villainy he has helped to accomplish, and at every point foils his companion in iniquity. Finally, for the purpose of saving his child from a distasteful marriage, the great-hearted tramp voluntarily returns to prison. The last act unravels all the misunderstanding of the play and turns its sadness into joy. Mr. Beers is the life and soul of the piece, and his appearances were each time hailed with pleasure. He is a thorough artist, and he will always be welcomed in Toronto. Miss Pomeroy, as Hattie Salsbury, did some effective work and altogether it may be justly claimed a very satisfactory performance, and undeniably a success."

The play will be presented here on Monday evening next and a full house is expected. Seats for sale at J. J. Perry's.

A MASS TEMPERANCE MEETING.

Prominent Divines on the Temperance Question—The Opera House Crowded.

On Sunday afternoon last the new Opera House was filled with a most respectable and intelligent audience to listen to members of the Methodist Conference on the great question of temperance. Mr. Charles James was called to the chair. On the platform were Revs. Stratton, Burns, Young, Pearson, Browning, and Messrs. A. L. Morden, Nixon, Jas. Allen and Mayor Joy. The meeting was opened by singing "Hold the Fort" by the entire audience, after which Rev. Mr. Burns made an effective prayer. The chairman, in a few introductory remarks, introduced Rev. J. Young of Cobourg.

Mr. YOUNG, on coming forward, said he was not used to a public demonstration of of this description. In his own pulpit he always felt at home but to get up before a large audience was something out of his line. He was glad to see Rev. Mr. Pearson, whose fellow pastor he had been some time ago in the village of Lyn. Mr. Pearson had risen to offices of distinction in temperance organizations while his powers had been over-looked and he had been kept in the background. However, he was contented to be a worker in the great temperance cause. He thought it unnecessary to tell the people that intemperance was the greatest stumbling block and curse that the nation had and labors under. They know it well enough and the only thing to be done is to work to remove it. This can only be done by earnest endeavor on the part of all classes of people. All who are received into the communion of the Methodist Church should be strict adherents of that law which forbids to touch, taste or handle spirtuous or intoxicating liquor. In fact the Methodists of to-day are in reality a temperance society. He could, and thinks we all, should have little sympathy with any church that smiles upon and upholds the drinking customs of society. A pure and spiritual church cannot be built up by drinking and tippling members. Most of all, should the ministers be abstainers, as their influence will do much with their flocks. The church could not be built upon slavery and he believed that the cause of drunkeness will be driven out from among church members and the people in general as was slavery. He thought the moderate drinker stood in need of much sympathy as all who had become drunkards had once been moderate drinkers. The only safe way was to never touch the first glass, and then assuredly the second glass would never be taken and so the danger would be averted. He spoke of the good work done by the Church of England and some priests of the Roman Catholic Church in putting down this great evil. He mentioned in particular Canon Baldwin, now Bishop of Huron and the late Father Stafford. He believed the crisis was now upon the church. As Napoleon led his men in the midst of Austrian grape shot so ministers the eastern division. He has quite a stock of dry goods, groceries, staple and fancy articles, provisions, flour, etc.

—Owing to some unaccountable hitch, the mail from Cloyne to Denbigh has not been reestablished yet.

—Some time ago Mr. John Graham was offered and accepted a situation as principal clerk or accountant in this section for the McLaren firm. He will enter upon his duties about the beginning of August next.

—The running of the regular trains on the O. & Q. R.R. on the 1st of July next, will be very much welcomed. They will be of great advantage. The lumber firms intend to have their supplies shipped to Scouton's station then to their destination via the Addington road.

—Can any one account for the phenomenon of how some men—even men with families—pass the ordinary round of life, apparently comfortable, without any visible means of support or any effort, not to say work? "They toil not, neither do they spin," at least, not as ordinary mortals, and though not arrayed in the splendor of the lily, yet the industrious laborer, the consistent mechanic, or the assiduous merchant can scarcely compete in habiliment or in the luxuries with which he supplies the inner man. These appendages or more properly parasites are found life size, preying on the more indulgent, innocent or unsuspecting people. Even here, remote from towns, they ply their burdensome and useless vocation.

—The mosquito abounds and is upon us in numbers, but do not compare with the multitudes further north.

—Many incidents occur, sometimes amusing, where some people, unaccustomed to, or having a prejudice against cosmopolitan habits and ideas, being leaders or local magnates in their section, towards what is called the front, arrive here apparently with egotistical and preconcerted notions of sitting on the backwoodsman, when often to their discomfiture, they find themselves like the eastern "tenderfoot" in the west, sat upon by the innocent natives.

PERSONAL.—Ed. Carscallen, of Beacon Lake and Mr. B. Carscallen, of Flinton, gave us a call on Saturday week. Mr. Wedel, of Bridgewater, was up last week and disposed of two lumber waggons. Messrs. T. Murphy and Eddie Levesque, of Croyden, called on the 7th inst., and were duly received. After prospecting, they report some fine specimens of the bovine race. Probably they may return to make purchases on some future occasion. Mr. F. Beausoileil, sr., and wife, and Mr. D. A. Spencer and wife were visiting friends in Prince Edward County last week. The old man is favorably impressed—quite carried away by his wife's relations and their kind hospitality. The many friends of the Misses Anna and Lizzie Beausoileil regret their departure.

DIED.—At his residence, on the 11th inst., after a short illness of congestion of the brain, Mr. Wm. Wise. His funeral, which took place on the 14th, was one of the largest ever seen in these parts.

Respect Old Age.

An old favorite is the remedy known as Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Thirty years reliable for cholera morbus, diarhoea and summer complaints.

Round About Us.

—The leading Reformers of the County of Frontenac are agitating a political pic-nic to be held after harvest.

—Every bottle of Arnica & Oil Liniment sold is warranted by the proprietors to give satisfaction or money will be refunded

—The K. & P. Railway Company will erect a round house at Renfrew with stalls for five or six engines. It will be built on the same plan as the one in Kingston. The company hope to be running trains to Renfrew by the end of September.

—More people, adults and children, are troubled with costiveness than with any other ailment. Dr. Henry Baxter's Mandrake Bitters will cure costiveness and prevent the diseases which result from it.

—On Saturday night burglars tried their hand on the safe at Bajus' brewery, Kingston. They forced open the office door with a chisel, and then with brace and drill, they bored two five-eighth inch holes in the safe plate in line with the bolt. It would seem that about this time the burglars were alarmed and decamped, leaving their tools behind them. These were found the next morning and are now in the hands of the police. This is the third attempt to rob the brewery.

Unknown to Science.

That preparation is undiscovered which can surpass Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry as a cure for cholera morbus, dysentery and summer complaints.

Salt Rheum Cured.

Are you troubled with Salt Rheum, Skin, Rough Pimples or Canker Sores; if so go at once to T. A. Huffman's and A. W. Grange's drug stores and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. Price twenty-five cents. It was never known to fail.

—Miss Clements, of Kingston, is visiting in town, the guest of Mrs. Dr. Wray.

—Miss Lou Meek, of Kingston, is visiting the family of Mr. Alex. Henry, Piety Hill.

—Mr. John Christie has been confined to his room this week by a severe attack of illness.

—Mr. Davis, of Brockville, formerly a resident of Napanee, was in town this week on business.

—Mr. W. W. Clarry, of the Doherty Organ Company, Clinton, paid us a flying visit on Saturday.

—Mr. W. S. Williams was in Toronto this week, attending the session of the Grand Lodge I. O. G. T.

—Mr. Young, of the Trenton Courier, was in town last week attending conference and favored us with a call.

—Mr. Fred Blakeley left on Thursday morning for Spanish River to work on Mr. Rudd Perry's contract on the C. P. R.

—We had the pleasure of a call on Saturday from Mr. Hough, of the Cobourg World, who was in town attending conference.

—Mr. McKenty, of Brampton, paid a flying visit to town on Monday. He will shortly remove to Napanee and go into business with R. P. Lahey.

—Mr. and Mrs. Cross, of the Merchant's Bank, Ottawa, who have been spending some time in town, the guests of A. Smith, Esq., left for home on Tuesday.

—Mr. J. Bennett has accepted a position as traveler for the Daly Bros.' Tea Company. He left on Wednesday to begin duties. Mrs. Bennett is visiting with her parents in Port Hope.

—J. L. Mills, city editor of the Belleville Intelligencer, has severed his connection with that journal. His successor is Chas. B. Cook, of Waterloo, Que., who has lately been attending the Ontario Commercial College.

—Rev. S. Card returned on Tuesday from Brockville. He took charge of his church there on Sunday but will preach his farewell sermon here on Sunday next. Mrs. Card and son have been visiting friends in Belleville —Mr. and Mrs. C. S. McKim and Miss Maud Mills, of Cleveland, Miss Carscallen, Mrs. R. Wright and Mr. Arthur Wright, of Dresden, were in town this week attending the funeral of the late John Aylesworth, Esq. Miss Aylesworth and sister accompany Mrs. Wright to Dresden, where they will spend some time.

—At the convocation of the Academy of Music, Belleville, Mrs. F. A. Carnovski and Miss Hudgins, daughters of Revds. Stratton and Hudgins, graduated with first honors, while in the large second year class Miss Ida Stratton heads the list, carrying off the Professor's prize.

—Mrs. E. S. D. Stevenson returned home on Monday from her two months' visit to Winnipeg. She was accompanied by Mrs. Billings Fairfield, who intends taking up her residence here. They came by the C. P. R. Steamer "Algoma," which was last week reported lost, owing to her not having arrived on time at Owen Sound. The cause of delay was a dense fog which for four days prevented the vessel from making progress.

—Mr. Asa Cronk, formerly of the Tamworth Echo, now publisher of the Wallaceburgh Echo has been appointed Collector of Customs at that port. His many friends in the north will be glad to hear of his success. Asa is somewhat erratic—especially in his politics—but he has a good heart. Mr. Gladstone will now get a rest. Asa has, during the past few years, devoted a great deal of space censuring and correcting the English Premier in his policy. The "grand old man" will no doubt be greatly relieved when he learns that Asa has thrown down the pen and will trouble him no more.

It does not blister or discolor the skin; requires but one application to banish all pain magically without using any greasy liniment or carrying your head in a poultice for weeks. Try a twenty-five cent bottle from T. A. Huffman's and A. W. Grange's drug stores.

—The concentrated power and curative virtues of Ayer's Sarsaparilla render it the most reliable and economical medicine that can be used. It contains no dangerous or harmful ingredients, and may be safely administered to patients of all ages. When you are sick the best medicine that can be obtained is none too good, and is the cheapest, whatever its cost.

mentioned in particular Canon Baldwin, now Bishop of Huron and the late Father Stafford. He believed the crisis was now upon the church. As Napoleon led his men in the midst of Austrian grape shot so ministers should stand at the head of a column in the fight they are now engaged in. We must agitate, speak, work, pray and touch the hearts of the people and the passing of the Scott Act will be accomplished.

Rev. Mr. BROWNING of Campbellford said he was used to speaking on the temperance platform and delighted in it. There has been all along too much gush on the temperance question but not enough practical demonstration by people with the pocket. Money must be had to carry on successfully any good work and the greatest charge that temperance people have against them at the present day is their penuriousness. The opponents of temperance will subscribe large sums to carry on their work but we cannot raise enough to carry on our cause. Another thing noticeable in this country, different from the United States, was the scarcity of temperance literature. In the United States they have temperance books, pamphlets, papers, etc., to educate their youth. Here there is a remarkable lack of this sort of reading. Dime novels and such trash can be found everywhere, but temperance books scarcely anywhere. He also believed in showing the drunkard that there was mercy for him if he would only accept it; not to tell him, as too many do, that hell is the place for him and he should have been there long ago. He in his own charges knew of almost hopeless drunkards who had been reclaimed to sobriety and reinstated into their first positions in society through the means of kindness shown to them. It is the duty of ministers to reclaim not to cast down. He concluded by thanking God for the beauty and prosperity of Canada and the bright prospects she holds to her sons and daughters.

The chairman then introduced Mr. NIXON of Manitoba, formerly a resident of Ernesttown. He spoke of the great pleasure it gave him to meet them there. He could remember thirty five years ago when they could collect a large crowd and arouse great enthusiasm at a temperance meeting in this county. He spoke of the work in Manitoba. There the Indian is not allowed to have liquor but in that country he took some time to show that the Indian had as much right to have liquor as a white man, and then he also impressed upon the people of Manitoba why the Indian should not use liquor, and he drew them to the conclusion that if liquor is bad for an Indian it is equally bad for a white man. In England under the Church of England Blue Ribbon Society, during the last 21 years, over one one million persons had become abstainers, amongst whom were bishops, ministers and prominent officials. The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Manitoba, with a great number of the priests are also total abstainers, and all over that country Presbyterians, Baptists and Methodists swell the ranks of the temperance men. The R. W. G. Secretary of the Good Templars had been instructed to send circulars to all conferences, synods and assemblies, asking that a week of prayer be appointed for the temperance cause. He himself when in Toronto during the session of the Presbyterian Assembly there, had requested them to take a decisive step in this matter. He is now connected with the C. P. Railway and on one piece of construction they had 6 000 men at work. No liquor was allowed amongst them and they laid track at the rate of four miles a day without a quarrel or strike. This was an event unprecedented but shows what may be done. He firmly believed that the Scott Act is going to be carried successfully.

A collection was then taken up and the meeting closed with the doxology and the benediction by Rev. F. B. Stratton.

The Medical Times, referring to the 5,000 incandescent lamps in use at the English hygenic exhibition, says that they are the domestic light of the future, adding that the well-founded objection formerly raised by oculists that the light was a series of flashes is not now true except in theory.

The plan adopted last year in London of sending poor and delicate children into the country for three weeks in midsummer has proved very successful. They are boarded in cottagers' families at the rate of about $1.25 a week. Manchester and other towns are making an effort to the same end.

According to the Clinical Record, Dr. Brinton has always looked with a certain amount of disbelief on carbolic acid, but finds corrosive sublimate to be the coming antiseptic. Prof. Koch has shown that solutions of one part of sublimate to 1,000 parts of water will destroy all bacteria, germs, and spores.

Italian finances present an agreeable exhibit. Returns for the first four months of the present year show that the receipts from indirect taxation amounted to 356,975,435 francs, as against 353,906,728 francs during the corresponding period in 1883. This is an increase in favor of 1884 of 3,068,706 francs.

The author of a new Boston novel seems fond of red. One of the young men in the book has "a red-tanned face and amber hair;" another character is a college professor who "hid his celebrity under a reddish beard;" a third has a complexion naturally crimson, and a fourth in "riding by leaves an impression of a long scarlet moustache."

Women in China are deeply interested in avoiding a divorce, as the divorcee loses the honorable position of a wife. The Chinese lady, strongly developed, avoids both scandals and intrigues. The magistrate often composes quarrels instead of pronouncing a decree of divorce, and the wife has an unfailing source of consolation in the upbringing of her children.

The observations of two French scientists, made during a passage from Rio Janeiro to Bordeaux, have done much to confirm the notion that the air above the sea is singularly free from low forms of animal life. The atmosphere immediately above the vessel practically swarmed with microorganisms; the vessel seemed to be surrounded by an "atmosphere of microbes."

The Nun of Kenmare, who has acquired considerable celebrity in Ireland and England, and who has not been in favor with the Irish "hierarchy" was recently in Rome, where the Propaganda and the Vatican received her well. She has obtained from the Vatican full authorization to found at Nottingham a new order of sisters of grace for training female domestic servants.

Prince Victor, who is now at Cambridge, is giving special attention to the study of history. He will not go to Oxford for a part of the course, as was expected, but will complete his university career on the Cam. The London World recommends this decision as "sensible," for the high and potent reason that a change would make necessary "the forming of an entirely new set of acquaintances."

Dr. Norman Kerr says in the Medical Press that "there is little relish in England for genuine fermented wine, our taste has become so corrupted by the spirituous fortification called for by the English market. A few days ago a well-known Englishman, on tasting a glass of pure, unsophisticated sherry brought over from Spain by a vine grower, exclaimed, to the latter's amusement, 'This is more vinegar than water.'"

After enduring for years the visits of book canvassers and the rest of the office-infesting tribe, a Glasgow firm tried what butter would do, and issued a notice as follows:—"The hours of attendance in this office are—To canvassers to church subscriptions, 10 to 2; book and insurance agents, 2 to 4; commercial travellers, beggars and advertising men, all day. We attend to our business at night."

Developements and illustrations in sanitary science have everywhere been very marked of late. Following upon the opening of the health exhibition in London, the Prussian ministry of public instruction is now considering the establishment of an institute of hygiene, in connection with the University of Berlin, and Koch, of the German cholera commission, has been named as the head of the new institution.

HEBREWS IN BUSINESS.

Something About the Men who Do a Large Portion of New York's Trade.

Considering the small number of Jews in New York—only 60,000—in comparison with the number of Christians, their success in the business world is simply phenomenal. There are millions upon millions of Jewish capital invested here in the wholesale trade. In fact, the business in many lines of trade is nearly monopolized by Jewish firms. I started from Union square the other morning and walked down Broadway to Wall street, following the interesting occupation of some of my fellow beings from the country, namely, of reading signs. I counted no less than 650 upon which Jewish names were painted. These names represented almost every kind of wholesale and jobbing trade located on the great artery. The millinery, clothing, hat, cap, and fur trades predominated. I also found many retailers of Jewish nationality. In one block I found only one Christian firm.

Turning Wall street, I found the same evidences of Jewish prosperity, only in a lesser degree, among bankers and brokers. Two of the largest banking houses in the country, J. & J. W. Seligman, and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., are distinctively Jewish. In the Stock Exchange are the Henriques

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great

Regenerative Medicine

Is composed of the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, with Yellow Dock, Stillingia, the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and other ingredients of great potency, carefully and scientifically compounded. Its formula is generally known to the medical profession, and the best physicians constantly prescribe AYER'S SARSAPARILLA as an Absolute Cure

For all diseases caused by the vitiation of the blood. It is concentrated to the highest practicable degree, far beyond any other preparation for which like effects are claimed, and is therefore the cheapest, as well as the best blood purifying medicine, in the world.

SEASON OF 1884.

Two of the largest banking houses in the country, J. & J. W. Seligman, and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., are distinctively Jewish. In the Stock Exchange are the Henriques Bros., Wormser, Marx, and a host of others, all of whom stand high, and wield an influence among their fellow members and carry large accounts for their customers. In Maiden lane and John street, the centre of the wholesale and retail jobbing jewellry trade of the country, the name of the Hebrew is found right and left, above and below. A round $5,000,000 of capital is employed by the Jews in this trade alone, and with it they transact fully 33 per cent. of the business done in it.

West of Broadway, in Broome, Mercer, White, Leonard, Greene, Grand, and other streets comprising the great dry goods and clothing districts, is a modern Jerusalem. Seventy per cent. of the entire wholesale clothing trade is done by Jews, who employ a capital of $25,000,000. In clothers' trimmings the Jews have $10,000,000 invested.

Ninety-five per cent. of the ladies' cloaks and suits sold throughout the country come from New York Hebrew houses, who annually turn and return $50,000,000 of capital. In the fur trade 50 per cent. of the firms are Jewish, and the capital invested is $15,000,000. The Hebrew controls exclusively the manufacture of caps, and on about 40 per cent. of the hats made he figures his profits. In the manufacture of silks and ribbons the Jew is at home. His capital here amounts to $25,000,000, and of the business in this line of feminine apparel he transacts 60 per cent. He is also active in the tobacco, sugar, and wholesale liquor traffic, holding large interests in each. Strange to say, the Jew is never found in the retail liquor business. "Gin mills" and "gin slinging" he gives the grand go by, and allows our statesmen of Hibernian and German extraction to run the saloon without his interference or competition. There is not a bar, I am told, in Gotham, presided over by a Hebrew.

Poverty of a Grand Duke.

The pecuniary embrrassments of the grand duke of Hesse-Darmstadt are of long date. His branch of the Hessian family used to be the smallest, and is still the least wealthy. But when the little potentates of Hesse-Castle and Hesse-Homburg were leasing the military resources of their states to the king of England and Hanover for service in America and Ireland, the margrave of Hesse-Darmstadt though the opportunity a good one to win the favor of the king of France. His successor owed his grand ducal title to French patronage. Darmstadt, his new capital, was modeled on a Versailles pattern. If Napoleon had held his own against the allied sovereigns he would have raised still higher the Hesse-Darmstadt family in the Germanic confederation. But as he fell the fortunes of the house underwent an eclipse.

Prudence and religion are above accidents, and draw good out of everything. Affliction makes a wise man patient, strong and enduring. Providence, like a wise father, brings us up to labor, toil, and danger; whereas the indulgence of a fond mother makes us weak and spiritless.

A SEARCH FOR A SWEETHEART.

A German Girl's Perseverance and Pluck Finally Rewarded.

The little village of Homburg, Baden, Germany, has something to boast of in the person of Lena Kratz. Lena was the only daughter of Burgomaster Kratz, the wealthiest man of the village.

Lena was the toast of the country for miles and miles around. She was a perfect model of beauty and grace. The fame of her exceeding great beauty was continually bring her offers of marriage from young men whose station in life was a great deal higher than hers. She refused all of them, however. She was about five feet three inches in height. A wealth of luxuriant blonde hair flowed in graceful disorder far down below her shapely waist. Her features were delicate and her beautiful pink complexion was the envy and admiration of some of her less handsome but more wealthy neighbors. Her rosebud mouth was always in a roguish pout. People wondered that she could hear anything through her small pink ears. She had everything that she wished for.

Until she was 19 years of age Lena remained heart whole. Then came a change. One morning a tall, strapping young fellow entered the village. He carried his worldly possessions in a huge cotton handkerchief tied to the end of a stout stick, and slung across his shoulder. He was so strong and good-natured that every one was prepossessed in his favor at once. When, therefore, he applied to old Burgomaster Kratz the latter at once employed him. The newcomer was a native of America. His name was John Duganon. He became at once the pet of the village. The maidens set their caps for him. Three months after his arrival it was understood, however, that he had fallen desperately in love with the coquettish little daughter of his employer. The capricious little beauty nearly drove him crazy. She would smile on him one day, and again for weeks afterward he could not get a kind word or look from her. He was not the kind of fellow to stand this kind of treatment long, it seems. One night he made known his love to her, and asked her to be his wife. To his great surprise she naively murmured "Yes."

There was a condition attached, however,—her father's consent. He went to his employer. "There is only one obstacle. Renounce your country. I can not allow my daughter to wed a native of the land whose people are continually insulting our beloved Bismarck."

The young man indignantly declined this proposal. He would never renounce his country.

"Then you will never marry my Lena!" shouted the exasperated old man. "You can also leave my house as fast as you can!"

John obtained an interview with Lena before he left the house. While she could not blame him for not renouncing his country, she steadfastly refused to marry him without her father's consent.

John left the village. He started back for his native land. He was sincerely mourned by the honest villagers. That was six months ago. Lena never ceased Triumphs of Surgery.

The gleam of light which has shed some radiancy over the gloominess of cancer comes from surgery. It may be said of the surgery of the present day that better results are obtained from the surgical treatment of cancer than was probably the case in any former age. Some operations are now being practiced which hitherto were not considered justifiable, owing to the want of success which followed their performance. Others have lately been introduced the practicability of which has proved the wisdom of their conception. Sufferers from cancer, who formerly would not have been relieved, are in the present day benefiting from the application of the principles of scientific surgery. Years of life—some years at least—and the mitigation of much physical and mental suffering fall to the lot of surgeons to confer. Even the stomach, which in the male after a certain age commonly becomes the seat of cancer, has been dealt with, and a portion of it removed which was diseased, the result being favorable in so far as suffering was relieved and life prolonged. It must be, however, remembered that the successful treatment of cancer depends much upon its early recognition as upon the means adopted for its relief. There should be no hesitation in ascertaining the nature of a tumor or swelling which is suspicious or uncertain. The improvements in the methods of diagnosis enable surgeons to recognize cancer in its earliest stages; and as soon as the presence of the disease becomes unequivocally demonstrated the probability of a successful result is largely enchanced by its early removal. The reason for this is obvious. Cancer commences in each person presumably as a local disease. But it spreads and infects by means of the blood vessels and lympathics, first the neaerst lympathic glands and then the more distant organs of the body. When this has occurred the disease is no longer a local one; it has become what is called constitutional. It is therefore manifest that the most favorable time at which to obtain the best results from surgical interference is when the disease exists simply as a local growth and when the blood and tissues of the body have not received the impress of a cancerous taint.

Zebehr Pasha.

In a sketch of Zebehr Pasha the London World says: "It is impossible not to entertain a real liking for Zebehr. He is the politest and most genial of hosts. There is a freshness and a frankness about him which contrast with the manner of the used up generation of Cairo Pashas. He is never tedious except when he starts off, with the bit between his teeth, on the subject of his pedigree. Then he begins with his great progenitor, Abba, the nephew of the prophet; and with a complacent smile on his large lips, and a rhythmic swinging of his body, he will repeat in a sing-song chant and in the genealogical style of a chapter of the Old Testament, the names of all his subsequent ancestors in exact order, from father to son, with all their guttural patronymics, to the eleventh century, when the Abbasides migrated from Arabia in

THE CZAROWITZ

How the Attainment of his Majority was Celebrated at St. Petersburg.

The correspondent of the London Evening Standard, writing from St. Petersburg on the 18th of May, says: "To-day being the sixteenth anniversary of his birth, the coming of age of the czarowitz was celebrated according to custom by ceremonies and rejoicings of great solemnity and splendor. The city was decorated with flags from an early hour, and a very pretty effect was produced by anchoring a whole flotilla of imperial yachts and launches, gayly decked with bunting, in the broad waters of the Neva, under the windows of the Winter palace, where toward 1 o'clock the court, diplomatic corps, detachments of troops of the guard, and deputations from all classes assembled.

The chief feature in the day's ceremony was the swearing by the young prince of a special oath of allegiance as heir to the throne, and the ordinary military oath as a soldier of the Russian army, into which the czarowitz enters to-day as a sub-lieutenant in the First brigade of the horse artillery of the guard. The former oath was administered in the palace chapel, in the course of a special service, by the metropolitan of Novgorod and St. Petersburg, in the presence of some fifty royal and imperial personages, among whom was Prince William of Prussia, and the corps diplomatique, the members of the holy synod, etc, The following are the terms of the oath:

"In the name of God Almighty upon his holy gospel, I promise and vow unto his imperial majesty, my most gracious lord and father, truly and without deceit to serve and in all things obey him, sparing not life itself to the last drop of blood to preserve and defend to the utmost of my reason, capability, and power, all the rights and prerogatives appertaining to tne high authority and power of his imperial majesty by law established, or to be established, aiding in all things that may contribute to the loyal service of his imperial majesty and the good of the empire; and as heir to the throne of all the Russias and the thrones of the kingdom of Poland and grand duchy of Finland united with it, I promise and vow to observe all the regulations as to the succession of the family establishment as set forth in the fundemental laws of the empire in all their force and integrity, so may I answer before God on the day of judgment. O Lord God of our Fathers, Ruler of Rulers! inform, teach, and direct me in the great work to which I am appointed! May that wisdom which is before Thy throne be with me; from Thy holy heavens let it light upon me, that I may understand that which is good in Thy eyes, and that which is righteous according to thy word. My heart be in Thy hand! Amen."

The second oath was administered in the magnificent hall of the military order of St George, where, in addition to the above named, were gathered the rest of the court, the troops, the pupils of the military schools, and others.

The oath was in the following terms:

"I promise before Almighty God to for his native land. He was sincerely mourned by the honest villagers. That was six months ago. Lena never ceased to love him. Her father died about three months ago. All his money was left to her. After her father was finally laid at rest Lena resolved to come to America. She wanted to find her sweetheart. All she knew of him was that he was in America. She arrived in this country a few weeks ago. She searched all the large cities throughout the United States for him without avail. The last place the faithful girl scoured was Chicago.

When she could find no trace of John there she determined to return home. For this purpose she started for New York. Last night she arrived at the Grand Central depot. The hackmen who surround the vast building when the trains arrive singled her out for legitimate prey. A rush was made for her by several of them. She became frightened. She did not know what to do.

"Oh, let me alone, please," the poor foreigner pleaded; "I do not want a carriage."

The only reply was the demoniacal yell: "Hack, lady? Take mine." "Hack? Any place in the city." She was being pulled about in every direction.

Suddenly a stalwart young fellow who had been sitting on the box of one of the new cheap cabs jumped to the ground and yelled as he ran to the struggling hackmen:

"Leave that woman alone. Do you want to pull her to pieces?"

His fists flew out in every direction. The mob jumped to ther feet and ran away.

As he turned around to the trembling woman he began:

"Please accept a seat——"

Suddenly he threw his arms around the young girl, and as he did so he cried:

"Bless my soul, it's little Lena!"

She recognized him almost at the same time, and cried out as she fainted:

"Oh, thank God, John, I have found you at last!"

He put her into his coach and drove her to his humble home in Harlem. He placed her under the care of his mother, after explaining who she was. It is probable that the happy couple will be married in a day or two, or as soon as Lena recovers from the fatigue of her long search.

Talk to your children about the Lord Jesus Christ, and the redemption which He brought into the world. Teach them what redemption is; impress on their minds the awfulness of sin; make them see that sin is real—a violation of God's law which incurs as its penalty the forfeiture of the divine favor, and make them understand that sin forever alienates the soul from God and heaven; be thus faithful, and they will not be careless and indifferent about their eternal destiny—no, they will be anxious to provide for the future.

Here thou art but a stranger travelling to thy country, where the glories of a kingdom are prepared for thee; it is therefore a huge folly to be much affected, because thou hast a less convenient inn to lodge in by the way.

tronymics, to the eleventh century, when the Abbasides migrated from Arabia in the Soudan. With some tact, his hearer may escape Zebhr's enumeration for the next six hundreds years. The descendant of Abbas is proud of his connection with the prophet. He is a pure Arab, which the 'nigger' messiah in Kordofan can not pretend to be. In truth, Zebehr would not be altogether displeased if you should suggest to him that he might do worse than run against Mahomet Achmet for the mehdiship. But Zebehr has lately become the object of new suspicions, and some people are keeping their eyes upon him."

The London Clubs.

Pall Mall is the resort of all the club men of England. Here are situated the most powerful and influential political and social clubs in the world. Hansom cabs in numbers come and go, dropping their occupants at the doors at one or other of the great club-houses, and about dinner-time quite a stream of quiet, well-dressed men, stroll down the street and are absorbed in these immense buildings. Among them will be the greater portion of the rank and wealth of the country. Every political celebrity belongs to one or the other of these clubs, either to the Carlton, the Reform, the Junior Carlton, or to the Beaconsfield. The Army and Navy and the United Service embrace all the men illustrious in arms; while the church and learning are represented by the Athenæum and the Oxford and Cambridge. Fond as are the people of England of Gothic architecture that style has no representative in Pall Mall. Here everything is classical, although the degree to which the classical architecture is adhered to differs widely between the chaste Italian of the Reform and the florid display of its next door neighbor, the Carleton. The one blot in the street is the property of the nation. The war office is altogether out of keeping with the clubs upon the same side of the way. The building is already doomed, and some day, when times are better, a building more worthy of its purpose and surroundings will no doubt rise in its place.

"Misther, misther, what have you done?" called a native of Wicklow to an Englishman who had just tied his horse to a telegraph pole. "Well, Pat, what's the matter?" "Jist this, your honor. Ye've hitched yer horse to the magnetic telegraph, and ye'll be in Dublin in two minutes if you don't look out?"

During the troublous times of the 1745 Rebellion an Arboath carrier was pressed by the Highlanders to assist in taking part of their baggage northwards. At the Rossie Brae his cart broke down, and after he had toiled hard in vain for some time to repair the mischief, he exclaimed —"Vow, me! fat a trouble it tak's to flit kings."

A celebrated Irishman wrs urged to write a "Life of Shakespeare" on very favourable terms. He refused, protesting loudly that his admiration and "rivirence" for that greatest of bards prevented him. "I couldn't do it—don't ask me; my rivirence for the immortal." He then added in quite a casual way—"Besides, I know very little about him."

The oath was in the following terms:

"I promise before Almighty God to serve his imperial majesty and most gracious lord, my father, according to all the military regulations, truly, obediently, and exactly; I promise to oppose to his enemies and the enemies of the empire a brave and determined resistance with body and blood, in field or in fortress, by sea or by land, combat and battle, in siege and assault, and in all military eventualities whatsoever. I promise to report whatever I may see or hear against his majesty, his majesty's soldiers, his subjects, or the interest of the empire, and to defend and preserve all these to the best of my conscience and ability so truly as are dear unto me, my honor and my life; I promise in all things to do as becomes an honest, obedient, brave and valiant soldier. So help me, Lord God Almighty! Amen."

In each case the emperor led his son to the altar which had been specially raised, whereon lay the cross and a copy of the holy scriptures. The youthful heir to the throne of all the Russias, though somewhat pale with emotion, pronounced the oaths without faltering, in a loud, clear voice

Jay Gould's Millions.

It was thought by many in the midst of the Wall street excitement that Jay Gould was on the point of bankruptcy, writes a New York correspondent. On the other hand, it is argued that a mere marking down of prices does not affect him in the least, because he is the outright owner of the securities in his possession. Believers in this theory look upon the great gambler's calmness as real. I have happened to get at trustworthy second hands, just what he said about it. Ex-Mayor Wickham said: "Mr. Gould told me to-day that in his candid opinion the bottom had been reached; but that it made no difference to him whether it had or not. He declared that he had no need or desire to sell Western Union at a low price, and that he had no intention of unloading any of his stocks. His wealth is in his strong box, safe out of the reach of panics." Washington Connor, a partner of Gould, or, literally, of his son George, laughed with exceeding scorn when I spoke of Gould as a bankrupt.

"I'll tell you one thing about Mr. Gould that I've never seen published," Connor said. "He divides his securities into two parts. The proportion differs, according to circumstances. One part he keeps in his vault as a permanent investment. That is his rock of Gibraltar. The other part he uses for speculative purposes. Of course, an emergency might arise which would call out the reserves, but that is remote and improbable. I assure you that, with the worst that ever can come, Mr. Gould will never lose more than half his fortune. Write that out in any way you please. Say something about his not trusting all his eggs in one basket. Liken his method to that of self-insurance. Put the fact in any form you choose —only make it plain that Jay Gould can't possibly be wrecked."

WITHOUT FOOD FOR 23 DAYS.

A Scotch Miner Whose Experience was Not so Comfortable as Dr. Tanner's.

As a measure of comparison for testing the genuineness of alleged cases of long fasting, the case of John Brown, a collier of Killgrammie, Scotland, who was sealed in a coal mine on the 8th of October, 1835, and rescued alive on the 31st of the same mont, may serve a good purpose. During 23 days this man remained in the depths of the earth without a particle of food, although various attempts were made to rescue him. After all hope of finding the unfortunate prisoner alive had been abandoned, a member of an exploring party in the mine fancied he heard a distant groan.

The men were speechless with fright, and, one of them, gathering all his courage, broke the silence by solemnly demanding:

"If that's your ain groan, John Brown, in the name of God, gie anither."

They listened, and presently another groan was heard, apparently a few yards ahead. They crept forward, and found Brown alive. His first words were "Gie me a drink."

Not daring to endanger his life, they merely dipped the sleeve of a coat in one of the little runnels which trickled down the wall of the mine, and attempted to moisten his lips with it. He, however, pushed it away, feebly exclaiming, "No mak' a fule of me."

His appearance, when carried to daylight, has been described as follows: His face had not the pallor of death or of a fainting fit, but a strange sallow hue, like that of a mummy. His flesh seemed entirely gone, nothing left but the bones, under a thin covering of leather-like skin. This was specially marked about his face. Every atom of fatty matter in the body seemed to have been consumed. He lived for three days. He said that for some days after he was shut in the mine he was able to walk about and supply himself with water, but, as he grew weaker, he fell, and so remained until rescued. Water ran down the mine near him, but he could not reach it.

I saw Dr. Tanner at the conclusion of his alleged fast, and observed that he was apparently in good condition and robust health. I also saw a specimen of his blood under the microscope, and noticed nothing unusual in its appearance, the stellate form of the corpuscles being very commonly see in the blood of healthy persons.

The Men With the Pig.

A few days ago two men, who were afterward found to be Detroiters, arrived in a town about fifty miles to the west of that place leading a pig. It was perhaps big enough and heavy enough to be called a hog, but they termed it a pig, and as they turned it over to the care of the landlord at whose inn they proposed to rest for the night one of the men explained:

"Be awful careful with that pig. He's a daisy—a new breed just from Scotland. We've sold him to a farmer out here for $50, and we don't want anything to happen to him."

The landlord locked the pig up and then

India of To-day.

India is in a state of transition, her caste and religion both passing away. The work before this generation and probably the next is to pull down and destroy. It will remain for those who come after to begin the more difficult labor of building up. We met at Benares strings of water-carriers, carrying brass vessels on each end of a pole borne over the shoulder. These come here for hundreds of miles on foot, and take back to their customers in the country the sacred water of the blessed river. It is a regular business and furnishes employment for thousands of men. Upon no account must this water be carried by railway, and be deprived of its healing powers by being handled by unbelievers. It must be carried by Hindoos of the proper caste on foot, or it has no virtue. Science invades everything nowadays, and the officials have recently had the water of one of the wells analyzed by a chemist—audacious dog of an infidel—and here he comes with his C02, and all the virtue of this water of life is gone. It is found unfit for human use, and the well has been ordered to be closed. The chemist, in the eyes of the ignorant natives, has sacrificed spiritual for physical health; preferred the welfare of their bodies to that of their souls, as is the custom with these wicked scientists. We pass booths in which native jewelers sit hard at work fashioning rings, brooches, and other articles of personal adornment. Their dexterity is marvelous; without elaborate appliances of any kind, with only a small blow-pipe and a few rude tools, they will take gold coin from you and before your eyes shape it into any form selected; but it is said they must have a model to copy from—no original design emanates from them. The booths, or little shops, are curious affairs. They are built of mud, with neither window nor door, their floor, on which the artisans sit, being about four feet above the narrow street level.

I never was more thoroughly impressed with the position of the European of India than to-day when pushing through the crowded, narrow lanes of Benares. Our native guide went before us carrying a whip which he cracked and brandished among the crowd, calling out, "Sahib! Sahib!" and the people, casting one glance behind, at once hurried out of our way, making a clear track for our august person supposed to represent the conquering race. The respectful salaams, as we caught the eye of one native after another, the respectful, not to say obsequious, attitude as we passed—all tells its story. That "all men are born free and equal" will not enter the Hindoo mind for centuries—not till England has brought it up to the standard of self-government, which it is gradually doing, however, by its schools and colleges. Benares has been famous for centuries for its manufacture of its gold and silver embroideries. I remember that Macauley speaks of them in his essay on Warren Hastings as decorating alike the court of Versailles and the halls of St. James. We went to the native village and saw the work carried on. How such exquisite fabrics come from the antiquated looms situated in mud hovels it is hard to understand, but they do. We saw one man who had no less than thirty-three different tiny spools

REPULSED BY A DYING WIFE.

A Pathetic Scene in the Cleveland Infirmary.

Some time ago a young girl giving her name as Kittie Sheridan, emoloyed as a domestic at the residence of Mr. John Tod, was taken so seriously ill that she was removed to the city infirmary, where she now lies very sick. Late Saturday afternoon a flashily-attired youth of about 25 entered the infirmary office in the city hall and inquired for this girl. The young man was extravagantly attired. White kid gloves were drawn tightly over his hands, and a white silk tie was artistically bowed about his spotless collar. His suit was a full-dress affair, and in his hand he carried a delicate little cane, with a gold tip. He said he had called at the place where the girl had last been employed, and learned that she had been taken to the infirmary. He handed Mr. Mellen a card, on which appeared the following: "Morris Strakosh, day clerk, the Windsor Hotel, New York."

He was questioned regarding his anxiety in the matter, and bending close to the superintendent's ear, whispered that he was her husband. He told the story of their marriage, and again insisted on seeing the woman immediately. Mr. Mellen doubted the young man's story, but the latter produced letters showing conclusively that he was the husband of the young lady. The first of the series of communications was very tenderly worded, but the last one received by him, and which in his anxiety to prove his identity, he turned over to the superintendent, concluded as follows: "And now I am going to die. You have not been a good husband to me, and I never want to see your face again. Do not come to me, for I will not see you."

Mr. Mellen telephoned the infirmary and Steward Braggins conveyed the message to the girl. He did not tell her that her husband was in the city, but said that he had heard from him, and asked her if he should come. The young woman vigorously protested, and the facts were communicated to Mr. Strakosh, who was wild with excitement. Mr. Mellen finally told him that him that he would see the girl himself on Monday, and would talk with her on the subject. The young man grew impatient, however, and on Sunday evening visited the infirmary and demanded admission, but again he was refused at the request of the young woman herself, and yesterday Mr. Strakosh returned to New York.

The story the woman tells is not a pleasant one. She was living with her mother and sister in Liverpool when she first met the young man who afterwards became her husband. He was from Germany and was on his way to America, but remained in England long enough to woo and wed the young lady. They then came to Hamilton, Ont., but not obtaining work they came on to Cleveland. Here they also failed to secure employment until she finally obtained a position as domestic in the family of Mr. Tod. Her husband remained idle, and the first $30 of her earnings went to his support. It was while at Mr. Tod's that she resolved to again take her maiden name, Kittie Sheridan, and as such she has been known ever since. New she is dying of troubles that she asserts her husband is responsible for, and a daisy—a new breed just from Scotland. We've sold him to a farmer out here for $50, and we don't want anything to happen to him."

The landlord locked the pig up and then began to think and cogitate and suspect. When the strangers had gone to bed he called in some of the boys and said :

"I've twigged the racket ; them two fellows are sharpers, and that's a guessing pig. To-morrow they will give you a chance to guess at his weight at ten cents a guess, and you'll be cleaned out—only you won't ! As the fellows sleep we will weigh their pig and beat their game."

Nobody slept until the pig was taken over to the scales and weighed. He pulled down 170 pounds to a hair, and the villagers went home and hunted up their nickels and dreamed of pigs and scales and sharpers through the remainder of the night.

Next morning the pig was led around in front, and before starting off on his journey, one of the owners remarked to the assembled crowd :

"Gentlemen, I'm going to weigh this pig directly. Maybe some of you would like to guess on his weight ? I'll take all guesses at ten cents each, and whoever hits it gets fifty cents."

This provoked a large and select stock of winks and smiles, but no one walked up until the pig man said that any one person could guess as many times as he cared to, provided a dime accompanied each guess. Then a rush set in. Three or four merchants put up fifty guesses each. A Justice of the peace took thirty. A lawyer said about twenty would do for him. Before there was any let up in the guessing about 600 had been registered and paid for. Every soul of 'em guessed at 170 pounds ! It was curious what unanimity there was in the guessing, but the pig men didn't seem to notice it. When all had been given a chance the pig was led to the scales, and lo ! his weight was exactly 174 pounds !

"You see, gentlemen," explained the spokesman, "while this animal only weighs 170 pounds along about 11 o'clock at night, we feed him about five pounds of corn meal in the morning before weighing ! You forgot to take this matter into consideration !"

Then somebody kicked the landlord, and he kicked the Justice, and the Justice kicked the merchant, and when the pig men looked back from a distant hill the whole town was out kicking itself and throwing empty wallets into the river.

Hygienic Experiments With Salt.

Experiments for the purpose of discovering the effects of salt and other condiments when used in cooking, have been made by Dr. Hussen. It is shown, among other things, that in cooking butcher's meat only an ounce of salt should be used with from six to twelve pounds of meat; if more is employed it will either modify the structure of a portion of the muscular fibre so as to render it more resistent to the action of the gastric juices or it will itself check and retard the peptic fermentation, the very groundwork of digestion. It follows that salted and smoked meats are more indigestible than fresh. Vinegar, it appears, may be used with good effect, provided it is not in a quantity to irritate the stomach, and it is a pure dilution of acetic acid, freed from sulphuric or hydrochloric acids.

on. How such exquisite fabrics come from the antiquated looms situated in mud hovels it is hard to understand, but they do. We saw one man who had no less than thirty-three different tiny spools to work from in a piece not more than a yard wide. All of these he had in turn to introduce in the web, and pass through a greater or less number of threads, the one starting in where the other left the woof, before one single thread was complete from end to end of the warp and could be driven into the pattern. The people of Benares also excel as workers in brass.

A Triumph of Surgical Skill.

On the 15th of March Prof. Loreta forcibly dilated the cardiac orifice in the surgical clinique of Bologna. The patient —E. L.——, a young woman of 20,—had for four years manifested all the symptoms, rational and direct, of ulcer on the stomach. For the last twelve months constriction had steadily increased ; at first solids and then liquids entered the stomach with difficulty, so much so that only a few drops of broth could be swallowed at a time. Regurgitation of substances swallowed became the rule. The body wasted rapidly, and life could only be maintained with nutritive enemata. Having diagnosed stenosis of the cardiac orifice Prof. Loreta proceeded to dilate it. He opened the abdomen in the linea alba, and found the stomach thick, small, and contracted. He incised it freely and passed an elastic sound through the cardiac orifice to make way for his dilating instrument. This soon overcame the obstacle in spite of efforts to vomit, and the æsophagus was found much dilated. The apertures in the stomach and in the abdominal wall were sutured separately. The operation was performed under chloroform in thirty minutes, and the patient, so soon as she had recovered from the narcosis, to the great surprise of the onlookers, swallowed three spoonsful of water with perfect ease. Prof. Loreta has favored us with an obliging note, stating that the patient has completely recovered ('ora trovasi completamente guarita')." Shorn of technicalities, these are the essential facts of the report : A young woman having become unable to swallow, in consequence of extreme narrowing of the opening from the gullet into the stomach, wasting of the body and loss of power threatened death. Prof. Loreta made an opening into the body over the stomach, then freely cut into it, introduced an instrument through the narrowed opening from the gullet, and widened it after the fashion of a glove-stretcher. The wounds were closed by stitches and the patient allowed to wake from her thirty minutes' painless slumber under chloroform. The happy result was soon proved by the patient swallowing three tablespoonsful of water with perfect ease, whereas before the operation she could only take a few drops of broth at a time. Recovery was complete within five weeks. As to the authenticity of the facts there can be no question, the operation having been performed by the professor of surgery in the university of Bologna, which is one of the oldest and most celebrated seats of learning in Europe.

Naething is got without pains but an ill ame and long nails.

Mr. Tod's that she resolved to again take her maiden name, Kittie Sheridan, and as such she has been known ever since. New she is dying of troubles that she asserts her husband is responsible for, and it was for this that she refused to see him. After leaving Cleveland he obtained employment as a clerk at the Windsor hotel in New York, where he has since been employed. The girl is a fair-complexioned lass, about 25 years of age, and has been very pretty. She tells her story amid sobs and tears and realizes that she cannot recover. They were married in September last and she has been in the infirmary since Jan. 9 of the present year.—Cleveland Leader.

The Kaiser's Life-Work.

The German Emperor looks upon himself as the first servant of the nation; and even now, with 87 summers on his brow, he works incessantly and unsparingly for its weal. He has repeatedly declared that the woes of the workingman sit heaviest on his heart, and that if he could but do something to better the lot of his poorer subjects he would deem that the close of his reign had been richly blest. The Emperor William has been called a prince of peace. He has done everything he could to appease and remove the causes of popular discontent in his own dominions, and even his foes will not deny that he is both the peacemaker and the peacekeeper of Europe. About sixteen years ago, in the course of a hot discussion in the North German parliament on the naval budget, Count von Molke said that there was only one possible way of converting the money spent in the service of war to the interests of peace, and that was "the formation in the heart of Europe of a power which without being aggressive itself, should yet be strong enough to forbid its neighbours from waging war." This wonderful prophesy has now been fulfilled, and the German emperor is the instrument of its realization. The German army is the police force of Europe, and yet Europe is content to profit by its passive services without much show of appreciation. But what Europe fails to express the German people themselves most warmly feel. No sovereign was ever more popular with his subjects than is the octogenarian kaiser. Berlin is a cold and unreverential city, but when the emperor drives through the streets the universal veneration of which he is the object lends them an Oriental air of worship.

France is ahead of most countries in the encouragement she gives to the commercial education. The senior students of the Paris high school of commerce are now off on their yearly trip to the manufacturing and commercial districts of the Nord and Belgium, where they will have practical demonstrations of what has been taught them in the class-room. For the best general report of the journey, the Paris chamber of commerce gives a sum of of money toward defraying the expenses of the successful pupil for a further and practical study of any branch of manufacture.

Learning, it is said, may be an instrument of fraud ; so may bread. if discharged from the mouth of a cannon, be an instrument of death. Each may be equally effective for evil.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, JUNE 27, 1884.

—The drought of the past three weeks has caused irreparable injury to the crops in this vicinity. The hay has been stinted in its growth and the barley has suffered greatly. It is feared the crop will be very light in this county, especially in the rear townships. There were a couple of small showers this week but not more than sufficient to wet the bare surface of the ground.

—The poor old Standard has even awakened to the realization of the necessity of saying something to bolster up the badly wrecked reputation of Mr. Uriah Wilson as a municipal legislator. It says there was no ground for our charges. If the Standard is not already convinced in its heart that there is ground, it may be before many weeks realize that there is a whole continent underneath the charges.

—Mr. Geo. Stephen, President of the C. P. R., has recently had built for him in New York the finest piano manufactured on this continent, at a cost of $4,000. It is now placed in his million dollar residence in Montreal. In order that Mr. Stephen should be able to indulge in such luxuries the Parliament of Canada last session voted him thirty million dollars. The people of Canada are nothing if not magnanimous.

—Our readers will remember that in January last when Mr. Uriah Wilson was seeking re-election to the County Council his strong argument was that he should be returned because it required men of experience to manage the proposed sale of debentures. It was an absurdly egotistical argument, but it had its effect and he was elected. The debenture sale was entrusted to him and he made a pretty mess of it. Figuring the loss one way the county has by his mismanagement of the sale dropped $630, and if a comparison is to be instituted between his figures and that secured by the N., T. & Q. Railway for township debentures, the amount is not less than $900. Mr. Wilson should try his hand again at selling debentures and then—well do something very ridiculous.

—Sir John Macdonald was in Kingston on Monday week, the day he was announced to speak at Adolphustown, but for some reason failed to put in an appearance at the latter place. The excuse of his frends was that important matters of state detained him. That may be the case, but isn't it strange that a couple of days later he could manage to tear himself away from Ottawa and go down the St. Lawrence for a six weeks' holiday trip? If he could leave the helm of state for such a long holiday he ought to have been able to have got off for one day to join the friends of his youth in Adolphustown in celebrating so important an event as the centenary of the landing of the U. E. Loyalists. His friends no doubt expected to hear him dish up the barefooted boy's story again and they longed to revel in the gush which usually accompanied it. It was really too bad that he should have disappointed them. But probably Sir John never had any great love for the scene of his boyhood days and since a certain event which took place last fall he does not give a darn if his friends know it.

THE DEBENTURE DEAL.

In resuming our comments on the action of the County Council in dealing with Mr. Wilson's management of the debenture sale, we wish to point out briefly wherein, in our opinion, injustice was done the public. The majority report of the investigating committee gave the Council no information as to the evidence submitted, but merely exonerated Mr. Wilson from blame. The minority report, on the other hand, was accompanied by the evidence and it was from this the deductions contained therein were based. This report was, we hold, a fair statement of the case, and had the members been prompted by a desire to do justice all round rather than to shield Mr. Wilson from censure, they would have adopted it. The report affirmed, what any man possessing a knowledge of municipal matters must believe, that it was the duty of Mr. Wilson, as chairman of the Finance Committee and duly advertised to furnish the information, to have answered Mr. Machar's letter himself and not trusted a matter so important to any other person. This cannot be denied. In fact any man tendering would not feel safe in accepting particulars from any other source. Mr. Wilson was the only person authorized to furnish them and he should not have shirked the duty. It is no excuse for him to say that the Clerk is paid for doing this work, for that is not the case. The Clerk is paid merely to assert that the real reason of the Premier's failure to appear at Adolphustown was that Mr. John Shields telegraphed him that he (Shields) was to be in Ottawa on the day the celebration took place. Singularly enough Mr. Shields turned up here on that day.

LENNOX AND ADDINGTON COUNTY COUNCIL.

The June Session.

The following is a report of Friday's proceedings, held over from last week:—

The Council met as 10 a. m. The Warden in the chair. The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

Mr. HAM moved the second reading in Committee of the whole, of the by-law dividing the County of Lennox and Addington into high school districts. He spoke at some length of the present state of education in this county.

The Council went into Committee of the Whole on the second reading, and reported. The third reading was deferred.

The Council then adjourned till 2 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Council met at 3 p.m., the Warden in the chair.

Mr. T. G. CARSCALLEN presented the first and second reports of the Committee on County Property recommending.

That $4.50 be deducted from the account of Brown Bros.; that the accounts of Boyle & Son., and T. H. Waller be paid; that the report of the Grand Jury be referred to the County Attorney to act, and that the petition of Judge Wilkison and others, respecting telephone communication, be granted; and also that the accounts of R. Light, $2.55, T. H. Waller, $3.97 and the balance of T. Trimble's account of last year, be paid.—Received and adopted.

Mr. DIAMOND presented the report of the Committee on Printing and Education recommending.

That the memorial of the County Council of Peel for the amendment to the public school Act be left with the Minister of Education to propose legislation, also in reference to the matter of reducing the number of County Councillors and changing the present law to compel the county to build certain bridges, they could not see any better method than the existing one. On the communication of James Mills, of the Ontario the Agricultural College, they recommended that farmers' sons should avail themselves of the advantages offered by this institution. They also recommend that the accounts of the County Clerk, $10.20, and T. S. Henry, supplies and printing, $22.35, be paid. They recommend the appointment of a board of examiners, consisting of Messrs. Burrows, Hicks and Deroche.

The Council went into Committee of the Whole on the report, Mr. Diamond in the chair, and rising reported the adoption of the report without amendment—Received and adopted.

Mr. SEXSMITH presented the first report of the Committee on Roads and Bridges. The Council went into Committee of the Whole on the report, Mr. Sexsmith in the chair, and rising reported the adoption of the report by amending the last clause recommending that the by-law to assume a certain road in Camden as a County road be passed—Received and adopted.

The Council went into Committee of the Whole on the second reading of the by-law, to assume a certain road in Camden as a County Road, Mr. Perry in the chair. The Committee rose and reported on the second reading without amendment.

Moved by Mr. REID seconded by Mr. WAGAR that the by-law be now read the third time, signed, sealed and finally passed —Carried.

Moved an amendment by Mr. J. C. CARSCALLEN seconded by Mr. DIAMOND that the third reading of the by-law be referred until the next session.—Lost.

The yeas and nays were called for, but the original motion was sustained on the following division: YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Ball, ment of Canada last session voted him thirty million dollars. The people of Canada are nothing if not magnanimous.

—Mr. Wilson seemed to place great weight on the statement of the editor of THE EXPRESS before the investigating committee that he did not charge him with jobbery. It is quite true that we did not make such a charge, but it is also true that we stated we had a strong suspicion of a job having been perpetrated. The reason why THE EXPRESS did not make the direct charge was because the evidence was not at hand to fasten guilt on the proper party. It may come yet, though.

—The Mail having stated that Sir Richard Cartwright's speech at Adolphustown was a political harangue, the Ottawa Citizen (Tory) says that after perusal of Sir Richard's manly utterances it fails to see any attempt at making political capital. It is not often that justice is done Sir Richard by the Tory press, therefore we take pleasure in making note of the Citizen's straightforward utterance.

—Will Mr. Wilson please explain how it is that he considers his sale of county debentures at $103\frac{1}{8}$ a good one in the face of the fact that the N., T. & Q. Railway Co. two years ago sold the debentures of Napanee, Camden, Sheffiield and Newburgh for 107? The rate of interest was the same and the debentures ran nearly the same length of time, but any difference that there might have been in favor of the Railway Co. in this respect was fully counterbalanced by the better security afforded by the county. If he had made as good a sale as did the Railway Company the county would have received an increased premium of at least $900. Mr. Wilson and his organs should wrestle with this question for a week and then let the public know the result.

—Some dissatisfaction has been expressed by visitors to the Adolphustown centennial celebration at the failure of the committee to carry out the programme of sports announced, and some people politically opposed to Mr. D.W. Allison, M.P., are trying to make capital by attributing the blame to him. They call it a "grit affair" and say that Mr. Allison was at the head of it. Nothing could be further from the truth. The men who put themselves most prominently forward in the management were Conservatives, and notwithstanding that Mr. Allison gave the grounds for the celebration free of charge and contributed liberally in other ways, they placed every obstacle in the way of his taking a prominent part in the proceedings for fear if the affair proved a success he would reap some political advantage therefrom. Mr. Allison had no more to do the arrangements than any other member of the general committee and is willing to bear his fair share of blame, if any is due, but no more. The failure of the sports was due largely to lack of experience of the committee in such matters. If the advice given by THE EXPRESS some months ago, to hold the meetings of the committee in Napanee and enlist in the undertaking the assistance of men experienced in celebrations, had been followed, we feel certain there would have been no cause for complaint. It is to be regretted that this feature of the celebration was not a success.

the Clerk is paid for doing this work, for that is not the case. The Clerk is paid merely to record the proceedings of the Council and to perform other duties which are clearly defined. It was Mr. Wilson who was paid to do the work entrusted to him, and if he felt himself incompetent to perform it he should have resigned and given place to some man who could have answered an ordinary business letter. What would the people say if the Finance Minister of the Dominion, who bungled a loan, should try to shirk the responsibility by placing the onus on the shoulders of the Clerk of the House? Is it at all likely that Parliament or the people would accept such an apology for such remissness of duty? Not likely. Well, the the cases are parallel, and how the Council could arrive at the conclusion that Mr. Wilson was blameless we cannot understand. We can only attribute their action to a desire to gloze over a scaly transaction and get rid of it with as little trouble as possible. But surely it is bad enough that the county should lose $630 by Mr. Wilson's neglect of duty without the Council giving encouragement to a repetition of the offence. This they have done. If their action means anything it means that the chairman of a committee upon whom a duty has been imposed can delegate it to an officer of the Council and if a loss is sustained the chairman will be blameless. This is an entirely new principle that has been introduced into our municipal system, and if it is to be acted upon the services of the Council may at once be dispensed with and the Clerk and his assistant left to perform all the work. If jobbery should then become the order of the day there would at least be a fund saved from from the salaries and travelling expenses of the Council to help make up the loss entailed. But if we do not greatly mistake public opinion no such principle will be allowed to prevail in the Council. The ratepayers demand that the business shall be transacted by their representatives whom they hold responsible for faithful discharge of duty. And Mr. Wilson and those who voted to sustain his action will find this out when they come to give an account of their stewardship.

WHY HE FAILED TO CONNECT.

[Ottawa Correspondence of the Globe.]

Various reasons have been assigned for the failure of Sir John Macdonald to put in an appearance at the U. E. Loyalist Centennial celebration at Adolphustown. It has been asserted that it was urgent departmental business that necessitated his sudden return to Ottawa, but that is absurd, because departmental cares never trouble the Premier. "Masterly inactivity" is his motto with respect to his official duties. But it seems that Sir John found that it would be very dangerous for him to attempt to make political capital for his party in the presence of Sir Richard Cartwright, and in a county where he was so recently unseated for corrupt practices, and where his candidate was afterwards beaten. Hence he declined to face the music. No doubt he was also conscious that his old "rum 'un to look at, but rare 'un to go" speech would not compare favorably with the learned and eloquent address delivered by Sir Richard. His well-known inclinations towards annexation, as expressed in his speech at the Conservative Convention in 1881, would also render him uncomfortable in the presence of an audience of loyalists. But a usually well-informed Conserva-

The yeas and nays were called for, but the original motion was sustained on the following division: YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Ball, Denison, Ham, Johnston, Lane, Lloyd, Mallory, Polley, Perry, Reid, Sharp, Wagar and Wilson—14. NAYS—Messrs. Bosley, Carscallen, (J. C.) Carscallen, (T. G.) Davis, Diamond, Parks and Sexsmith—7. The By-law was then read a third time, signed, sealed and finally passed.

Moved by Mr. HAM, seconded by Mr. WILSON, that the Warden and Treasurer are hereby authorized to borrow on their notes from time to time from the Dominion Bank here, such sums as may be required to pay the current expenses of the county until the next meeting of this Council, and in no case to exceed the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. HAM, seconded by Mr. J. C. CARSCALLEN, that the Warden and Treasurer are hereby authorized to draw an order on the Dominion Bank, of Toronto, for debenture No. 5, for $2,500, due Jan. 1st, 1886, debenture No. 6, for $2,700, due Jan. 1st, 1887, debenture No. 7, for $2,900, due Jan. 1st, 1888, debenture No. 8, for $3,100, due Jan. 1st, 1889, issued by the corporation of the County of Lennox and Addington and that the Chairman and Secretary of the Finance Committee are hereby authorized to countersign the aforesaid order.—Carried.

Mr. WILSON presented the first report of the Finance Committee as follows:

1st. That we recommend the adoption of the Auditors' report.

2nd. That we would further recommend that the abstract statement of receipts and expenditures with statements of assets and liabilities and the auditors' report be printed in the minutes.

3rd. We would further recommend that the abstract statement of revenue and expenditure for 1883 be printed in such form that it may be attached to the minutes.

4th. We also recommend that the Treasurer urge immediate payment from municipalities that are in arrears of taxes.

5th. That the account of the Treasurer for postage and stationery from June to Dec. 1884, be paid.

6th. Your committee have carefully considered the financial requirements of the County and estimates the expenditure and receipts of the fiscal year of 1884-85 as follows:—

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED !

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses.

☞ Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in his admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

BAY OF QUINTE METHODIST CONFERENCE.

The Bay of Quinte Conference met at 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon in the Eastern Methodist Church of this town. The Rev. Dr. Carman, General Superintendent, who occupied the chair, opened the proceedings with devotional service. Dr. Carman delivered a stirring and eloquent address, in which he referred to the difficulties and triumphs of Methodism during the past. At the close he stated that as the Conference was first called to meet at Picton, it was necessary to open there in order to conform with the act of incorporation. The meeting had therefore been convened at Picton at 7 o'clock on that morning and an adjournment was made till the afternoon at Napanee.

The Rev. John S. Clarke and George W. Webb were appointed provisional secretaries, after which the roll was called, when 131 clerical and 64 lay members reported themselves present.

THE PRESIDENT ELECTED.

The first ballot for President gave John S. Clarke 24 votes, John Learoyd 31, John Bredin 36, and James Curts 51, with scattering votes, making the whole number 194. A majority of the whole number being necessary, there was no election. A second ballot gave Bredin 72 and Curts 90 votes, with a large number of scattering votes. A third ballot gave Bredin 99 and Curts 103 The fourth ballot gave 105 votes each to Bredin and Curts—the chair ruling that as he was not a member of theConference he couldnot give a casting vote. The fifth ballot gave Mr. Bredin 101 votes and Mr. Curts 112, who was declared duly elected. Mr. Curts briefly addressed the Conference, thanking his brethren for the honor conferred on him.

THE SECRETARY.

The first ballot for Secretary gave Rev. John Bredin 125 votes; he was therefore duly elected.

The Conference adjourned till half-past six.

EDUCATIONAL MEETING.

The Conference educational meeting was held the same evening, Rev. Dr. Carman, General Superintendent, presiding.

The Rev. Dr. Bredin briefly introduced the proceedings.

Rev. Dr. Jacques, President of Albert University, addressed the audience, showing that as patriots, we are bound to diffuse education, inasmuch as it tends to ameliorate many of the sorrows and sufferings of life. Education also tends to prolong life; enlarged knowledge tends towards virtue. This is clearly proven by criminal statistics. In our educational enterprise we are thus working for God and for humanity. As Christians, we are called to do all we can in this work. Christianity and true culture are inseparable. The speaker submitted the claims of this society on the Methodist Church in the Dominion, briefly illustrating the amalgamation of Albert University with that of Victoria, and referring to the fact that Albert College remains in Belleville to go on with its work.

The Rev. Dr. Nelles submitted a resume of the work and wants of the several Universiversities and Colleges immediately under the control of the Methodist Church. The income from the western Conferences last year was about $8,000, and the aim is to raise the annual receipts to $15,000. The tendency of university life is towards growth, and the time never can come in the history of our educational institutions when they shall want nothing more; growth is a law of their existence, and with growth there comes a continuous demand for support. The enlargement of the professional staff and the equipment necessary for the several departments teaching of Holy Scriptures in the public schools.

Mr. Edward Kerr moved, and Rev. Wm. Pattyson seconded a resolution of condolence with Her Majesty Queen Victoria in her recent bereavement in the death of her youngest son.

The Rev. John S. Clarke was elected a member of the Transfer Committee, the Rev. John B. Clarkson, M. A., a member of the Alma College Board, and the Rev. John Bredin a member of the General Missionary Board.

THE MISSIONARY COMMITTEE.

The following laymen were reported as elected to the Conference Missionary Committee:—Belleville—R. T. Lazier; Cobourg—H. Hough, M. A.; Brighton—R. Scripture; Napanee—W. F. Hall; Picton—J. S. Lowden; Lindsay—J. R. Dundas, M. P.; Peterboro—W. A. Morrow.

The Conference adjourned at 11 p. m.

MONDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Conference resumed at 9 o'clock Monday morning. The usual devotional services were observed, after which the minutes were read and confirmed.

CONFERENCE ARRANGEMENTS.

The Rev. THOS. MANNING, B.A., read the following report of the Committee on Conference Arrangements, which, on motion was adopted:—The Committee recommend that the Conference of 1885 be held in the town of Port Hope; that each delegate pay $2 towards the expenses of entertaining the Conference; that the secretaries of the Manitoba district meetings collect this amount from each delegate and forward it with the names of the delegates to the secretary of the Billeting Committee stating who have paid; that the Billeting Committee provide a home for each delegate, either in private families, hotels, or boarding-houses; that any delegate declining to pay the $2 required shall be responsible for his own accommodation; that in case of a surplus arising it shall be handed over to the Contingent Fund Committee; that the President of Conference, the Superintendent of District, and the ministers of the town where the Conference is held be a committee to make arrangements for the public service of the Conference.

CONTINGENT FUND.

The Rev. JOHN R. CLARK submitted a series of resolutions for the establishment of the "Home Relief and Contingent Fund of the Bay of Quinte Conference." The motion elicited considerable discussion, and was ultimately referred to a small committee who shall report at a future session of the Conference.

EVANGELISTIC.

The draft of a constitution for a proposed Evangelistic Society was read and adopted, except the last clause, which was referred to the Stationing Committee.

The Committee on the Board of Examiners recommend that the names of James C. Seymour and T. J. Edmison, B.D., be added to the Board.

The Rev. F. H. Wallace, B.D., was appointed examiner for theological students at Cobourg, and Rev. Chas. Fish for the same purpose at Montreal.

On motion the Revs. Dr Jacques and A. Campbell with Messrs. W. F. Hall and J. Aylesworth were added to the Committee on Education, and it was resolved that the Committee be instructed to consider and report as to the future work of the Rev. A. Campbell as agent of Albert College.

The report of the Committee on Statistics was read, slightly amended, and adopted, as follows:—That in the absence of authentic reports from the different branches forming the Methodist Church, the Conference order each Superintendent, immediately on his rement of the professional staff and the equipment necessary for the several departments of science claim a continuous and increasing financial support. The speaker referred to co-education as a comparatively new feature in college life, and he hoped that Albert College would soon be filled with students and its treasury replenished with funds. Referring to the location of Victoria University at Cobourg, he said that if it were to remain there they would require at least $100,000 to erect suitable new buildings. There was a strong feeling in the west that Victoria ought to go to Toronto. In that case $500,000 would be needed for building purposes. In reference to amalgamation with the Provincial University, he thought that the advocates of that union do not fully understand the position. Their views are partial and one-sided. So grave a question cannot be settled without patient and prolonged study. Victoria University never would contract her sphere of operation to a mere theological school. The true theory is for the church to hold herself responsible for the entire education of her youth.

FRIDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Conference opened at 9 o'clock Friday, President Curts in the chair. After devotional services, which were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Bredin, the minutes were read and confirmed. The Secretary nominated the Rev. J. J. Rice, Assistant Secretary, and the Rev. Mr. Emsley Journal Secretary. The nominations were confirmed by the conference.

COMMITTEE ON NOMINATIONS.

The following Committee on Nominations was reported as elected by ballot:—Revds. John Learoyd, J. Clarkson, M. L. Pearson, J. S. Clarke, T. Manning Wm. Burns and Messrs. T. Gibbard, S. Wilmott, J. Aylsworth, G. D. Platt, J. C. Sherm, Wm. Eyres. The Committee was instructed to nominate Standing and Special Committees on Missions, Education, Memorials, Course of Study, Contingent Fund, Sabbath Schools, the State of the Work, and the Centenary of Methodism in America. The Committee were allowed to retire, and afterwards brought in their report on the above committees, which was adopted by Conference.

ONTARIO LADIES' COLLEGE.

Mr. H. B. Taylor, Treasurer of the Ladies' College, in Whitby, was introduced to the Conference, and addressed the assembly on the position and prospects of that institution. It was moved by Rev. Dr. Badgley, and seconded by Rev. Mr. Leach, "That having listened to the address of Mr. H. B. Taylor, and also the address of Rev. I. Tovell, a visitor of the College, we heartily express the pleasure given to us by their statements, and extend to the college our cordial sympathy and patronage.

The cordial greetings of the Guelph Conference were presented by telegram to the Bay of Quinte Conference.

The Secretary was instructed to send a suitable reply, and also to send Christian greetings to the Toronto Conference now in session.

The report of Alma College for the past year was read by the Secretary. The institution is in a prosperous condition.

On motion, the Rev. Richard Jones was added to the Committee on Education, and appointed Treasurer of its funds.

After an interesting discussion, involving the fate of several motions and amendments it was resolved that the next annual meeting of this Conference commence on the first Thursday in June, 1885. A resolution of thankfulness for the partial restoration to health of the Rev. Dr. Rice was cordially adopted by a rising vote.

On motion, it was resolved to appoint a small committee to act in conjunction with similar committees of other evangelical bodies to secure a place for the Methodist Church, the Conference order each Superintendent, immediately on his return, to furnish a correct report of the membership and connexional funds by appointments to his successors and also to the Financial Secretary of his district, who shall immediately report to the Secretary of the Conference; the membership to include those on trial under 16 years of age and the amount of salary.

The Rev. Dr. JACQUES read the pastoral address which was adopted.

The Conference adjourned at half-past four in order that the Stationing Committee should complete their work.

The Conference met at 8 o'clock Monday evening and was opened with the President in the chair. The reports of the following committees were read and adopted: On Sunday Schools, Alma College, on the Children's Fund, on Missions, on Temperance, on Church Property, on the Pastoral Address, and Sale of Church Property.

CHURCH PROPERTY.

The following properties were allowed to be sold, the proceeds to be applied according to the terms of the basis of union:—M. E. Church in Colborne, M. E. Church at Zion, M. E. Church in Castleton, C. M. Church in Providence, C. M. Church in Tamworth, Church at the Armstrong appointment, Church in Sydney, B. C. Church in Cobourg, B. C. Parsonage in Port Hope, Mallory's Church in Grafton, M. E. Church in Smith's Falls, M. E. Church and Parsonage in Campbellford, B. C. Church and Parsonage in Campbellford, M. E. Church and Parsonage in Hastings, M. Church in Lifford, B. C. Church in Lindsay, M. Church in Woodville.

SUPERANNUATES.

The Revs. Thos. Woolsey, John Ferguson and Eli Woodcock were placed on the list of superannuated ministers.

BOARD OF EXAMINERS.

The committee reported organization as follows:—Rev. John Bredin, D.D., chairman; Rev. Isaac Lovell, secretary. It was resolved that the examiners shall forward their manuscript questions to the secretary the first week in April; the secretary shall superintend their printing and distribution; the Board of Examiners shall meet the probationers and candidates in Brighton on the last Wednesday in April, 1885, at 9 o'clock a.m., and the certificates shall be presented to the successful candidates at the close of the examination.

HELP WANTED.

A memorial from the Official Board of the Tabernacle in Belleville was received, asking for financial relief from the funds proposed to be raised for embarrassed churches. The memorial was referred to the committee on the Centennial of Methodism.

A RESIGNATION.

Rev. Mr. MAVETY, M.A., tendered his resignation and asked for credentials of ministerial standing. The request was granted with expressions of regret that Mr. Mavety should feel it his duty to sever his connection with the Methodist Church in the Dominion.

EVANGELISTICAL AGENCY.

The report of the committee on the State of the Work, which recommended the employment of one or more evangelists, was received. The Stationing Committee recommended that the question of employing an evangelist by the Conference be deferred for one year. After discussion the recommendation was adopted.

FINAL LIST OF STATIONS.

The secretary read the stations as finally revised by the committee as follows:—

Belleville District—Belleville Centre, John B. Clarkson, M.A., Wellington Jeffers, D. D., superannuated; Tabernacle, James Curts, president of conference; J. R. Jacques, D. D., principal of Albert College; W. P. Dyer, professor of natural sciences; A. Campbell, bursar; Wm. Bird, S. W. [illegible], W. Combes. J. Ferguson go to college; W. H. Hudgins to be provided a station.

DISTRICT OFFICERS.

After which the following officers were elected:—

Belleville District—President Curts, Superintendent; Chas. Fish, Financial Secretary.

Napanee District—M. L. Pearson, chairman; and Wm. Breden, Financial Secretary.

Picton District—John S. Clarke, Chairman; and Thos. Pickett, Financial Secretary.

Brighton District—John Breden, D.D., Chairman; and A. Browning, Secretary.

Cobourg District—John Learoyd, Chairman; and Joseph Young, Secretary.

Peterboro District—Isaac Lovell, President; J. Anderson, Secretary.

Lindsay District—Wm. Burns Chairman; Wm. Emsley, Secretary.

Madoc District—O. R. Lambley, M.A., Chairman; F. B. Stratton, Secretary.

In the afternoon session the reports of the Committees on Church Property and the State of the Work were presented.

Rev. Mr. Clarkson resigned his position on the Conference Special Committee, in order to allow the ex-Bible Christian Church to have representation thereon. The name of Rev. J. J. Rice was then substituted.

Rev. Wm. Joliffe was elected a representative to the Sabbath School Board.

It was moved that the financial secretaries meet the day before conference to make their returns to the general treasurers of the connexional funds.

The Centenary Fund Committee urged that the fund be employed to aid in connexional purposes. Another item of the report asked that $2,500 be raised within the bounds of the conference to cover church debts, etc., half payable this year and half next. Referred to the special conference committee.

There was considerable discussion over the request for special aid for the Tabernacle church, Belleville. Some maintained that it was necessary to still hold the church, others that it should be sold. It was urged that the singling out of one church for aid was a bad precedent. Anything done in connection with the edifice must be done before the 1st August.

It was ordered on motion that each superintendent of circuit, seeing that there is only one collection for the Contingent Fund in the year, bring this collection well before the minds of his people.

THE PRESIDENT'S CLOSING ADDRESS.

President CURTS then expressed his gratitude to conference for its forbearance. He had not heard one unkind word during all the session. Of course they had been enthusiastic and in earnest, but had considered the feelings of every brother. He trusted that the spirit of Christian sympathy and love would continue and get stronger until the perfect day. They were now about to separate, and in the ordsr of kind Providence hoped to meet again, but if not he wanted to meet all in that grand and glorious region above. He trusted that Good would make this year the most successful they had ever seen. He believed such would be the case; did the conference? (Cries of "Yes, yes.") If it pleased the Lord we shall have it. The brethern should come to next conference bearing many sheaves, which shall by and bye be the stars in their crown of rejoicing. May God grant it.

The doxology was sung heartily and the President pronounced the benediction.

"MAY DEW"

The Great French Lotion for Beautifying the Face.

It conceals the evidence of age. One application will make the most stubbornly red and rough hands beautifully soft and white. Remember that "MAY DEW" is not a paint or powder that fills up the pores of the skin, and that is injurious to the skin, but a new and great discovery, a vegetable liquid, that causes the cheek to glow with health, the neck, arms and hands to rival the Lily in whiteness. Impossible to detect in the beauty it confers any artificial character. It cures Greasy Skin, Freckles, Wrinkles, Pimples, Black Heads, Crow's Feet, Blotches, Face Grubs, Sun Burn, Tan, Ringworm, Chapped Hands, Sore or Chapped Lips, Barber's Itch, Tetter, &c. It frees the pores, oil glands, and tubes from the injurious effects of powders and cosmetic washes. By its use all redness and roughness are prevented; it beautifies the skin, and will make it soft, smooth and white; imparting a delicious softness; producing a perfectly healthy, natural, and youthful appearance. The best face lotion that the world ever produced. We will send "A LARGE BOTTLE" to any address on receipt of price, $1. When ordering mention this paper.

SIDNEY'S FOLLY

CHAPTER I.

When John Daunt built the first cloth mills at Ashford, in Broadshire, the county gentry, who mustered pretty strongly in the neighborhood, had been at first petrified with astonishment, then boiling over with indignation. That their charming valley should be disfigured by those ugly structures of brick and mortar rising on its most beautiful sites, that their silvery streams should be stained with obnoxious dyes, that the streets of their quiet sleepy aristocratic old town, which piqued itself on its Conservative principles, should be overrun by mill hands, that their select but eminently dull society should perhaps be taken by storm by some objectionable tradesman who had made his money by broadcloth, was not to be borne with equanimity. The whole population—at least the "upper ten"—of Ashford rose up in arms; they would petition Parliament—they would show these upstart nouveaux riches that they were not to be imposed upon; they would send Mr. Daunt to Coventry, and take very good care that their doors were not open to him.

It was doubtful whether John Daunt was ever aware of the animosity with which they regarded his establishing himself among them. If he was, he certainly took no heed. The sites chosen were admirably suited for his purpose, the water of the pretty river winding in and out among the hills like a silver eel was excellent for dyeing, and no opposition would have prevented him from carrying out his plans. Swiftly and inexorably the great many-windowed buildings rose, with their outbuildings and boilers and chimneys. Presently the silvery waters in the neighborhood of these buildings became of as many colors as Joseph's coat, and on the surrounding fields lay great layers of wool drying and bleaching; long rows of pretty little cottages sprang up as if by magic; loud bells rang at stated hours, calling the mill hands to work or announcing their dinner hour, disturbing the decorous quiet of the little town; busy workers passed to and fro, the tradespeople brightened at the rapid increase of business. Mr. Daunt advertised for plans for a new church, the parish church not being sufficient for the increased and increasing number of inhabitants; and from a quiet sleepy indolent centre sprang up a hive like community.

But the climax of Mr. Daunt's presumption was only reached, in the eyes of the gentry of Ashford, when he purchased the beautiful estate of Lambswold, and settled there with his wife and little son. Lambswold had been for centuries in the possession of the ancient but impoverished family of Langdons; and the last of the race was heartily glad to find a purchaser for an estate which he had neither the means to keep up nor the inclination even if he had had the means. The sale itself was bad enough, Ashford thought; but that the beautiful park and stately Elizabethan residence should become the property of a tradesman was infinitely worse. To be sure, their views were modified a little when it became known that Mr.

languor which characterised his manner. His hair was dark, and slightly waved, but cut close to a well shaped head, set proudly upon his shoulders, and he wore a short thick dark beard, which made him look older than his thirty years. His dress was extremely plain, and utterly void of any suspicion of dandyism, but he wore it easily and well, and the cut of his coat showed that he patronized a first-rate tailor and did him honor.

The great iron-clamped hall door behind him was wide open, but Stephen stood looking over the autumnal landscape with a very softened dreamy look in his gray eyes and a little smile about his mouth, like the expression of one who has some pleasant thought to bear him company. He lingered thus for a few minutes; then he turned and entered the house.

The gray autumn dusk had crept into the great hall, and was struggling with the ruddy light of the blazing fire for the mastery. It was a stately, lofty apartment, with a floor and ceiling of shining dark oak, the latter massively carved, and a superb wainscoting and panels of the same wood. There was a Turkey carpet in the centre of the polished floor, the furniture consisting of high backed carved chairs, and oaken cabinets containing curious old Indian china; and a handsome black retriever rose up from a rug before the fire, and came to meet Stephen, wagging his tail in friendly salutations, and looking up into his face with pleading, beautiful brown eyes.

"Eyes like," Stephen Daunt began, half aloud, then broke off suddenly, with a little laugh, and a slight color in his usually pale cheek, which perhaps had been brought there by the heat of the great wood fire burning so cheerfully on the open hearth under the tall carved mantel piece, the shelf of which was about level with Stephen's head, as he stood tall and straight before it.

Perhaps it was the recollection of those other eyes of which Rover's eyes reminded him which made him bend over the dog and stroke his shining head so gently; but Stephen Daunt was very fond of animals, and they returned the affection with interest.

"How are you, old fellow?" he said cheerily. "You ought not to lie so near the fire; it will do you no good. Where are the ladies, Brooke?" he asked turning to a servant who was crossing the hall and came forward to remove his young master's overcoat.

"Her ladyship is in the yellow drawing room, sir; I have just taken tea in there."

Most of the sitting rooms at Lambswold opened into the hall; and passing through a little ante-room full of old china and bric-a-brac of various kinds, Stephen entered the yellow drawing room, pushing aside the heavy Eastern looking portiere with due precaution, for Lady Eva's nerves were not, or she thought they were not, of the strongest, and her son loved her tenderly and believed in her ailments implicitly.

The autumnal dusk which the ruddy glare of the fire had so successfully combated in the hall had obtained more mastery in the yellow drawing room, where the light of the wood fire was carefully shaded and screened. It was a long nar-

"Then why don't you pour it out?" he asked.

"I thought you would prefer waiting for Sibyl," Dolly answered. "You always say her tea is the best."

"You lazy little mortal! I verily believe you do not want the trouble of pouring it out!" said her brother, laughing. "Where is Miss Neil?"

"She is out."

"Out? Then we certainly shall not wait for her. Where is she gone? Into town?"

"No, only into the park. I thought you would have met her. She said she would not be long, and she has been gone nearly an hour."

"Well, I don't think we need wait for her," Stephen Daunt remarked. "Give me some tea, Dolly."

"Miss Neil was entertaing Mr Rutledge most of the afternoon," said Lady Eva languidly, as her son brought her some tea, and stood holding the sugar and cream while she sweetened it to her taste.

"Indeed," he said slowly, his face changing a little. "I suppose she required some fresh air after her exertions?"

"She said she did," Dolly answered laughingly. "Here is your tea my impatient brother!"

"Thank you, my Griselda among sisters," he said, taking it from her and going back to his arm chair. "How did it happen that Miss Neil had to do the honors to Mr. Rutledge?"

"Simply because he asked for her," Dolly replied quickly.

"Asked for her!" the young man echoed in surprise. "For Miss Neil?"

"Even so," Dolly replied sententiously, and there was a little silence, during which the girl's bright eyes glanced keenly at her brother's face as he lay back in his chair sipping his tea lazily, with an expression she could not quite understand.

"Did he remain long?" he asked presently.

"Yes, nearly an hour."

Stephen laughed a little, and the shadow which had gathered on Dolly's pretty face lifted slightly.

"It would be a most excellent match for Miss Neil," Lady Eva said, in her calm even tones. "He is very well off and holds a good position. If she refuses him, it will be very foolish of her."

"I hardly think she means to refuse him," Dolly remarked, with a troubled look on her fair young face.

"No, she is a sensible girl," rejoined Lady Eva. "Handsome as she is, she could not have expected such good fortune. Men do not generally care to marry girls who have no antecedents, neither family, nor position, nor money."

"But Sibyl is so beautiful, mamma."

"Yes; but that alone is not sufficient," Lady Eva answered. "She is too silent on the subject of her family not to wish to hide something."

"But one does not marry a woman's family—one marries herself," remarked Stephen cooly from the depths of his arm chair.

"But one likes to know whom one is marrying," Lady Eva returned quickly. "Mr. Rutledge is so hopelessly in love that he does not consider the matter

To be sure, their views were modified a little when it became known that Mr. Daunt's wife was an earl's daughter; and presently people thought it would only be right to call upon Lady Eva Daunt and receive her husband for her sake; and, having once done so, they found that the despised tradesman was a true-hearted, upright, honorable man, none the less a gentleman in the only true sense of the word because he was a clever man of business, who had to some extent indeed been the maker of his own fortunes. And thus gradually Mr. Daunt became the most influential man in Ashford, not only because of his vast wealth, but because of his great ability.

When his son was old enough to take an active share in the management of the business, John Daunt was elected to represent his borough in Parliament—the first Liberal candidate ever returned for Ashford. This honor—one he duly prized and appreciated—kept Mr. Daunt in London during some months of the year; but Lady Eva and her young daughter remained at Lambswold. Her ladyship's health was very delicate, and she was never so well as when she was at Lambswold. It would be time enough to go to London, she said, when she was obliged on Dolly's account; but Dolly was only seventeen now, and could not be presented yet. And Stephen Daunt, for reasons best known to himself perhaps, preferred Ashford to any other spot on earth; he had made the grand tour on leaving college, and had never cared to go away for any time since. He was thoroughly interested in his business, anxious for the moral and physical welfare of the "hands," and, if there were any other attraction which kept him at Lambswold during eleven months of the year, Dolly, with her bright blue eyes, was the only person who suspected it.

After all, it would have been difficult to find a more charming home than Lambswold. The quaint old house stood in the midst of a well-wooded, extensive, and beautiful park which always looked lovely—in the spring with its tender greens and budding leaves, in the summer with its fuller, richer beauty, in the autumn with its varied tints of brown and russet and orange, and in the winter, when the grass was covered with snow and the trees were hung with icicles glittering in the sunshine like myriads of diamonds.

It was autumn now—for the month was September. But few of the leaves had fallen as yet, for the weather had been mild and balmy; but the green of the foliage had given place to gold and brown and russet, and it was only the more lovely for the change.

Stephen Daunt, coming round from the stable yard, whither he had driven on his return from the factory, to see a favorite dog which had been ailing, stood still for a moment on the broad stone steps leading up to the hall door, and looked away over the park, which familiarity had by no means robbed of its beauty in his eyes.

He was a tall man of thirty, strongly yet finely built, with dark gray eyes, which, although their usual expression was keen, almost piercing, could look very tender at times. He was not a handsome man, but he was pleasant to look upon, and there was something very attractive in the blending of strength and tery in the yellow drawing room, where the light of the wood fire was carefully shaded and screened. It was a long narrow room with three tall French windows opening on to a terrace, and lighted in the immediate vicinity of the fire by two shaded lamps, which made a soft pleasant illumination at the end of the dim room. Two ladies were sitting there in the mellow lamplight. One was leaning back in a cushioned arm chair, with closed eyes and a bored, languid expression on her still beautiful refined face; the other was sitting on a stool, an open book upon her knee, and the light fell upon her as she sat, turning her pretty fair hair into threads of gold and touching a flower-like young face which bore a strong likeness to the other lady's lovely faded countenance.

As Stephen entered, two pairs of blue eyes turned towards the door and brightened perceptibly—eyes very like each other even now, although one pair was faded and languid, the other bright and clear—and two voices in glad tones uttered his name—

"Stephen!"

The young man went forward, smiling, and giving one swift glance round the room. Perhaps he was disappointed at finding his mother and sister its only occupants; but there was no trace of disappointment in his voice as he bent over his mother and put his lips to her brow.

"Mother, how are you to-day?" he said gently; and Lady Eva Daunt smiled languidly, and said she was pretty well, and asked if he was not rather early, and looked at him kindly with her pretty, faded blue eyes, very fond and proud, as they always were when they rested on her son.

It was always a subject of faint wonder to Lady Eva how she had become the mother of such a tall son, she herself being so small and fairy-like, like her daughter, who was a regular "pocket Venus," and who looked not unlike a pretty piece of Dresden china, as she stood in the firelight, smiling at her tall brother, in her pretty velvet dress of a rich crimson hue, with a quaint Vandyke collar and cuffs at her white throat and wrists, a most becoming dress to her flower like complexion and golden hair.

"You are delightfully early to-day, Stephen,' she said gaily. "It is so pleasant to see you!"

"Is it? That is a very welcome greeting, Dolly," he replied, in a low mellow tone. "I suppose you have been somewhat bored?"

"Just a little. You are in time for some tea."

"So I was glad to hear from Brooke," he answered, leisurely dropping into an arm chair near the little tea table. "Mother, I had a telegram from London this afternoon.

"I had a letter from your father," she said languidly. "He is well, and will return in a few day. I suppose your telegram related to business."

"Yes, partly," Stephen answered slowly, smiling a little, for Lady Eva's knowledge of business was absolutely nil, and her indifference equalled it. "Well, Dolly, is the tea sufficiently drawn?"

"Yes, I think so," Dolly replied, peering into the Queen Anne tea pot with a little laugh.

marrying," Lady Eva returned quickly. "Mr. Rutledge is so hopelessly in love that he does not consider the matter sufficiently perhaps, and Miss Neil is a very lucky girl."

"How lucky, madre?"

"To marry so well," Lady Eva answered, relapsing into her usual languor, but glancing keenly at her son nevertheless.

"To marry a man she dislikes!" Stephen Daunt said contemptuously.

"Why should she dislike him?" Lady Eva said plaintively, flushing a little.

"I know no reason; but that she does so is almost evident," Stephen replied calmly. "Dolly, some more sugar, if you please."

"I have seen nothing to make me suppose she dislikes him," his mother rejoined.

"Have you not, madre? Where have your eyes been?"

"I saw that she was flirting with Frank Greville," Lady Eva said, putting down her empty cup. "But that, of course, would be absurd. He is some years her junior. Mr. Greville would not hear of it, and Frank could not marry without his father's consent. Besides, Mr. Greville has other views for his son."

"Frank is hardly likely to let those views prevent him from falling in love," Stephen replied, with a sudden color in his face, as he impatiently caught up a little hand screen of peacocks' feathers and held it between his face and the fire.

"No, perhaps not; but those views would effectually prevent Miss Neil from giving any serious encouragement to his attentions," remarked Lady Eva, with some decision; and there was another pause.

Dolly glanced wistfully at her brother. He was sitting leaning a little forward, with a thoughtful, almost sad look on his face; then, meeting her glance, he smiled, threw aside the little screen, and rose from his seat.

"I think I will go and have a cigar before dinner," he said carelessly. "Will you have a turn with me, Dolly?"

"Yes. I have not been out to-day," the girl answered readily. "I will not keep you waiting, Stephen. Can I do anything for you before I go, mamma?"

"No, thank you, my dear. Don't stay out long," continued her ladyship, nestling back upon her cushions. "It is damp and chilly to-night."

Stephen had not to wait many minutes before his sister joined him; and they sauntered away together, Dolly's hand through her brother's arm, Stephen with a cigar between his lips. The dusk had crept over the park now, and there was a slight mist rising, but it was pleasant enough in the long avenue.

Both brother and sister were silent for some minutes, then Dolly spoke, with just a soupçon of timidity in her sweet girlish voice.

"Do you think Sibyl will marry Mr. Rutledge?" she asked.

"If he asks her, I dare say she will," Stephen answered hurriedly, some painful feeling making his voice rather husky and strained. "For goodness sake drop the subject, Dolly! I am tired of it. For the last month Miss Neil's matrimonial chances have been the subject of conversation everywhere. I am tired of them."

Dolly's blue eyes opened to their widest extent. Stephen was, in general, so calm and languid and even-tempered that his irritability rather surprised her; and she held her tongue discreetly, wondering what had annoyed him. They strolled on in silence under the clustering foliage.

"Was not that some one like Frank Greville?" Stephen said, breaking the silence at last, and removing his cigar from his lips as he looked after a man's figure hurriedly disappearing in the direction of the lodge.

"I did not notice," Dolly answered. "It would not be Frank though, Stephen, because he has not been here this afternoon.

"He may have met Miss Neil in the grounds, and remained with her.'

"Shall we go down the covered walk then?" Dolly suggested. "We shall meet Sibyl, if she is still out."

They turned into a walk leading from the avenue to a more retired part of the grounds, which was so favorite a walk of Lady Eva's when she was able to be out that it was generally called "My Lady's Walk," and one or two pretty garden seats had been placed there for her convenience. The young people were walking slowly, still arm in arm, and the tip of Stephen's cigar was burning redly in the twilight, when Dolly suddenly quickened her pace.

"There is Sibyl on the second seat," she said hurriedly. "She is resting I suppose."

"Yes, that is Miss Neil," Stephen responded, hastening also; while Dolly raised her voice and called out gaily—

"Sibyl, Sibyl!"

There was no answer, and the lady on the seat did not turn her head towards them.

"She has gone to sleep," Dolly said, laughing, as they hurried on; but the next moment, when they reached the seat, they found that she was not asleep, but evidently a prey to some overwhelming fear or agitation, which made Dolly run to her pityingly and put her arms round her.

"Why, Sibyl, what is it, dear?" she asked gently; and Miss Neil rose, looking around her with wild terrified eyes.

Even her intense pallor and convulsive agitation could not conceal the wonderful beauty of Dolly Daunt's governess. Her features were perfectly regular and purely Greek in outline; her eyes, now wide and wild and fearful, were "darkly, deeply, beautiful blue;" in stature she was tall and queenly, and the graceful form which stood swaying to and fro was clad in soft dark robes which fitted it to perfection.

"What is it, Sibyl?" Dolly repeated. "Are you ill? Oh, Stephen, she will fall!" the girl cried in distress.

"She has been frightened," said Stephen, in a low voice, giving the failing form the support it needed. "There is nothing to fear now, Sibyl," he added gently.

At first the gentle words seemed to have no significance, for the girl stared at him wildly; but the next moment she murmured something unintelligibly with pallid lips, the convulsive movements of her hands ceased, and her head fell back on Stephen's shoulder as she fainted away.

FOR THE FARMER.

How One Farmer "Struck."

The last year's crop of potatoes was a large one all through the country, and it became evident to a Central Massachusetts farmer, who reads the papers, that the price must rule low through the winter, and that his best time to sell would be directly after harvesting. Having decided to sell he approached a few of the grocers in the village of his town, and proposed to furnish them with a few hundred bushels to supply their retail trade, requesting them to let him know when they were ready to lay in their stock for the winter.

Supposing from their replies that he would be duly notified, he went home and harvested his crop which was a fine one. A few days later carloads of potatoes arrived from out of the State, and were unloaded into the dealers' cellars. On learning of the fact our enterprising farmer inquired, "Why is this thus?" and the following conversation, in substance, passed between the parties:

Farmer—"Mr. Grocer, did I not ask you to let me know when you was ready to buy my stock of potatoes, and did you not promise to do so?"

Grocer—"Well, yes, I suppose I did, but then I had no idea that you would be willing to sell yours at any such price as we can buy these carred potatoes for, from Maine and New York State."

F.—"But it was your duty to do as you promised before purchasing. Now what do these imported potatoes cost you?"

G.—"We pay fifty-five cents by the carload."

G.—"Then including cost of trucking from the cars to your cellars, and the loss of weight from shrinkage between the field where they were grown and weighed, perhaps two or three weeks ago, they must cost you about sixty cents a bushel in your cellars."

G.—"I suppose about that figure."

F.—"Now I have made up my mind to sell you my potatoes at sixty cents per bushel, and if you should have done by me as you agreed, the trade would now be made, and I should be hauling the potatoes to your cellar."

G.—"Well, if you wish to sell at fifty-five cents, what we paid for the others, we will take them."

F.—"No! But that is not what they cost. If you take mine you must pay me sixty."

G.—"Can't do it."

F.—"My dear friend, I am a citizen of the same town in which you are doing business. I am taxed heavily for the privilege of owning a farm, and living and working upon it, within convenient distance of this village market, and I propose at this time to show you that I intend to make the most of the advantages for which I am taxed. If your policy is to give your trade to farmers four hundred miles away, out of town, and out of the State, then I must protect myself as best I can. Tomorrow morning I will have circulars printed, and ready to distribute to every house holder in this village, and in those circulars I will state that I have just harvested a fine lot of first quality home potatoes, which I will deliver to families in five or ten bushel lots, at sixty cents a bushel; that I will receive orders by post-to load a light manure cart, with sprinkler for spreading on the land; such apparatus would not be very expensive; its cost would probably be repaid by the increased product in a very few years, and the labor of handling the liquid in this way would be far less than of loading and spreading manure in the ordinary way. Those who have used a windmill, and knows how cheaply and easily it pumps a large supply of water, will readily understand how easily the liquid manure could be taken care of in this way.

Such an arrangement would be very useful also upon a market garden where strawy horse manure is handled from the city in large quantities, and must be kept from overheating in summer. If wet down often with liquid manure from a windmill tank, it would rot rapidly, and be worth several times as much as the "firefanged" mass we often see on gardeners' premises in autumn.

The problem of applying the sewage of our large cities to irrigation is still puzzling the best engineers; the sewage could be used, perhaps, with profit in a dry summer, but what to do with it in a wet summer, or in winter, are still unsolved questions. It must be disposed of all the time, and the only safe way now seems to be to dump it into the sea at enormous expense and at considerable risk of filling the channels of our harbors.

Harrowing Spring Crops.

It was just twenty-three years ago when I wanted to harrow in a field to which access could only be had by the road a mile around, or across a corner of a field of fall wheat. I told my man to drag the harrow across the wheat. "It will destroy it," said he. "Never mind, I don't think it will; and if it does it is better than going around by the road." It was done, and the wheat was supposed to be ruined. It was a heavy straight-toothed harrow. But by and by a bright green stripe could be seen across the wheat where the harrow had gone over it, and when we came to look at it, the plants were taller and thicker than anywhere else. And when the wheat was cut the man remarked as we crossed the strip, "there's where we drew that harrow." Since then I have harrowed every crop in the spring—the fall grain, corn and potatoes. The harrow is a light one, with forty teeth, which slope backward, and it loosens up the ground about the fall grain, and mellows the soil for the grass seed. Corn and potatoes are harrowed as soon as the planting is done, and again when the plants first show above ground. Not one plant in a hundred is disturbed, but the young weeds lie on the surface in myriads. I have kept up the harrowing until the plants were several inches high, and if it were not for the necessity for working the soil my last years' corn crop would have needed no cultivation at all after the second harrowing, for it would have kept them down without help. I have learned to believe very firmly that the harrow is the most useful of our farm implements, and if we only study it and its work more we shall appreciate it far more highly than we do, and of course we shall use it more skilfully and profitably.—*N. The Woman's Toothache.

She looked in at the dentist's door, say the Lewiston Journal, and said she had a tooth she believed had a cavity in it, may be she'd have it out if he wouldn't hurt any. The dentist aasured her he never hurt anybody. She said she expected her teeth would hurt awful hard. They wasn't like anybody's else. He said he guessed that was so. She said she knew it would kill her to have a tooth pulled, for she couldn't stand anything. She knew she should faint or scream or do sonething horrid, and the like of that ; she always did. He said he didn't believe she would do so very badly, but she said she should. Oh, she knew she should ; she wasn't like anybody else in this world, and her teeth were awfully sensitive. Mary Ellen Jones could sit right down any day and have any amount of teeth out, and the like of that, but she never could, she knew she couldn't. She said she could fly right up through the roof to think of it. The dentist said she might take something, but she said she couldn't, she shouldn't dare to. She'd heard of a girl out west who took laughing gas and she laughed three weeks and the like o' that, and all the family went crazy ; and she didn't want to drive her family crazy, for if their girl went away they were going to break up this summer and go down to the beach, and she was doing everything she could to make it hard for the girl so she would go away, for she'd heard there was a lovely rink down to the beach and the like o' that, and she wanted to go. And then she asked the dentist if he thought her mouth would be a good one to fit false teeth to. He said she'd better sit down and let him look at the one that ached, but she said she guessed she wouldn't trouble him to-day. The tooth didn't ache any then ; she didn't know as she could tell which one it was and maybe 'twas only tired, she'd chewed so much spruce gum this spring and like o' that ; anyway she wouldn't bother him. She 'sposed dentists were awful busy folks. And she gave place to an unshaven man then jumped five feet in the air when the dentist pulled out a molar with inch fangs.

"I regard the use of beer as the true temperance principle. When I work all day and am exhausted nothing helps me like a glass of beer. It assists nature you understand." "It makes a fool of me," the friend replied. "That's what I say. It assists nature."

They chopped down one of the big trees of Mariposa, Cal., a few days ago, the rings of which betokened its age to be 4,300 years, and imbedded in the heart of the monarch of the forest was found a joke about house-cleaning and a man falling down stairs on a piece of soap.

It is not sufficient to constitute ourselves just men and women that we may strictly pay our debts, keep our promises, and fulfil our contracts, if at the same time we are stern where we should be kind, hard where we should be tender, cold where we should be sympathetic ; for then we pay only half our debts and repudiate the other half.

vested a fine lot of first quality home potatoes, which I will deliver to families in five or ten bushel lots, at sixty cents a bushel ; that I will receive orders by postcard, and will set apart two days in each week for filling the orders, so that all may be served promptly ; and further, I will offer to sell sample lots of a peck for trial at fifteen cents. I am going to sell my potatoes, and sell them as soon as I can at that price. I am not going to peddle them, but shall sell at wholesale price, and in wholesale quantities."

G.---"Well ; I suppose you may bring us fifty bushels."

F.---"No, my friend, that looks too much like peddling them to sell to you in fifty bushel lots, when you buy of the Aroostook County farmers by the car load. I will not sell you so small a lot as fifty bushels ; you are a dealer, and buy in large quantities, the way I wish to sell."

Exit Farmer, who calls upon the two or three other grocers, where a similar line of conversatien is carried on, with similar results. Farmer goes home, and prepares copy for the printer. Before it is finished a dispatch is received from Grocer No. 1, which reads in this wise :

Mr. John Doe, Dear Sir.---On further consideration of your proposition, and after consulting with my partner, we have concluded to take what potatoes you have to spare. You may deliver us two hundred bushels ; take a hundred bushels to the store next to ours, another hundred to the neighbor across the street, and if there are any left Mr.-------will take the balance. Believe me your obedient servant. RICHARD ROE.

The strike was ended without blows, blood, or bitter feelings.

Liquid Manure.

The Boston Farmer says:---Probably there is no one leak so generally neglected on the average New England farm as the waste of liquid manure. In spite of all that chemists tells us of its value, and in spite of the experience of practical men who have put its value to the test of trial upon their crops, the waste go on. The barn is located on soil with good natural drainage with the express purpose of getting rid of the troublesome wet cellar, and the very life's blood of the farm allowed to leach away to pollute the nearest spring or water course. Chemists tell us, and practical men confirm their statements, that the liquid excrements are worth more than double the average solid excrements of ordinary farm animals ; especially is this the case with horses. The question remains how to save them. Probably the small farmer who keeps ten head of cattle or less will find it most practical to use plenty of absorbents, such as forest leaves, dry muck, dry loam or sawdust, one or all of them within easy reach ; straw with us is too valuable, being worth now in Boston more than good English hay.

Where a larger herd of twenty or more cattle are kept, we are inclined to believe that it would be good economy to make a tightly cemented cellar under the stable, draining into a liquid manure tank, capable of holding the drainage of the cellar for several months ; let the windmill or steam engine, which pumps water for the stock, be connected with another pump with a small elevated tank to store a few hundred gallons of the liquid, high enough we shall use it more skilfully and profitably.---*N. SNAKE POISONING.

Dying by Inches after the Bite of One of India's Deadly Serpents.

Among many instances of snake-bite poisoning I have seen was a strong young Brahmin of 20, well-known to me, who had been bitten during the night while watching his maize crop. Ere I knew of it they had brought him into my compound in front of the bungalow. As yet he walked quite steadily, only leaning slightly on the arm of another man. There was that peculiar drowsy look in his eyes, however, as from a strong narcotic, which indicated his having been bitten for some time, and left but little room for hope now. He could still clearly tell me particulars. He had been bitten, he said, on putting his foot to the ground while moving off his charpoy in the dark, but, thinking the bite was that of a non-poisonous snake, had given no more heed to the matter, and gone to sleep again, till he was awoke by his friends coming in search of him. With some difficulty I was able to find the bite—very faint, no larger than a prick from a pin, but still the unmistakable double mark of the poison fangs. He felt the poison, he said, gradually ascending the limb, and pointed to a part just above the knee, where he felt it had already reached, the limb below that being, he said, benumbed and painless to the touch, like the foot when "asleep."

I gave him the remedies, and kept him walking to and fro, but gradually his limbs seemed to be losing their power of voluntary motion, and his head was beginning to droop from the overpowering drowsiness that was surely gathering over him. At intervals he pointed out the poison line steadily rising higher, and was still able to answer questions clearly on being roused. At length it seemed to be of no use torturing him further by keeping him moving about, and he was allowed to remain at rest. Shortly after this while being supported in a sitting posture, all at once without any premonitory sign, he gave one or two long sighs, and life ceased, about an hour after he himself had walked into the compound.

There was something terribly real in this faculty of pointing out each stage of the ascending poison (as the snake-bitten patient always can) that was gradually bringing him nearer and nearer to death, with the prospect of only another hour or half hour of life remaining to him ; and yet the patient does not seem to realize this with the keenness that an on-looker does, probably from the poison benumbing at the same time the powers of the mind, as well as of the body.

A master joiner in the village of A——— having occasion to go out on business that would detain him for some time, left instruction with his apprentice as to the jointing of some planks. "I want them so," said the master, "that not even a hair could get between them." On his return, he asked if the planks were done. "Oh, aye," quoth the apprentice, "they're dune ; an' I don't think a hare could get between, but I think it could get it's fit in."

If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man.

A Death Warning.

Towards the close of November, 1779, Lord Lyttleton had gone down from London to Pitt-place for the purpose of spending a week or two in field sports or other recreation, and he had taken with him a gay party of friends. On the 24th of that month he had retired to bed at midnight, after spending the evening at cards with his guests, when his attention was attracted by the fluttering of a bird, apparently a dove or a pigeon, tapping at the window of his bed-chamber. He started, for he had only just put out his light, and was about to compose himself to rest, and sat up in bed to listen. He had gazed and listened for a minute or so, when he saw, or at all events fancied that he saw, a female clothed in white enter—whether by the door or by the window we are not informed—and quietly approach the foot of his bed. He was somewhat surprised, and not agreeably surprised, when the figure opened its pale lips, and told him that three days from that very hour he should cease to live. In whatever manner this intimation, real or unreal, from the other world was conveyed to him, whether by sound of the voice or by any other mode of communication, one thing is certain, that Lord Lyttleton regarded it as a reality, and a message from the world of spirits.

The third night came, and everything had gone on as usual. The guests had sat down to dinner, played their rubbers of whist and retired; but none of them had dared to rally the young Lord Lyttleton on the depression of spirits under which he labored. Eleven o'clock came; the party broke up and went to their several rooms, wishing each other goodnight, and heartily desiring that the night were passed and gone, so restless, anxious, and uncomfortable did they feel without exception. Twelve o'clock came, and Lord Lyttleton was sitting up in bed, having given his servant orders to mix him a dose of rhubarb, though apparently in the best of health. The dose was poured out, and he was just about to take it when he found there was no teaspoon. A little out of patience with the valet for neglecting to have a spoon at hand, he ordered him to go and fetch one from the pantry at the foot of the stairs. The man was not absent from the room more than a minute, or possibly a minute and a half, but when he returned he found his master lying back at full length upon the bed speechless and motionless. No efforts to restore animation were of any avail, and no symptom of consciousness showed itself. His lordship was dead, having died on the third day, as the spectre had foretold.

A piece of steel is a good deal like a man; when you get it red hot it loses its temper.

"Poor John, he was a kind and forbearing husband," sobbed the widow on her return from the funeral. "Yes," said a very sympathising neighbour, "but it's all for the best. You must try and comfort yourself, my dear, with the thought that your husband is at peace at last."

AYER'S PILLS.

THE ASSASSIN'S HORSE.

The Steed that Bore Booth Away the Night He Murdered Lincoln.

Much has been written about the movements of John Wilkes Booth after he had assassinated President Lincoln, but the question has often been asked, "What became of the horse that he mounted in the alley in the rear of Ford's theatre and rode to the lower part of Maryland, accompanied in his flight by the young man Harold?"

At the time the tragedy was enacted by Booth he had for some time previous been a guest at the National hotel. In the rear of the hotel, on C street, and upon the opposite side is a large livery stable, which in 1865 Mr. James W. Pumphrey was, and is at the present time, proprietor of

Mr. Pumphrey, in conversation with a Washington Republican reporter, gave the following interesting particulars concerning the hiring of the animal which Booth rode on Good Friday, 1865, the night of the assassination.

Said Mr. Pumphrey: "Booth had been taking rides for six months prior to the day preceding the night of the assassination. He generally came to the stable in the morning, but sometimes in the afternoon. On Good Friday he came to the stable at about 1.30 p. m., and asked me for his horse. His favorite horse was a large sorrel. I told him the sorrel was hired out, but that I could let him have a small bay mare then standing in a stall. He said, 'All right,' and asked me if I would go and have a drink with him, which I declined.

"While the animal was being saddled and bridled, Booth, who always wore spurs when riding, stooped down and commenced putting on the spurs, which had been handed him, right near a pool of muddy water, made by the washing of carriages. I remonstrated with him for doing so, and asked him why he didn't put his foot upon a box. 'Oh! it doesn't make any difference,' he replied. He showed the same affable and pleasant manner so characteristic of him when coming to the stable, and apparently had nothing special upon his mind. He always wore one suit when riding, a dark blue suit, with a slouch hat of color to match. I saw him mount and leave the stable, but have never seen that bay mare since. She was a mare that could make very good speed, and as horses were high at the time I valued her at $240."

"What do you suppose became of the animal?"

"All I know about it is this: During the trial I was told by Harold that before Booth and he crossed over to the Virginia side of the Potomac they destroyed the horses they rode."

Continuing, Mr. Pumphrey said: "At the time of the assassination police headquarters were on Tenth street, where a military court of inquiry had been established. Upon going to police headquarters I was shown a spur, which I swore to having been worn by Booth. I was requested to be very careful in my testimony, and was asked how or by what particular mark I could tell the spur was the one usually worn by Booth. 'Because,' I replied, 'it is a fine steel spur, and as I have handled it so often I ought to know it.' I was then asked to select from a

AYER'S PILLS.

A large proportion of the diseases which cause human suffering result from derangement of the stomach, bowels, and liver. AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS act directly upon these organs, and are especially designed to cure the diseases caused by their derangement, including Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Headache, Dysentery, and a host of other ailments, for all of which they are a safe, sure, prompt, and pleasant remedy. The extensive use of these PILLS by eminent physicians in regular practice, shows unmistakably the estimation in which they are held by the medical profession.

These PILLS are compounded of vegetable substances only, and are absolutely free from calomel or any other injurious ingredient.

A Sufferer from Headache writes:

"AYER'S PILLS are invaluable to me, and are my constant companion. I have been a severe sufferer from Headache, and your PILLS are the only thing I could look to for relief. One dose will quickly move my bowels and free my head from pain. They are the most effective and the easiest physic I have ever found. It is a pleasure to me to speak in their praise, and I always do so when occasion offers.

Mexia, Texas, June 17, 1882.

The REV. FRANCIS B. HARLOWE, writing from Atlanta, Ga., says: "For some years past I have been subject to constipation, from which, in spite of the use of medicines of various kinds, I suffered increasing inconvenience, until some months ago I began taking AYER'S PILLS. They have entirely corrected the costive habit, and have vastly improved my general health."

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS correct irregularities of the bowels, stimulate the appetite and digestion, and by their prompt and thorough action give tone and vigor to the whole physical economy.

replied, 'it is a fine steel spur, and as I have handled it so often I ought to know it.' I was then asked to select from a number of hats shown me the one that Booth wore on the day he hired the mare, and after tumbling over several of them I selected the one which I have referred to. The spur was found sticking in a portion of the decorations of the box at Ford's theatre from which Booth leaped on the night of the assassination. I can not say where the hat was found, whether in the theatre or the alley where he mounted and rode off. I never received any compensation for the loss of the mare.

"On the night of the assassination several of the government detectives came to my stable, and I was the first one to give them a clew to the whereabouts of Payne, Booth, and Harold. I told them to go first to the residence of John Surratt's mother, on H street, and there to Surrattsville. The result of this clew is, of course, familiar to everybody."

It is a mournful picture that Christ becomes a stranger to his own friends, and is excluded from his own house.

"How fresh and green everything looks,' murmured Claribel, as they wandered alone the road. "Everything?" questioned Adolphus, looking down into her violet eyes. "Yes, everything," she replied abstractedly. He wanders with another girl now.

Complain as we may

About our lot in life, we cannot deny that any are exempt by their position from the common lot of pain and suffering. The highest, as well as the most humble, must ever on the alter to take advantage of such means as will relieve when pain makes relief a necessity to our comfort. By a letter from "Government House, Ottawa," asking for a supply of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, we are reminded of two things; first that corns are universal, and secondly that Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor is recognized by all classes as the most certain painless, and non poisonous remedy, for corns. Beware of the article but as good, and use only Putnam's Extractor.

"LADIES' JOURNAL"

BIBLE COMPETITION

No. 7,

CLOSING SEPTEMBER 11.

OPEN TO THE WORLD.

GREAT CLUB OFFER.

The Leading Rewards are Lot 50x150 at Toronto Junction, Pianos, Organs, Sewing Machines. Gold and Silver Watches, Silver Tea Sets, &c.

The proprietor of the Ladies Journal now announces a magnificent list of rewards for correct answers to Bible questions. It is surprising how little is known of the Bible. The questions are not so difficult this time as last, and there should be a hearty response. It was announced in the June issue of the Ladies' Journal that the competition which closed last month would be the last for the present, but it has been decided to try one more.

All money must be sent by post office or express. No information will be given to any one more than is stated here. So send on answers, and don't waste time writing. Do not send postage stamps unless six cents is added for the discount. Remit by postoffice order, script or small coin.

THE BIBLE QUESTIONS

1.—Mention the case of a man who was sorry for loosing what he had borrowed?

2.—Mention the names of a king, a counsellor, and a scoundrel who committed suicide?

3.—Where is mention made in the Bible of a man who had on each hand six fingers and on each foot six toes?

Now, any one having a knowledge of the Scriptures ought to be able promptly to answer these questions with a little study, and so secure some one of those rewards. Bear in mind every one competing must send FIFTY CENTS with their answers, for which the Ladies' Journal will be sent one year to any address. If you answer each of the questions correctly and your answers are in in time you are sure to secure one of these costly rewards.

North American Life Assurance Company of Toronto.

Among the truest indications and best evidence of the financial status of a country is included the condition of its life companies. In this respect Canada is at present specially favored. The companies in that country have of late made great progress, and the North American Life is among the most progressive companies. Its development, considering the great competition existing in the life business, has been something marvellous, and at its present progress it bids fair in a very few years to take a leading position in the issue of new business in Canada. There is a cause for everything, and there is no doubt in this case the true reason of the North American Life meeting with such high appreciation from the insuring public is owing to its very marked endeavor to place within the reach of all those desiring the great benefit of life insurance all the most popular plans attainable, so that when a person requires an investment or maximum insurance for minimum outlay he can secure it with the North American Life Assurance Society.

No doubt the success of this company is largely due to its management being in the hands of an accomplished underwriter, Wm. McCabe, Fellow of the Institute of Actuaries of Great Britain, a gentleman who has the reputation of being thoroughly acquainted with all the mysteries and science of life insurance. Among its directors are to be found the names of some of the leading citizens of Canada, and at its head as president stands the Hon Alex. Mackenzie, M P., ex Prime Minister of Canada, a gentleman whose name in that country is a household word for honesty and fair dealing. New York Insurance Spectator, May 15th, 1884

A Sure Remedy for Neuralgia.

Neuralgia is one of the most common and distressing complaints incidental to this clima . It is not confined to any particular season, for whilst most general in the winter seasons, yet many suffer its excruciating agony in the heat of summer. In late years this form of disease has become better known, and consequently the means of relief have become greatly increased in numbers, as well an efficacy. Among the most powerful and penetrating combinations, placed within the reach of the public for the relief of neuralgia, we can mention no remedy equal to or more certain than Polson's NERVILINE. Its power over pain is something wonderful, and we advise a trial for neuralgia, or any other painful complaints. Nerviline is sold by all druggists at 25 cents a bottle, also trial bottles at 10 cents.

When you fume and fret at the petty ills of life, remember that the wheels which go round without creaking last longest.

Oh! how tired and weak I feel, I don't believe I will ever get through the Spring house-cleaning! Oh yes you will, if you take a bottle or two of Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters to purify the blood and tone up the system In large bottles 50 cents.

212 to 479—Two hundred and sixty-eight solid Rolled Gold Brooches, beautiful patterns	670 00
480 to 532—Fifty-three Triple Silver-plate Butter Knives	53 00

The lot at West Toronto above described will be given to the person sending the middle correct answer of the whole competition from first to last, and the five hundred and thirty-one rewards following the middle one will be presented to the five hundred and thirty-one persons sending the next correct answers following the middle one. So you can compete any time and be almost sure to get something in addition to the Ladies' Journal, which is great value for the half dollar subscription. Then below the CONSOLATION REWARDS.

1—The gentleman's solid gold stem-winding and stem-setting genuine Elgin Watch	$100 00
2—One fine quadruple plate Silver Tea Set, 6 pieces	100 00
3—One ladies' solid gold stem-winding and stem-setting genuine Elgin Watch	95 00

70 to 100—Thirty-one beautiful bound volumes Hood's Poems	93 00
101 to 157—Fifty-seven fine rolled gold Brooches	171 00

The list of consolation rewards will be given to the last one hundred and fifty-seven persons who send correct answers to the Bible questions given above. But bear in mind, your letter must bear the postmark where mailed of 11th September, the closing day of the competition. Fifteen days will be allowed after closing day for letters, from distant points to reach the Ladies' Journal office. But you can, of course, send in any time between now and the 11th of September, and your letter will take its place at the publication office in the order it arrives there. All letters are carefully numbered as they arrive, and there can be no mistake. If your answers are correct, and they reach there in time, you will surely get some reward in addition to The Ladies Journal which alone is big value for the half dollar. If you don't get anything but the Journal you will be well pleased with your investment, as it consists of 20 pages of fashions, illustrated, short and serial stories, poetry, newest music, household hints, etc., etc.; in fact, just the paper to suit every lady.

By subscribing in a club with your neighbours you will secure some considerable advantage—that is, there must be least thirty of a club, and all who send correct answers to the Bible questions may have their choice of a handsome ring, heavily gold-plated ladies' gold brooch, which retails at about one dollar and a half, or a triple-plated butter knife. Either of these you may wish will be sent postage paid. You will thus secure to a certainty one or other of those two presents, and in addition will have as good an opportunity of gaining some one of the other large rewards in lists given above just as well as though you had sent in singly. This is simply an inducement to get up clubs. We are sure our readers could not do better than to try their skill in hunting up these questions and competing for these rewards. Everything will be carried out exactly as promised.

Prizes in last competition went all over Canada and to many parts of the United States.

Accident on the N., T. & Q. Railway.

While seven cars were coming down the grade from the gravel pit Wednesday afternoon they got out of the control of the brakesmen and commenced to run at a terrific speed. The driver of the engine on the road heard them coming and suspecting something was wrong put his engine in motion. He was too late however to escape them and they ran into the engine with a terrible crash. Two of the cars were entirely broken up but luckily the engine escaped damage. This is the most serious casuality that has happened yet upon the road.

Serious Runaway Accident.

On Sunday last as the Misses Slush and Miss Bird of Stoco, and Mrs. Elliot of South Fredericksburgh, returning home from the country where they had been visiting, reached the market square it was thought best to give the horse a drink. They stopped at the pump on the square and Mrs. Elliot jumped out, handing her baby to Miss Bird. She undid the bit to allow the horse to drink, but just at that moment a parasol frightened the animal, which dashed down Centre-st. When it reached the corner of Dundas and Centre streets it turned sharply, throwing out the occupants. The horse then ran down Dundas-st., where it was caught. Miss Bird was the most severely injured, it being found upon examination that both of her wrists were broken. The child of Mrs. Elliot, which was in the arms of one of the young ladies, was stunned, but escaped further injury. Miss Slush sustained a severe sprain of the ankle. The other young lady was uninjured. The buggy was pretty badly smashed.

St. John's Day.

The Freemasons of Centreville and surrounding district celebrated the festival of St. John the Baptist at that village on Tuesday last. Napanee was represented by Messrs. Ogden Hinch, C. Z. Perry, J. Walters, Wm. Shannon, W. C. Scott and Mayor Joy. The representatives marched in a body to the Methodist Church where Rev. Mr. Smith, Presbyterian minister, preached an able and instructive sermon appropriate to the occasion. The annual installation of the officers of Victoria Lodge, No. 299 of Centreville, was then proceeded with, conducted by Ogden Hinch, P. M., of Napanee. The following were installed:—H. A. Baker, I. P. M.; A. Wilde, W. M.; W. J. Mulholland, S. W.; Wm Lockridge, J. W.; J. D. Wagar, Sec.; W. A. Rombough, Treas.; J. B. Lucas, L. D.; E. H. Perry, J. D.; Seymore Keller, I. G.; A. Walsh, O. G. Dinner was afterwards served by Mr. D. P. Clute in the Town Hall in his well known excellent style. A notable feature of the dinner was the presence of a large number of ladies. All were highly pleased with the day's proceedings.

Stabbing Affray near Lonsdale.

On Tuesday a serious stabbing affray which may yet have a fatal result took place at a logging bee at Michael Kennedy's in the 4th concession of Tyendinaga, about half mile north west of Lonsdale. Jack McAuley and James Alexander, both considerably under the influence of liquor, quarreled over some old feud they had, and others joined in. They were pacified for a short time but soon renewed the quarrel. One Lilian Pomeroy are unsurpassed.

—A couple of attempts were made last week to burglarize houses but in both cases the burglars were frightened away.

—The regular meeting of the Town Council will be held next Monday night unless the heat prevents a quorum from being formed.

—No. 4 troop of cavalry of Napanee and district went to Kingston on Tuesday where twelve days' drill is to be held on Barriefield Commons.

—Residents living along the river above the covered bridge complain that parties who go in bathing, break down the fences and do other damage.

—Last week a child only a few days old was left at the door of a prominent resident of Centreville. The township council is now providing for it.

—Messrs. Robt. McDonald and Amos Kimmerly are this week putting in annual drill at Trenton with the 49th Batt. of Belleville, of which they are members.

—To-morrow being the 28th of June, the day appointed for observance of Her Majesty's birthday, will be recognized as a bank holiday throughout the Dominion.

—Rev. G. E. Benn will hold service on Sunday in the Town Hall every fortnight at 2:30 p. m. He will discourse next Sunday on "Baptism." All are cordially invited.

—As there is to be no celebration in town on Tuesday next (Dominion Day) our townspeople will likely avail themselves of the attractions offered at Kingston and other places.

—The St. Lawrence base ball club of Kingston, have made arrangements with the Newburgh club for a match on Dominion Day. The Newburghers are old hands at the business.

—The following were appointed officers of the Napanee Cornet Band at a meeting held a short time ago: W. R. Mitchell, Pres.; Amos Kimmerly, Treas.; William Burns, Sec.

—Capt. McCracken of the Salvation Army, formerly of Napanee, has been gaoled in Grand Rapids. Her conduct has merited the publication of her portrait in the War Cry.

—We understand it is the intention of some of our bicyclists to compete in the Meet and Tournament of the Canadian Wheelmen's Association to be held in Toronto on July 1st. We wish them every success.

—The Oddfellows are looking forward with great anticipation to the International Demonstration to be held at Brockville on the 9th, 10th and 11th of July. The arrangements are being completed and it is expected to be the greatest demonstration ever held in the St. Lawrence district. The medals to be given for athletic sports are now on exhibition in F. W. Smith's window.

—On Saturday last as Rev. Mr. Phillips of Morven, accompanied by Mr. German of Picton, was driving into town, the horse turned into a lane which it had been accustomed to enter, and the buggy overturning, the gentlemen were thrown out. They alighted within a few inches of a telegraph pole, which, had they struck, would no doubt have caused serious injuries. As it was they were pretty badly bruised.

—Rev. Mr. Duprau being about to remove from Morven offers for sale at the parsonage, Morven, the following articles of furniture, etc.:—Parlor suite, book case, dining room furniture and house-keeping utensils; also a quantity of wood and a horse and buggy. These must be disposed of before the 9th of July. Intending purchasers can examine them at any time. 32-2.

be effected in the bearing of some of our young men.

—Mr. W. D. Madden is going to enlarge his stock of organs. He has some of the finest instruments on hand now that have ever been seen in Napanee, and in a short time will receive some of a different style. One of the new styles will be with a pipe top of most elegant design and finish. These instruments have only to be seen to be appreciated.

—The Chautauqua movement has been extended to include the young folks, who already have a "Reading Union." They are now to have an illustrated periodical of high character, which will be issued in July by the publishers of the far-famed Wide Awake magazine, D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, who will send it free for two months to any of our readers who may request it.

—The 47th battalion band have secured the services of Mr. Wright of Kingston, formerly in "B" Battery band. He is an experienced cornetist and will prove a valuable acquisition to the band. They have received new selections of music this week. They will play on Dundas-st. this (Friday) evening instead of Saturday evening on account of the absence from town of their leader, Mr. Brooks.

—The ropes that hung Tompsett and Lowder in Picton have been cut into little pieces, and in nearly every house in Prince Edward an inch or so of strand, neatly knotted, is to be seen. Young ladies talk silly about the little bit of hemp and declare, with an ugh! "I wouldn't touch it for anything." A prominent merchant in Picton says if the demand continues he has a coil of rope that may be utilized. Who'd know the difference?

—The Napanee Cornet Band made their first appearance on the street on Saturday evening in their new uniforms, which are very neat and elegant. The material is of navy blue; sack coats buttoned close with small turn down collar, heavy gold cord on sleeves and shoulders and gold buttons; the pants have wide gold braid down the sides and the cap is the Gilmore pattern with gold cord reaching over the top. They were furnished by the clothing house of A. Rose & Co., and are models of workmanship. The playing of the band was much admired.

—Rev. J. J. Leach of Odessa was down on the first draft of stations for the Tabernacle, Belleville, but a change was subsequently made and Rev. Mr. Curts, President of the Conference, was given the Belleville post and Mr. Leach left in Odessa. The good people of Odessa are greatly rejoiced that Mr. Leach is to remain with them for he is dearly beloved by all. We may state that the proposed promotion to Belleville was quite unsolicited by Mr. Leach and that while he fully appreciates the good opinion formed of him by the stationing committee is satisfied to be left where he is, as he believes the President is entitled to the larger field.

—The Orangemen of Lennox and Addington will celebrate the 19th anniversary of their order on the 12th July, by a grand picnic and concert in the maple grove on Basswood hill near Centreville. At 11 a. m., a promenade concert; from 12 to 1, dinner, and at 1:15 the concert of the day will begin. The artists in the concert will be Mrs. McCullough, nee Miss Barr of Hamilton, Miss Burton of Kingston; Rev. H. G. Parker of Toronto; Miss Shibley of Newburgh and Miss Armstrong the wonderful whistler of New York. An oration will also be delivered by a gentleman selected for the occasion. The 47th Batt. Band will also be present.

Good the Year Round.

time but soon renewed the quarrel. One Joe Morden knocked McAuley off a fence but he arose quickly and commenced a tussle with Morden, stabbing him at the same time. The night was dark and the knife was not noticed until Morden had received about twenty cuts. Two of these were very severe, one being in the neck near the jugular vein and the other over one of his lungs. Morden walked about twelve feet and then fell. Drs. Redner of Lonsdale, Clinton of Deseronto and Donovan of Melrose were immediately sent for and dressed the wounds. The cut on the side is more dangerous than was first thought, it being large and leaving the lung exposed. If inflammation can be prevented the doctors think he will pull through. No arrests have yet been made. McAuley escaped and has not yet been captured.

Dominion Day at Enterprise.

The good people of Enterprise have arranged for a grand celebration on Dominion Day in that village. A most highly interesting and amusing programme has been prepared at a large expense and it is one calculated to afford an entertainment worthy of the patronage of the people of the surrounding country. At 10 a. m., the Carniveroautiterocion Troupe will give a gigantic comic procession accompanied by a select band secured for the occasion. In the afternoon the athletic games and sports will take place, consisting of foot races, horse races, sack race, tub race, jumping, etc., for which suitable prizes will be given. Another item of interest will be a boxing match with soft gloves between C. Kelley, English professional, and John T. Niff, amateur. A wrestling match will be engaged in by two experts. In the evening a mammoth torchlight procession will be given, followed by a magnificent display of fireworks. Those who wish to engage in dancing will have ample opportunity afforded them. No pains and expense have been spared to make this an unqualified success. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

An Elegant Clothing Store.

Mr. J. F. McAlister removed this week to his new premises in the Aylsworth block, and is fully settled. He has now the handsomest clothing and gent's furnishing store in the province, nothing in Toronto being equal to it. Shelves are entirely dispensed with, except in the rear where two large cabinets with glass doors extend along the sides. The front space is occupied in the centre, by five large handsome show cases in ebony an silver which contain gent's furnishings of all kinds, while on the sides are a number of tables of ash and walnut upon which are piled immense quantities of tweeds and ready-made clothing. The show cases which are from the establishment of M. Frost & Co., Belleville, and the tables which were manufactured by J. Gibbard & Son, are of beautiful design and highly finished. It is Mr. McAlister's intention in future to confine his operations to fine ordered clothing, hats and caps and gent's furnishings, and with this object in view has selected a stock which is complete in every respect. The finest goods are shown in every department. The ordered clothing department is under the management of Mr. Williamson, a cutter of wide experience and whose skill is acknowledged by all who have garments from him. His room is in the rear of the main store and the manufacturing department occupies the greater portion of the upper storey. The general appearance of the store is indicative of refined taste of the proprietor. The establishment is highly creditable to the town and therefore we wish Mr. McAlister a full measure of success in his new departure.

Lennox Reform Association.

The adjourneed meeting of the Lennox Reform Association will be held in the Opera House on Saturday, July 5th, at 2 o'clock p.m. It is to be hoped there will be a large attendance as important busisiness is be transacted.

POLICE COURT.

[Befcre Mayor Joy.]

FRIDAY, June 20th, 1884.—James Dixon was arrested at the instance of Jacob Ham of North Fredericksburgh, for furious driving and breaking his (Ham's) buggy at the Centennial on the 17th inst. Mayor Joy sat on the case this evening, and after hearing the evidence fined Dixon $5 and costs. Mr. Ham's buggy was overturned and himself thrown out by Dixon's driving, the buggy being now a complete wreck. Mr. Dixon held that he could not hold the horse and the collision was purely accidental. He has appealed the case.....John Parkins was brought before his Worship on the charge of drunkeness and paid the regular sum of $1 and costs....Lorinda Luffman was up before His Worship this morning charged with disorderly conduct and being a common prostitute. Several witnesses were heard in the case and the evidence all went to show that she was an exceedingly hard character. She had broken the furniture in her husband's house and made life miserable to him generally. His Worship on hearing the evidence fined her $40 and $11.70 costs or six months in gaol. She was imprisoned for three days when her fine was paid by her husband who had repented.

SATURDAY, June 21st.—George Williams, a navvy, was charged by Constable Holmes with being drank and disorderly. He confessed to the fault and was fined $1 and $4.50 costs or ten days in gaol. His fine was paid.....Wm. Hourie, John Mewell, Robt. Smith, James Ruston and John McDonald, five other navvies, were up on the same charge and were fined $1 and $4.50 costs each. Mr. Row, contractor, paid their fines.

WEDNESDAY, June 25th.—Alexander Fee was up this morning on the charge of indecent exposure on the street. Fined $5 and costs or twenty days in gaol. He was allowed till 2 o'clock to get the money and during the afternoon paid $3, but since then has not been seen. It is believed and hoped he has left the town....Mary Morrison of Clarksville, made her appearance before the Mayor this afternoon charged by Mrs. Lafferty with insulting and abusive language and assault. The evidence went to show that Mrs. Lafferty had sustained a choking at Mrs. Morrison's hands. The latter is very quarrelsome and troublesome to her neighbors and has been in the police court before. She was fined $5 and costs or thirty days. Plaintiff wanted defendant bound over to keep the peace, but upon the latter not respondingin this matter she was committed to gaol.

OBITUARY.

The Late John Aylsworth, Esq.

After a long and painful illness Mr. John Aylsworth passed away at the residence of his son, Mr. Jehial Aylsworth, Robinson street, Sunday morning last. He was born at the family homestead near Bath, in Ernesttown, in the year 1803. When he came of age and could manage for himself he purchased a farm near Odessa and after living there some time removed to N. Fredericksburgh, but afterwards removed back to Odessa. The greater portion of his life he spent in these townships. About twelve years ago his health began to fail him and he removed to town taking up his residence years ago his health began to fail him, and he removed to town taking up his residence with his son, with whom he has resided ever since. He was a quiet, unobtrusive man and never sought any public positions or honors. His tastes did not run in the direction of display of any kind, and therefore, notwithstanding, he was always a staunch Reformer, he took no part in the organization of the party, but merely cast his vote when the time arrived. The only field in which he took a prominent position was in the church and in its work he took a very deep interest. At an early age he connected himself with the Canada Methodist body and for upwards of forty years was a local preacher and class leader. His disposition was of the kindest and with none was it better displayed than in his treatment of little children with whom he was, especially in late years, a great favorite. He was one of a family of nine, one elder brother surviving him. He also had a family of six, four of whom are still living. The funeral took place Wednesday morning Switzerville cemetery, the remains being placed alongside of his wife. The funeral was largely attended. The pall bearers were Messrs. C. R. Miller, James Shorey, Miles Shorey, Chauncey Lapum, Peter Fegart and Geo. Cliff, all old friends of the deceased. The funeral sermon was preached by Rev. Wm. Briden, by request of Mr. Aylesworth some years ago, in the Switzerville church. It was a most appropriate discourse and did full credit to the memory of the good man over whose remains it was said. Among the relatives present from a distance were two daughters, Mrs. Carscallen and Mrs. Wright of Dresden, Ont., and Mr. and Mrs. McKim of Cleveland, Ohio.

Lennox Agricultural Society.

A meeting of the directors of the Agricultural Society was held in the council chamber on Saturday last for the purpose of revising the prize list and appointing judges. A communication was received from Mr. J. B. Aylesworth, one of the members of the Council of the Agricultural and Arts Association of Ontario, asking the Lennox Society to appoint two judges, one on Ayrshire cattle, and the other on agricultural implements, at the Dominion Exhibition. On motion Mr. W. N. Doller was elected judge of agricultural implements and Mr. Benjamin Briseo, jr., judge on Ayrshire cattle. On motion Messrs. Wm. Miller, W. N. Doller, R. H. Potter and the Secretary were appointed a committee to have a new fence built round and enlarge the track on the exhibition grounds. It was decided to grant the following special prizes:—For best display by merchants, 1st, $10; 2nd, $6; for best exhibition of hardware, $8 and $6; for best trotting stallion, $5. The meeting then adjourned. The show will be held in Napanee on the 6th and 7th of October next.

Notice.—If the person who took a parcel containing a shawl and two feather pillows done up in a shawl strap from the Reindeer, on the 18th, will kindly leave the same at the EXPRESS Office or at the residence of Mr. Charles Stevens, they will be rewarded. Reception of Bishop Cleary.

The Bishop of Kingston returned on Wednesday from Rome, for which place he started on Oct. 8. Rev. Fathers Gauthier and Twohey proceeded to Quebec and greeted His Lordship on landing from the "Parisian" and Mgr. Farrelly and Fathers McCarthy, Murray, Shanteen, McDonough, and Hogan went to meet him at Montreal. The Catholic people prepared a remarkable reception. There was a great display of banting, and when the Bishop arrived in a special Pullman car, which ran over a number of fog signals en route to the city from the lower depot, he was greeted with music from the band of B. Battery and the applause of a vast multitude. A procession was formed and proceeded to the Cathedral, where a considerable body of clergy were in attendance.

HYMENEAL.

A most auspicious event was celebrated at the residence of Mr. F. Webb last evening, being the marriage of his daughter Lizzie, to Mr. N. W. Gautt, of Kingston. The ceremony was performed at half past eight by Rev. M. L. Pearson, in the presence of a large number of friends. The bride was attended by Miss Eva Taylor, while the groom was supported by Mr. J. W. Reid. After the ceremony the guests sat down to a sumptuous repast and a most pleasant time was spent until the midnight hour, when the happy couple and friends left on the train. They will in future reside in Kingston, where the groom is very popular. The following is a list of presents:—

Silver breakfast cruet, Mr. J. W. Reid; two napkin rings, Miss E. Taylor; cruet stand, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Waddell; biscuit bowl, W. J. Livingston; chair, Mr. James Reid; easy chair, R. J. Reid; table napkins and cloth, Miss Georgie Reid; parlour lamp, Mrs. E. and Robert Gautt; china tea set, from the bridegroom's employer; parlor lamp, Miss Jane Reid; silver sugar bowl and spoon holder, A. Empey; silver cruet stand, W. Shannon and A. Spellman; glass fruit dish, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Henderson; silver cake basket, Mr. and Mrs. James Taylor; silver card receiver, J. M. Anderson; pair vases and picture, Miss Rose Beeman; toilet set, Mr. and Mrs. J. Noyes; crumb brush, Miss Rose Embury; silver sugar spoon and butter knife, Mr. Will Tobey; port folio, Mr. T. Hosey; silver card basket, Mr. J. M. Taylor; kitchen furnished by the boys of Kingston, silver spoon holder, Mrs. G. K. Steward, and numerous other elegant presents.

In Miss Webb the town loses one of its most estimable young ladies. All, however, join in tendering congratulations and a host of good wishes.

DUKE—SPRAGUE.

The Rev. Richard Duke and Miss Mary Ella Sprague were united in holy matrimony at the residence of the bride's father, N. Sprague, Esq., Demorestville, on the 26th inst. The guests were numerous, comprising several of the elite of Prince Edward. The presents were costly and beautiful. The ceremony was conducted by the Rev. M. L. Pearson. The happy couple left for an extended tour among the Islands, carrying with them the good wishes of all.

—James Brayley Hamilton, says "I read the testimonials for McGregor's Speedy Cure and found that I had not to go to New York, Philadelphia, Louisiana or Texas to find living witnesses of its value, we had plenty of persons right here to prove its merits. I got a bottle and it helped me right away. I was as bad with Biliousness, Fever and Indigestion as I think any one could be. I have taken three bottles and am nearly well and can eat any kind of food without it hurting me. I may say that I am better than I ever expected to be. Free trial bottles at T. A. Huffman's and A. COUNTY NEWS.

Newburgh.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—As a new subscriber to your paper I like it very much. I think THE EXPRESS is the best paper printed in Napanee to-day, and I know the majority of the people think the same if they acknowledge the truth. Times are good here at present as taxes are down. We have the right man in the right place as reeve, and we should keep him there. Our sidewalks are in the best repair that they have been for years.

—We are very much pleased to see Mr. Stickney around able to attend to business again as he was very low at one time.

—Our school is giving good satisfaction under the management of the present teachers.

—Mr. D. A. Burdett is putting up a nice dwelling house on Front-st. "Dan" is an enterprising citizen. I wish we had a few more like him.

—Mr. Jacob Detlor has remodeled his house and made a cosy little one out of it. It stands in front of St. Jacob's well and when you raise the lid of the well you can see the whole outside and inside of the house. Don't you believe it? If not come and see for yourself.

—A new sidewalk has been laid down on Baldwin-st. It was badly needed.

—Two weddings in Newburgh next week. Wouldn't you like to know who the happy parties are?

—The flower of Newburgh, our dress-maker, Miss Madden, has removed from the village.

—Mr. George Stickney and his mother have returned home from their visit among their relations up west. They must have enjoyed the visit judging from their looks.

—We are going to have a vote on the Scott Act in Newburgh. It can't be said that the Scott Act keeps the price of grain down, for when the Dunkin Bill was in force grain was high.

—Next Saturday is our county show and I don't want you to forget it.

—D. B. Stickney & Co. have started on another batch of reapers and mowers for another year. That speaks well for the firm in years past.

—The farmers are nearly all done threshing around this section and they say that grain yields well.

—Mr. D. K. Aylsworth has been very poorly but is recovering.

—The council meets to-night. If it was not for that we could give you a little more news.

JACK THINKER.

Cloyne.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Among the many influences brought to bear on the electoral vote in the late contest in Lennox by the Grits, says the well informed Picton Gazette, was that of colonization roads. Wonder where Lennox colonization roads are? Evidently the writer is on a par with an English journal some years ago, when it said the Ottawa river emptied into Lake Huron. The statements of Tory journals, principally imbibed from the Mail, are most ridiculous and absurd and fast bringing them into contempt with all good honest men.

PERSONAL.—Messrs. J. and D. and T. Perry drove to Tamworth on business on the 25th ult. ....The government colonization road engineer, Mr. P. H. Aylesworth, paid an official visit to this section on the 19th ult....Among the guests at Mr. Will Spencer's, head of the famed Massinoge, on the evening of the 28th inst., were Mr. D. A. Spencer and wife, Mr. Beausoileil and wife, Mr. Burrows, P.L.S. for Lennox and Addington, Napanee, Mr. L. T. Hanston of the firm of McLaren & Co., and the writer....Mr. L. Johnston of Belleville was negotiating for the purchase of Mr. Waite's farm, eastern division, on the 23rd ult. The difference between buyer and seller was so far they failed to connect. He was accompanied by his amiable wife who was amused and delighted with the scenery, invigorated by the healthy air balmy breezes and exhilarating drive over the winding rugged highways, ascents and precipitous declivities found in this region....Mr. Elias McKim of Tamworth was prospecting in flour and oxen on the 22nd inconvenience. I give one instance: Last Saturday morning by the up train from Napanee a lady with two children stopped off here with their luggage; it was raining at the time—a not very pleasant situation to be landed on a platform made from ties. Some men carried her trunks down to the hotel where she could put up until her friends came for her.

Bath.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Bath gardens producing this year second crop of beans, cucumbers and raspberries.

—Bass and pike fishing still remains good in our bay at this late season, the result no doubt of the fishing nets being withdrawn. Next year we predict a glorious sporting time for anglers.

—Dr. Kennedy's dwelling is progressing rapidly, and when completed will be an ornament to the place. Who next?

—Our hotels are working splendidly, preserving good order and making every effort to accommodate the public by adding to their improvements.

—The movement in barley has not commenced owing to the extreme lowness of price. We do hope to see a slight advance now, as the month of October has set in cool and malsters are making enquiries for the famous Bay of Quinte barley. May our farmers get a good price is the wish of the ROSICRUCIAN.

Selby.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Lots of rain and roads muddy.

—The new bell in the Roman Catholic Church, Napanee, can be distiuctly heard here.

—Mr. Alex. Rose returned last week from Manitoba, to spend the winter at home.

—Mrs. John McKim has been seriously ill for some time, but we are pleased to say she is now convalescent.

—Mrs. John Quigley went last week to visit friends in Chatham, and other parts of western Ontario.

—Mr. Charles Dean has enlarged his establishment by the addition of a new ware-room. He has Mr. Werden, a good wood-worker, engaged, and is building a lot of cutters for the winter trade.

—Mr. Wells' sale, a fortnight ago, was well attended. Chief Allen disposed of goods and chattles at a rapid rate. Mr. Wells will move to Michigan in about two weeks. His son has already been there about two months.

—There are a number of vacant houses in Selby at present, but the prospects are that every dwelling will be occupied during the winter.

—Active preparations are being made for the anniversary tea next Wednesday night, in the C. M. Church. A good programme of speeches, recitations and music will be provided and the ladies will spread an attractive table.

Odessa.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—We were pleased to see Grand Curiosity in our town again, notwithstanding the old bird is riding in on a rail. Never mind, my good fellow, we will never send you out in the same way.

—The Ernesttown Agricultural Society held their show last Saturday and although the rain did its best the show was good. Everything exhibited was of first-class order and the officers are to be congrrtulated on another success. They say that another year they will have worked the business up to a point that they can successfully compete for the honors with the county shows.

—At last, after Mr. P. P. Booth's daughter, Annie, was run over by furious driving through our streets, our citizens have formed themselves into a committee with the necessary funds to prosecute the first they can catch now at such reckless work.

—The east end of our town is being lighted by lamps being placed in front of resident's premises at their own expense. How nice it would be if our centre and west end parties would do the same. It would be so convenient to see on dark nights how to climb around the holes and over

SCOTT ACT CONVENTION.

It Decides to Submit the Act at Once.

A convention of temperance men favoring the submission of the Scott Act to the electors of the county, was held as per announcement, in the Town Hall, on Saturday last. Owing, doubtless, to the inclemency of the weather, a heavy down-pour of rain continuing nearly throughout the whole day, the attendance was small, there not being more than fifty or sixty persons present. The meeting was, however, very enthusiastic, the majority present expressing themselves as anxious for the fray. The chair was occupied by Rev. M. L. Pearson, pastor of the Eastern Methodist Church, Napanee, President of the Scott Act Association, and Dr. Meacham, of Odessa, was the secretary.

The Chairman, in his opening remarks, stated the object of the meeting, and urged prompt action in the circulation of the petitions. He thought it best not to be hasty in bringing on the election. Hastings was about to organize. The temperance people of Frontenac had commenced work, a meeting having already been held there, and another was called in the city of Kingston for some time next week; also that the people of Hastings were merely waiting for us to take the initial step. As for Prince Edward county, its petitions have been deposited with the Government, and an election ordered for October 30th.

Several others spoke, some urging on the election this year, while others, though as much in earnest as temperance men could be, thought they should wait another year before taking a vote. Their argument was that as the Dunkin Act had been a failure in this county, partially because neither Hastings nor Frontenac had a prohibitory measure, placing this county between two fires, and as the movement was started both in Frontenac and Hastings, and they would no doubt be gone on with successfully, the temperance people of Lennox & Addington should wait, but not cease working, till it was carried in either or both of those counties, and then bring the Act before the people here. They had no doubt then it would be carried by a large majority.

The Secretary stated that he had most of the petitions in, and the returns showed that the names already received numbered 1,150, with some 200 names yet to be obtained before they could be filed, but as several of the polling divisions had not yet been heard from, and there was yet two weeks to work he did not see any difficulty in obtaining the requisite number, and so bring on the election at once.

After several other opinions were expressed in favor of deferring the time of polling and otherwise, it was Moved by Mr. T. W. Casey, Napanee, seconded by Mr. Allen Caton, Newburgh, that the meeting be adjourned for two weeks, the canvassers in the meantime to go on with their work, and that the Secretary be authorized to insert the necessary notices of application to the Government for submis-and seller was so far they failed to connect. He was accompanied by his amiable wife who was amused and delighted with the scenery, invigorated by the healthy air balmy breezes and exhilarating drive over the winding rugged highways, ascents and precipitous declivities found in this region.... Mr. Elias McKim of Tamworth was prospecting in flour and oxen on the 22nd and 23rd ult.... Messrs. Chown domiciled at the hotel on the night of the 22nd ult. They were on business in connection with their firm in Kingston.... Mr. Charles Kenyon, formerly of this place but now of Belleville, is gradually sinking from his malady. No hopes are entertained of his recovery.... Miss Lucy Armstrong is engaged in millinery and dressing-making at Mr. B. Clark's.... Mr. P. Kenefec, manager for Gilmore & Co., Trenton, calls occasionally. He is at present very busy arranging for the winter's lumber campaign.... Mr. S. A. Weatherspon who succeeded the late Mr. Geo. Hartgraves as manager for Mr. William Sutherland, Belleville came up to attend to the latter's lumber interests and to haul down five thousand logs over Gilmore & Co.'s tramway from the Massinoge to Loon Lake.... Mr. F. Burrows, P. S. Inspector, was a guest at Mr. Will Spencer's, head of the Missinogue, on Sunday night, 28th ult. on his way to the northern part of the county. While there he told the writer of many of the recent events in Napanee.

Yarker.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—On Friday morning between 9 and 10 o'clock the following despatch was received here:—"Mrs. Cannon, meet me at Harrowsmith; Herbert is dead. Dr. Cannon." The sad news caused a shock to all in the village and Mr. Fred. Shibley, operator, conveyed the telegram to Mrs. Cannon which was a great shock to her, it coming so sudden and unexpected. She was soon surrounded with sympathizing friends and offers of assistance given. Teams and conveyances were procured and a number with Mrs. Cannon went to Harrowsmith to be ready to receive the corpse on the arrival of the train from Sharbot Lake. Imagine their surprise when the train arrived. Dr. Cannon was alone. The telegram was a mistake; it should have read:—"Mrs. Cannon—Meet me at Harrowsmith—Herbert is better." The blunder is to be regretted as Mrs. Cannon was at considerable expense telegraphing to friends in the west; besides, the shock to her feelings was terrible. Dr. Cannon desires to tender his thanks to the people of the village for their kindness to him and Mrs. Cannon in their supposed bereavement.

—A large number, accompanied by the band, went by the evening train to the Good Templars, picnic, Cedar Point. The rain continuing on their arrival none left the cars and those on the ground left and went on the train as far as Moscow station. The Tamworth portion went on home; the Napanee and Yarker portion remained at the station until the return of the train. The band played several selections, dancing by some was indulged in and addresses were given by Mr. W. S. Williams and Mr. A. Henry and an excellent reading styled "The Three Bachelors," by Miss Allen, daughter of Chief Allen, Napanee. A very pleasant time was spent in spite of the rain.

—Friday evening Mr. W. S. Williams, Secretary of the N. T. & Q. R.R. met the villagers of Colebrook at Mr. G. Garrison's store. The object of the meeting was to come to some amicable arrangement about the location of the station. Mr. Williams, on behalf of the Company, wanted the people of Colebrook to point out where they would like to have a station located and the Company would build them one. Mr. Samuel Bell addressed Mr. Williams for the villagers and asked the Company to bind themselves in writing to build us as good a station as there is along the line where they would point out and to build no station at Yarker or allow anyone else to build one there. Then they would be satisfied. Mr. Williams said he could do this then Mr. Samuel Bell said, "We will communicate with Mr. Rathbun and let him know our demands" and the conference ended. The Company will now build a station at Yarker.

—A meeting of the trustees of the Methodist Church was held in the church this week, Rev. Mr. Bates in the chair. Considerable business was done. One part the public is interested in is that the seats in the church are free to all. A collection will be taken up to meet expenses instead of pew rent.

—A daughter of Mr. Hugh Davey of Ernesttown was buried in the cemetery here, Rev. Mr. Bates conducting the services. There was a very large turn out of friends who accompanied the remains to their last resting place.

—Mr. Thos. Love, farmer, Ernesttown, was taken to his last home to-day. He has been a great sufferer for the last two years. His remains were taken to Carks Mills cemetery, Rev. Mr. Elliott conducting the services. Mr. Love was highly respected and a very large number attended the funeral. He leaves a wife and child to mourn his loss.

—The Railway Company have fenced in the ground they purchased and it is hoped they will soon provide shelter for persons having to take the cars at this point. Some have suffered great prosecute the first they can catch now at such reckless work.

—The east end of our town is being lighted by lamps being placed in front of resident's premises at their own expense. How nice it would be if our centre and west end parties would do the same. It would be so convenient to see on dark nights how to climb around the holes and over the rotten plank in the board walks, the same which are a good showing of our magnanimous council.

—The Tories were well pleased with the assessor's work, as evidenced by their entering four appeals only.

Personals.

—Mr. David Richardson spent Sunday in Belleville.

—Mr. Benjamin Howell of Deseronto spent Sunday in town.

—Miss Nettie Bowen left on Thursday of last week for Dresden, Ont.

—Mr. J. F. Roblin of Picton gave THE EXPRESS a call on Tuesday.

—Mr. Charles Diekens of Woodstock is visiting in Napanee and vicinity.

—A. D. Fraser, Esq., of Hawley, has returned from Kansas, evidently much improved in health.

—Mr. T. Coughlin, formerly conductor on the N., T. & Q. Railway, has accepted a similar position on the Bay of Quinte Railway.

—Mr. L. T. Lochhead left on Tuesday last for Kingston to commence his course in Arts at Queen's University. We wish him success.

—Mrs. A. P. Tregent, who has been visiting with her mother, Mrs. M. P. Roblin, for some time, left for Woodstock on Monday evening where she will reside in future.

—Miss Williams returned on Tuesday from a two months' visit to Grand Rapids, Mich. Miss Blanche Williams, who accompanied her to the West, will remain in Grand Rapids with her uncle and attend a young lady's seminary for a year.

—Dr. W. J. Webster, son of John Webster Esq., has decided to open an office at White Lake, Aurora County, Dakota. He made a tour of the district and is delighted with the climate and the country. We wish him a full measure of success.

LITERARY NOTES.

Popular Science Monthly.

The October number of the monthly now to hand would seem to completely "fill the bill," as a scientific magazine. The object of the magazine is to bring forward distinctively and prominently the higher human aspects of scientific enquiry, and every one of the fifteen articles of the present number sustains this character. The first paper, by Dr. F. J. Shepherd, on "The Significance of Human Anomalies" is an illustrated and very timely exposition of those aberrations of structure in the human system which for centuries were the puzzle of anatomists, but which are now completely cleared up by the doctrine of descent and evolution. Francis Galton's paper on the "Measurement of Character" is a skilful and most suggestive attempt to bring the higher human characteristic within the pale of quantitative science. Lord Rayleigh's survey of "The recent Progress of Physical Science," which was his presidential address before the Montreal meeting of the British Association, is given in full, as it deserves to be, though elsewhere generally it appears only in abstracts. Being of great interest in itself, and the most striking production of a memorable occasion, readers will especially value it for its completeness. A biographical sketch and a fine portrait of Lord Rayleigh are also given. "Dip" in the County," by Williams series on the "Chemistry of Common Things," "Wages, Capital and Idle Men," "The Biological Aspect of Mesmerism," "The Conditions of Happiness" conclude "Questions at Issue." "Lightning," "The Cholera Germ," "The Origin of Cultivated Plants" are all from readable and meaty papers. Prof. J. W. Gi[illegible] tributes "Further Remarks on the Greek Accentuation" and the editor keeps up his lively fight with the classicists for more room and higher consideration for science in education. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 50 cents a number, $5 a year.

If troubled with an unhealthy, slow-healing sore use McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. You will find it invaluable for healing, cleansing and completely removing your trouble. If the blood is out of order take with it a few doses of McGregor's Speedy Cure from T. A. Huffman's and A. W. Grange's drug stores and at Jas. Aylesworth's drug store, Tamworth.

seconded by Mr. Allen Caton, Newburgh, that the meeting be adjourned for two weeks, the canvassers in the meantime to go on with their work, and that the Secretary be authorized to insert the necessary notices of application to the Government for submission of the Act in this county.

Moved in amendment by Mr. S. Gibson, seconded by Mr. Marsh Bogart, that the canvassers go on with their work for the next two weeks, but that no notices be inserted in the papers till after the next meeting.

The original motion was carried, and a meeting was appointed to be held in the Town Hall, two weeks hence, Oct. 11.

A subscription list was circulated to defray current expenses and the meeting then adjourned.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

—The Ocean King has arrived at Gibralter.

—Teemer beat Ross at Point of Pines on Monday.

—Arnica & Oil Liniment is the best remedy known for stiff joints.

—A man was killed at Eddy's saw mills, Hull, on Saturday.

—A verdict of wilful murder has been returned in the Mattawa tragedy.

—Ryan, the man suspected of the Jackfish Bay tragedy, cannot be found.

—The Beamishes, father and sons, were adjudged guilty of manslaughter on Monday, in the Blythe murder case.

—The history of Downs' Elixir is identified with the history of New England for the last fifty years. It cures coughs and colds.

—Costiveness is the cause of the intolerable "bad breath" of multitudes. Dr. Henry Baxter's Mandrake Bitters remove the cause and prevent the evil, and cost only 25 cents.

—Gladstone, having been accused of supporting the Roman Catholic Church, denies the statement and demands the name of the author.

—"My daughter has taken the medicine faithfully, according to directions, and her health and spirits are now perfect. The humor is all gone from her face. I wish every anxious mother might know what a blessing Ayer's Sarsaparilla is in such cases."

—Near Pittsburgh, Pa., the other day, a tramp met a young lady on horseback, knocked her on the head and went off with the horse. It would have been more fashionable if he had knocked the horse on the head and run away with the young lady. He was evidently never a coachman.

—Sufferers from the effects of quinine, used as a remedy for chills and fever, will appreciate Ayer's Ague Cure, a powerful tonic bitter, composed wholly of vegetable substances, without a particle of any noxious drug. Its action is peculiar, prompt and powerful, breaking up the chill, curing the fever, and expelling the poison from the system, yet leaving no harmful or unpleasant effect upon the patient.

Figures Won't Lie.

The figures showing the enormous yearly sales of Kidney-Wort demonstrate its value as a medicine beyond dispute. It is a purely vegetable compound of certain roots, leaves and berries known to have special value in Kidney troubles. Combined with these are remedies acting directly on the Liver and Bowels. It is because of this combined action that Kidney-Wort has proved such an unequalled remedy in all diseases of these organs.

Torpedo Warfare.

Side by side with the construction of huge ironclads has proceeded the development of a specific bane for these prodigious war-ships—the torpedo. This implement of destruction has been greatly perfected through the well-known inventions of Whitehead, Swartzopf, Lay, and others, and through devices now under examination in this country by a board appointed for the purpose. In some of these, gun-cotton or dynamite is invoked to increase the destructiveness of the projectile. Ericsson's Destroyer, with its submarine bow gun for shooting torpedoes several hundred feet through the water, has a character all its own. In torpedoes of the Whitehead and Haight-Lay class, which are not fired from guns, but provide their own motive power, compressed air, or carbonic acid gas, or electricity as the case may be, furnishes the propulsion or controls the point of explosion. In the modern torpedo-boat, to use the words of Lieutenant-Commander Barber to the Senate Naval Committee, we find "the most wonderful combination of speed, lightness, and handiness that is now afloat, and of these boats Europe possesses hundreds." A cut on page 579, representing a fleet of Yarrow sea-going torpedo vessels passing each other at a speed of twenty knots to attack line-of-battle ships, gives an idea of the possibilities of this form of warfare.

Germany has arranged to add no fewer than one hundred and fifty torpedo vessels to her coast defenses. Russia began several years ago the construction of one hundred torpedo boats, after her experience of torpedo warfare in the Black Sea during her last conflict with Turkey. England this year adds four new torpedo boats to her fleet, and has great quantities of torpedoes ready for use. France and Italy are among the foremost in this rivalry, and the great armored ships of the latter power carry torpedo launches in the holds.

Not long ago, on the coast of Algiers, Admiral Jaures made practical tests of Torpilleurs, which he declared to be decisive of their efficiency. Two torpedo boats easily attained the great speed of eighteen knots an hour; and as these boats are constructed for use as rams, it is evident that a squadron attempting to escape at the speed of an ordinary ironclad might be overtaking and struck at a high velocity by the pursuers. If, on the other hand, the armored ships move at full speed against the torpedo boats, the time during which the latter are under the fire of the artillery is so reduced as to greatly avoid the chances of their being hit and sunk. The trials at Algiers were made in a calm sea, with bright moonlight, at a fixed hour of the night, when the officers and men of the squadron were on the lookout. The torpileur. nevertheless, was not descried until within a distance of three-fifths of a mile; and as the boat and squadron were approaching each other, about one minute after the former was seen she was within sixteen feet of the admiral's vessel. No fact could more strikingly show how like a thunder-bolt the perfect torpedo vessel of the future will hurl itself upon its gigantic adversary, trusting to its speed, and to the minuteness of the target it furnishes, for protection against his cannon.

torpedo vessel of the future will hurl itself upon its gigantic adversary, trusting to its speed, and to the minuteness of the target it furnishes, for protection against his cannon.

Experiments made at Toulon this summer in a high wind and rough sea showed that the boats invariably hit the target with their torpedoes, in spite of the disturbance produced by the rush of speed. Above all, since the torpedo system is based on the attack of a blockading squadron not by a single boat, but by a swarm of boats, the chances of destroying several costly iron clads with these comparatively cheap assailants are multiplied.

What special counter-agencies have been provided to meet this danger? First, it is believed that the electric light will prevent these enemies from stealing swiftly up without discovery. Unquestionably this light will be an aid; but the boats would come in from all directions, and the light would help the assailants as well as the assailed, especially as a flotilla might include gun-boats firing heavy projectiles at a well-illuminated target. In the second place, a modern armored squadron has its own torpedo launches and its despatch-boats for scouting. Still, these smaller craft would run some risk of being mistaken for the enemy, and of attacking each other. The main source of defence, however, is the suspension of a steel netting several yards distant from the side of the vessel. While the use of these hanging screens is undeniable, it is obvious that they must greatly reduce the speed of the vessel and interfere with its handling. Even for protecting vessels at anchor they are cumbersome to carry.

One English writer is so impressed by the ruin which a fleet of torpedo vessels could produce that he proposes changes in construction for iron-clads, sacrificing speed to fighting power, and then having a faster squadron to accompany these slower ones. His vessel would be "a short and broad and strong-bowed ship, with a tumble-home side, and of deep draught; a cellular ship both above and below a submerged armor-plated deck, placed five feet below the water line, the bow and stern only being cased in armor; a recessed side of hull, shelving downward from the water line," this recess to be protected by a stout fixed net-work extending fifteen feet downward to arrest the blow of the torpedo, but not carried around the bow, since "increased cellular protection with cork fillings" can be afforded to that part of the ship. The novel feature of design in this device, which we have described in the phraseology of its proposer, "is the projecting side at the water line, to admit of a recess below, thus affording a water cushion to minimize the effect of a torpedo explosion."

It is suggestive to find the enormous iron-clads seeking protection against their swarming little enemies—the Goliaths alive to the dangers in the slings of the Davids.

"I never saw such a woman in all my life," said Bass, "you are never satisfied with anything." "People who knew the man I took for a husband," replied Mrs. B., "think, on the contrary, that I am very easily satisfied."

Clever Jewel Robbers.

"Yes," said a jeweller, "we are constantly on the watch for thieves. Of course the imperative rule is not to let goods go out of your sight until you get the money. The trick of having goods sent to hotels and boarding houses with bills for collection is so stale that the undeviating rule is to keep your goods in sight. But a shrewd fellow once managed to get three watches from me by a clever dodge, A bright sharp-looking person came in one day and said: 'I am from Ohio, and have a commission to buy some goods for my sister who is about to be married there.' He picked out a bill of five hundred dollars' worth of various articles and said: 'Just send them around to my store on Broadway at twelve o'clock,' naming a well known carpet store in Broadway. The goods were sent by a clerk, who found the customer ap arently engaged in showing carpets and perfectly at home. He recognized the clerk and said: 'Ah! just step this way, and I will gice you a check.' He went with the clerk to a desk, drew a check, and took the goods. He appeared to be so perfectly at home that the clerk had not the slightest suspicion. Of course the check was worthless, and we found that he had secured the desk privilege at the carpet store by pretending that he was buying a large stock of carpets among other purchases in the city. He fooled five jewellers in New York, and others in other cities. One day a swarthy, foreign looking, well dressed young man called on a brother jeweller and handed him his card —'Alexander Dumas, Prussian Legation, Washington.' He said he was with his wife and child at the Ss. Nicholas Hotel, and wanted to buy some watches and jewellery, for which he would pay cash. He said his wife was too sick to leave the hotel, and wanted the goods sent with the bill. The jeweller thought he would make a sure thing of it and take the goods himself. He went to rhe St. Nicholas, was told that Mr. Dumas was stopping there and was shown to his room. Mr. Dumas was busy writing, but welcomed the jeweller cordially. 'Ah,' he said, 'I am glad you have come. I am sorry that my wife is confined to her bed, I will just step into the next room and let her make her selections.' The jeweller in a moment of weakness, consented. After waiting five minutes he began to get nervous. He did not like to disturb a sick lady, but went to the office to make some inquiries. There he found that Mr. Dumas had just stepped out, and had no wife or child in the house. He was finally caught, after he had played the same game on a number of jewellers, and lodged in Sing Sing. When he was captured he tried to conciliate the last victim by the presentation of a beautiful overcoat. But the overcoat proved to have been stolen."

gives them a wild strange look, and they giggle in the silliest way when one points to them. The old theories that they wore it as a sign of mourning, because they were angry or rejoiced, or penitent are exploded now, and it is known that it is simply a protection against the gnats and mosquitoes on land, and to keep their faces from burning when out in their canoes. Itis an excellent cosmetic for the women, keeping their complexion soft and smooth, and when the wash it off on grand occasions their faces are as creamy white as the fairest of their Japanese sisters. A group of these blackamoors made a picture as they sat inside a cabin-door weaving their pretty baskets of the fine inside bark and roots of the cedar. One younger women wore a silver pin sticking out through her under lip, another had a bone labrette, or tip ring, put through like a collar button, and the third, a wrinkled old crone, wore a great plug of wood over an inch across. These lip ornaments are worn by nearly all the women of the island tribes, and are a mark of age as certain as a family record. The big wooden plugs that they put in in their sere and yellow days push the lip out and give a hideous look to the wrinkled, blackened old crones who wear them. Nose-rings and ear rings, silver rings on their fingers and bracelets on their wrists complete their full dress array, and if they only wore something more barbaric than shawls and calico dresses, they would be far more interesting as savage studies.

Venetian Women.

The poor women who are the only examples of the sex generally visible, are on the whole inferior to the men in good looks. For one thing their dress is the most unbecoming possible. A large shawl generally woollen and very often dingy, covers them almost from head to foot, concealing every possible charm of figure under the long shapeless wrap, which is never put on coquettishly, as in France or drawn over the elbows, but allowed to hang in a straight line, the arms concealed under it—the hands only appearing now and then to huddle it about the neck. The feet are covered with white stockings (almost invariably clean) and shoes without any heels, in which it must be a work of extreme difficulty to shuffle about; and last, and worst of all, there seems to be a popular prejudice against combing the hair, which is generally abundant, and always uncovered, but which hangs about their brows in elf locks—a wild exaggeration of the fringe of modern fashion. This is all the greater misfortune that the hair itself is often beautiful, and that its wild condition does great wrong to a pretty little fresh countenance underneath, which does not possess the fine and picturesque outline which half justifies a picturesque disorder, but is of the class which requires and rewards tidiness and care. The occasional vision of a higher beauty here and there is not much more common in Venice than in other places. In Torcello, in the wild and melancholy desert which was once a lesser Venice, are one or two pale lovely young women of a higher type, and the lace girls of Burano, bending over their endless work, have a considerable amount of beauty among them.

A Belle's Toilet.

A human eye becoimng detaahed from the person of the fashion reporter of The St. Louis Post-Dispatch it secured surreptitious entry into a West End boudoir, and so disposed itself that its visual angle was substended by the bureau, the pier glass, the wardrobe, and the bed.

Then the eye waited.

Prcsently a vision of loveliness floated into the room. This was at 4:10 P. M. The vision was clothed in a calico wrapper, and its long, yellow hair lay damply matted along its back. There was not much effort to be beautiful in the vision, its prettiness being of the natural and unadorned order, suggestive of brown windsor, Turkish towels, and cold water. When the vision sat down, it was evident that no silken or other hose was between the little pink heel and the kid slipper. No cuffs were on the wrists, and, indeed, the wrapper clung damply to shoulder and arm, and suggested all manner of thoughts to the eye—of naiads and the rolling surf and Bougureau's pictures. "My gracious goodness !" exclaimed the apparition ; "its after 4 o'clock. I must hurry." It hurried thus : Taking a couple of good stiff brushes from th dressing-case, it disposed a towel about its shoulders, and brushed the yellow hair, and brushed and brushed, and brushed and brushed. The little toy-clock on the mantel ticked for the half hour, and then for three-quarters past 4, and still that tireless arm weaponed with the brush continued its task While the eye had been mesmerized by the monotonous cadence of bristle upon upon bristle, and had been soothed into drowsiness that passed into sleep, an interval of which no note could be taken, and when the eye stared vigilantly into the room again a lightning-change act had occured. Instead of the blue calico wrap, the form upon the chair was now incased in snowy dimity, with abbreviated, lace-edged skirt, the loose hair had been knotted into a figure eight, and the hands of the toy-clock pointed to ten minutes past 5. After so much exertion of course must come a rest, and the vision toyed with a manicure while the eye busied itself with a dimple on the vision's elbow and an inventory of the little toes, each armed as the Harolds say, with a little sea-shell nail. The vision finished its hands at 5:25 P. M., yawned and stretched languorously as though every detail of the toilet were being enjoyed, and then leaned sideways to an adjacent chair upon which hung pendant several pairs of stockings. A blue pair and a whitish-lace looking pair were closely inspected, the inspection consisting chiefly in patting the fabric stretched out over the instep. It took four minutes to decide this momentous question, which was finally adjudged in favor of the blue, and ten more to adjust the hosiery in situ. A half a dozen approbatory pats were bestowed upon the garments, and a little crease which insisted on appearing just over the toes was carefully smoothed out, then the vision went before the pier glass humming a strain from "The Chimes of Normandy," and taking the pose of Serpolette, passed judgement upon herself and found herself good. A pair of shoes next went on, an unsuccessful search for a shoe-buttoner ending in the use of a hair-pin, and the
